> "Mere acquisition by one corporation of the stock of a competitor, even though it result in some lessening [fol. 1886] of competition, is not forbidden; the act deals only with such acquisitions as probably will result in lessening competition to a substantial degree * * *; that is to say, to such a degree as will injuriously affect the public.'

[fol. 1887] Now, there was the genesis of our "injury to the public" theory, if it might be called that, in the defense of this case.

Your Honor, in a very enlightening discussion that we had last week, pointed out that in a number of cases economic benefit to the public may not be a defense. I realize that there are cases to that effect and that that is the law, but let us see where and in what instances that particular law applies.

We know that where there has been price-fixing, under the rule of the Socony-Vacuum case, where there has been price-fixing, then it would be folly, the price-fixing having been shown, for a defendant to step forward and say in defense, "Our price-fixing benefited the public; our price-fixing really resulted in lower prices to the public."

The court would not listen to him under the rule of the Socony-Vacuum case.

Now, take another case: Suppose we had a combination or conspiracy case where we start with that form of restraint, and there the conspiracy or combination being [fol. 1888] shown, the court would not permit the defendant later, in defense, to come in and say "Despite the combination and restraint we benefited the public in an economic way."

Now, all that is true. The Yellow Cab Company case cited by counsel the other day—no, not the Yellow Cab case—the case that your Honor cited, the Fashion Originators Guild case, was a perfect example of this where we start with a restraint and a monopoly, and that is shown, your Honor, and then the court says: Well, that being shown, you can't come in and show that you did something to economically benefit the public.

Let me call your Honor's attention to the language of Judge Hand in the lower court in the Fashion Originators case. He said: "We do not understand that a court will inquire into whether a combination benefits an industry when the means used are themselves unlawful." "Means used are themselves unlawful."

Now, your Honor will recall that in that Fashion Originators Guild case there was a boycott there, a combination of fashion designers, fashion manufacturers. They had a pretty tight combination there, a pretty tight conspiracy, and they boycotted any retailer and any manufacturer of textiles that dealt in copied patterns. Now, that was the Fashion Originators case.

In deciding that case, Mr. Justice Black said this, and I read this to show you the type of case in which you can't [fol. 1889] produce "benefits to the public" as a defense:

> "But petitioners further argue that their boycott and restraint of interstate trade is not within the ban of the policies of the Sherman and Clayton Acts because 'the practices of FOGA were reasonable and necessary to protect the manufacturer, laborer, retailer and consumer * * * of original designs and had in fact benefited all four.' "

Let me pause there to point out that that was the contention in that case, that it benefited the public. And here is what Mr. Justice Black says in sweeping that contention aside:

> "* * * As we have pointed out, however, the aim of petitioners' combination was the intentional destruction——"

The Court: What page are you reading from?

Mr. Hall: I am reading from the Supreme Court opinion in 312 U. S. 457, and I believe that it is about 465 that the passage I am reading from appears. It may be 466.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall:

> "As we have pointed out, however, the aim of petitioners' combination was the intentional destruction of one type of manufacture and sale which competed with Guild members. The purpose and object of this com- [fol. 1890] bination, its potential power, its tendency to monopoly, the coercion it could and did practice upon a rival method of competition, all brought it within the policy of the prohibition declared by the Sherman and the Clayton Acts. For this reason,——"

Because of this monopoly, combination, boycott, intentional destruction.

> "For this reason,"

says Mr. Justice Black,

> "—the principles announced in Appalachian Coals v. United States, and Sugar Institute v. United States, have no application here. Under these circumstances it was not error to refuse to hear the evidence offered, for the reasonableness of the methods pursued by the combination to accomplish its unlawful object is no more material than would be the reasonableness of the prices fixed by unlawful combination. * * *"

Now, that is a case which is clear, and let us set that to one side. Mr. Justice Black here recognizes that there may be another vital case, and I submit that is the type of case we have now before your Honor.

The Court: May I interrupt your a minute to say this? I in allowing you to go into the competitive situation by [fol. 1891] showing over the Government's objection No. 1, the sales of petroleum products by other major and minor companies in the field, in the area, rather, the sales of accessories, whether we limit it to the ones Mr. Thompson used or we take the primary ones, the tires, tubes, and batteries and other kindred matters which were the subject of all sorts of charts introduced last week, and relating to the comparative sales by other companies, and also by allowing you to show the number of outlets in the area controlled in some manner or other by other major companies, I have allowed you to lay a factual foundation from which can be determined whether, assuming that the effect of your own arrangements is to exclude others from supplying these things to Chevron stations, whether the ultimate effect is a substantial interference with the commerce or a monopoly, because ultimately the words "reasonable" and "unreasonable" and the word "substantial," like similar words we find in various statutes, are not abstract concepts. They are concrete concepts which raise a question of fact which the trier of fact must determine.

If I am permitted to go back to a decision of my own which, because it was written while I was in the appellate department of the Superior Court, has the effect of a final decision of a court of appeal, we had before us when I was in the appellate court department of the Superior Court a case of People v. Clark. It was a very important case be- [fol. 1892] cause it called, for the first time, for the interpretation of a provision in the statute relating to punishing children. We have a statute in California which was a dead letter until that case was tried and until that decision was rendered. I wrote the opinion for the appellate department of the Superior Court.

The statute says that any parent or any guardian or any teacher who shall inflict "unjustifiable" punishment upon a child shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. In that case a Glendale teacher had punished a child and she was prosecuted under the Act and found guilty, and she appealed and I wrote for the opinion the first interpretation of the Statute in California.

We were confronted with the proposition: What does "unjustifiable" mean? Should we adopt the common doctrine which says "unjustifiability" is to be determined by the parent or guardian, and so long as the punishment does not break a bone is justified? And they said: No, it could not have meant that because that would make the Statute meaningless. We held that the Statute meant something can be justified. To whom? Justified to a trier of the facts, a court or a jury.

So the same here, these words have a similar meaning. They call for facts from which the court may draw the inference as to whether or not the restraint is unreasonable, [fol. 1893], or whether or not it is substantial, and all the testimony you have introduced relates to that issue.

But the motives and inducements that may have entered into the mind of the individual dealer in weighing the benefits he could derive from one company as against those he can derive from another are not matters of consideration. These call for benefits which the dealer may have derived through dealing with one company rather than another, and are not in the nature of inducements of which I spoke earlier in the day.

Mr. Hall: Following the pattern of the International Shoe case which identifies the word "substantial," the court says, "substantial degree," and then it says: "That is to say, to such a degree as will injuriously affect the public."

Now, that was, as I have already pointed out——

The Court: That is not a question of proof. That is a conclusion to be drawn by the court on the basis of certain facts.

Mr. Hall: Well, may I submit this: If it be a question of fact, may we not, after laying the proper basis, call a witness and ask the witness what will be the result overall, not to the Standard Oil Company, but what will be the overall result as far as the public is concerned if you have your way?

Now, I do not know a better way to do that than to bring in a qualified expert and, after proper foundation laid, ask [fol. 1894] him that question.

The Court: Oh, no; because that invades the province of the court. Then you have made this, which is practically pragmatical itself, the subject of expert testimony, and the rule in the Federal Court as to expert testimony is very, very strict, and even in the branches where it is allowed, we are allowed to disregard it, and even in the most extreme cases such as, for instance, in the War Risk Insurance cases, of which we try very, very many following the last war, even doctors are not allowed to determine the ultimate fact whether total and permanent disability has resulted. They may only give us facts to say whether, in their opinion, it would harm the person if he continued to work.

Mr. Hall: But your Honor is a step ahead of me on this.

The Court: Perhaps I am.

Mr. Hall: May I fill in an intermediate step that may alter that view?

Suppose we closed our case now, and then suppose we assume, as I take it we have a right to do under this International Shoe case, that the public, if the Government had its way, in a broad way would suffer detriment. Now, I do not think we have the proof in yet to show that, and the proof that I want to show is that the kind of distribution system that they are attempting to foist upon the west coast would be more expensive to the public. And I am sure your [fol. 1895] Honor, before you come to the ultimate question, should hear proof as to the cost of what the Government is trying to put over compared with the cost of the present overall system.

The Court: I think that might be a legitimate point to argue, but I do not think that the cost to the public of a decision which would forbid these practices enters into the matter, anymore than in the price-fixing cases the fact that the prices are actually fixed at a lower level than would otherwise prevail but for the practice. That was the holding in the Food and Grocery case.

Mr. Hall: Your Honor, see what we have in this case. We have contracts that your Honor has indicated you do not believe are illegal per se, that is, standing alone and without more. If that be true, then we have to go the next step and determine whether there has been substantial lessening of competition or tendency to monopoly.

The Court: That is all.

Mr. Hall: That is true.

The Court: But the lessening of the competition is one thing and the effect of the lessening is another.

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: I am allowi g you to prove the effect on the competition, but not the benefit, the benefit that flows from it or the evil that flows from it, because the Congress has [fol. 1896] said if it substantially affect the competition in the field or unreasonably affects it, then it is forbidden. In other words, Congress has assumed by this legislation to declare that certain practices are detrimental to the public. As a matter of fact a very strong argument could be made the other way, that the fact that the United States is the only country in the world which has sought to control business in this manner—England never tried to control it, the Continent of Europe never did. We are not talking about the present time, but in the past: Germany, which had about as expansive an economy as we have, never tried it. And years ago, a famous economist who was a professor, who was president of the University of Wisconsin, Professor Van Hise, wrote a book which he called CONCENTRATION AND CONTROL. That is one of the earliest and still one of the finest texts dealing with concentration of industry, power in the hands of industry, and what he advocated as sound economy is promotion of concentration and controlling it through other methods.

Well, the Congress of the United States has not followed the economist and has adopted this system, and the object has been stated very well. In fact, in some of my opinions I cite the object of the Statute from an opinion by the late Mr. Justice McReynolds in an early case, and that is to keep free for competition, thus achieving by competitive measure [fol. 1897] a degree of social benefits. Now, Congress having done that, an inquiry of what benefit may be derived is not germane to the subject at all and it doesn't matter what the court have said as to the benefit in strictly price cases, it applies to any benefit in cases arising from other restrictive practices. And that is why I think that this inquiry as to benefits which might accrue—because, if this is followed to its logical conclusion, then you could put experts on the stand to say that if these practices are stopped, it would cost them money, either in added prices or reduction of services—that many of these would be abandoned and that the public would be harmed. But, for the reasons I have indicated, I think that inquiry is not material in this case.

Mr. Hall: I am afraid that maybe I have not made myself clear yet, and that is in drawing the distinction between these cases that bar out an inquiry into the economic injury or benefit and the case we have here. In a price-fixing case we have something; you start with something which is illegal. In a conspiracy case or in a monopoly case or in a combination case you start with something illegal, and the defendant comes forward and says: Well, I want to show economic benefit to the public; and the court says, "You can't do it." But you can't reconcile these other cases, that I hope for the opportunity to cite—you can't reconcile those cases upon any other theory than that where you do [fol. 1898] not start with something illegal. Where the whole question at issue here is whether these contracts are illegal or not, I say in determining that question you have a right to consider the public interest.

The Court: Well, the public interest only insofar as the Congress has delimited it, and that is unreasonable and unsubstantial. I think the words "injuriously affects the public" which are used in the Sloe case must be related. What is meant in that case is merely to say this: The law does not concern itself with trifling, as is said in one of the cases. Almost any action may constitute some monopoly under certain particular circumstances. In the patent case they have said that the patent itself is a monopoly. But when they say that it must injuriously affect the public it refers to the quantity of the restraint, whether it is substantial and whether it is reasonable or unreasonable, and those criteria are related to the extent of the injury and not to anything else. "Substantial" means something contradistinguished from "unsubstantial." It means something of size, as it were, relating to the entire area, and is concerned with a material instead of an inconsequential effect of certain restrictions.

And in that in that interpretation, the only matters that can be considered in determining whether the restrictions are a violation of the law is to consider the effect of th[fol. 1899] practice in shutting out the competition in the particular field to others, the extent of that boycott, unless by its nature is such a character that it of itself completely shuts out the competition, which is what the Government contends in this case.

Mr. Hall: May I invite your Honor's attention also to the Pearsall case which your Honor cited in the San Francisco Electrical Contractors case? That was a case in the Seventh Circuit and the language that is quoted from that case is on page 62 of my brief.

> "Most of the witnesses unite in saying that in the handling of this product there is advantage to manufacturer, jobber, retailer, and the public in having a particular brand handled exclusively by one jobber in a given locality wherein he handles no similar product, ..."

That is all we are trying to show and that was apparently evidence which was admitted in that case. That, by the way, was a Section 3 of the Clayton Act case. It is the closest case in point to our case at bar of any of the cases that I have been able to find. 292 Fed. 720, and it is referred to on page 60 of our printed brief.

The Court: Yes. Let us get back. I think, gentlemen, we have expressed ourselves sufficiently. Let us get back to the question that is before the witness. Do you have the [fol. 1900] pending question?

The Reporter: No, your Honor. The other reporter has the question.

The Court: Let us take a recess. We will take a recess and then bring the question in so that we can get back here.

(Short recess.)

[fol. 1901] The Court: Now we will go back to the question before the witness.

(The question and answer referred to were read.)

The Witness: Yes, I think I answered the question, your Honor.

The Court: All right. Then there is nothing before the court.

Mr. Dixon: Oh, yes, your Honor.

The Court: A motion to strike?

Mr. Dixon: Yes, I rose to object, and I will ask that the testimony be stricken. I am not sure that is in the record, but it should be.

The Court: I will deny the motion and allow the answer to stand so far as it has gone, because it gives certain facts and not conclusions. I think we now understand each other about the further testimony. I think so far as it has gone it relates merely to inducements and gives certain facts from which the court can draw certain inferences, but I think you need not go beyond that, into the realm of conjecture as to whether it is detrimental or not detrimental. I will determine whether it is or is not detrimental in the sense that is permitted by the Acts under consideration. Proceed.

Mr. Hall: Then, as I understand it, your Honor's ruling has not foreclosed an actual showing——

The Court: No, along the lines given in the answer gen[fol. 1902] erally as to benefits to the public.

Mr. Hall: May I have the sheet which I now hand to the clerk marked as Defendants' Exhibit next in order, for identification.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit WW, marked for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. How many pages are there in that "Lubriguide," Mr. Thompson?

A. 150 pages, I believe I testified.

Q. I show you a sheet which has now been marked Defendants' Exhibit WW, for identification, and ask you if that is one of the pages of the "Lubriguide," which is a fair sample with respect to Packard and Plymouth automobiles of the instructions with respect to lubrication which the guide contains for dealers.

A. That is right. This is one of the charts that comprises the principal part of the book.

Q. Is it true that this chart, Exhibit WW, for identification, and other charts contained in the book are adapted peculiarly for the use of Standard Oil Company lubricants in automotive equipment?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Hall: I offer the document which has been marked Defendants' Exhibit WW, for identification, in evidence.

Mr. Dixon: I object to it, your Honor, on the ground [fol. 1903] it is irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: For the purposes indicated, it may be received. Overruled.

The Clerk: Exhibit WW, in evidence.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you another volume, Mr. Thompson, marked "Service Guide Atlas," and ask you if that is a volume which is placed by the company with its independent dealers.

A. That is correct; all dealers handling tires, tubes and batteries.

Q. Will you describe what the contents, in general, of that volume are?

A. Well, this is a book of 217 pages that is keyed by car make and model with the various accessory items; batteries, cables, fan belts, filters, and so on; and in the next section it provides procedures as to how to remove tires and replace them; how to install fan belts; how to patch tires; and the last section is the story of the qualities of Atlas merchandise.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the two sheets that I now hand the clerk be marked as Defendants' Exhibit next in order, for identification.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit XX, for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you the sheets which have been marked Defendants' Exhibit XX, for identification, and ask you if [fol. 1904] those are pages taken from the book which you have just described, which are a fair sample of certain of the operations referred to in the book, for the purpose of enabling dealers to properly service cars with the equipment that the book refers to.

A. That is correct. This particular section deals with fan belts, and radiator hose, giving the specification and installation procedures.

Mr. Hall: I offer the document which has been marked Defendants' Exhibit XX, for identification, in evidence.

Mr. Dixon: Objected to on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit XX in evidence.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you another volume, Mr. Thompson, marked Chevron Merchandiser, and ask you if that is a book which is placed by the company with its independent dealers.

A. This book is provided to all type 1 Chevron dealers. It comprises 12 sections of 200 pages. It so happens that this book is in the process of development, and a few of the sections are not yet supplied to the dealers, but when complete it will have sections covering attracting customers, keeping customers, selling lubrication, selling tires, selling batteries,—— [fol. 1905] The Court: You are not in competition with Dale Carnegie, are you?

The Witness: ——selling accessories, Standard Oil products, giving the various qualities and grades of products for the information of the dealer, business forms, advertising, credit cards, and credit travel service and maps, and general management.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the sheets which I now present to the clerk be marked as Defendants' Exhibit, for identification, next in order.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit YY, for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Mr. Thompson, I show you the documents which have been marked Defendants' Exhibit YY, for identification, and ask you if that is the first section in the book which you have just described.

A. That is correct. It is the section entitled "Attracting Customers."

Mr. Hall: I offer the document which has been marked Defendants' Exhibit YY, for identification, in evidence.

Mr. Dixon: Objected to on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

The Clerk: Exhibit YY in evidence.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Does the company publish and issue to its independent dealers a circular at intervals known as the "Roundtable"?

[fol. 1906] A. It does.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the sheets which I now present to the clerk be marked as the Defendants' Exhibit next in order, for identification only.

The Clerk: Defendants' ZZ, for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you the sheets, Mr. Thompson, which have just been marked Defendants' Exhibit ZZ, for identification, and ask you if that exhibit comprises four issues of this "Roundtable"?

A. That's right; typical issues.

Q. How often is that "Roundtable" published and issued to the dealers?

A. About twice a week; single sheets, generally.

Mr. Hall: I offer in evidence the sheets which have been marked Defendants' Exhibit ZZ, for identification.

Mr. Dixon: Objected to on the ground they are irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

The Clerk: Exhibit ZZ in evidence.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Does the company ever experience difficulty in getting its dealers to exhibit its merchandise, or do some of Standard dealers put Standard merchandise under the shelf or in the woodshed?

A. That is one of our greatest problems, the so-called [fol. 1907] woodshed problem. Tires, by the nature of the stock, must be kept away—as nearly as possible away from direct sunlight and heat, and are generally stored in racks as far removed from exposure to the sunlight as possible. And batteries likewise must be maintained on charge, and they, too, at any rate when exposed to the elements,—well, our problem is to get samples of that merchandise out where by power of suggestion the dealer can move it to the customers that come into his station. That is one of our biggest problems.

Q. What does Standard Oil Company of California spend in a year in training its independent dealers?

Mr. Dixon: I object to that question, your Honor, as immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

The Witness: The material, such as has just gone in evidence, would cost approximately a quarter of a million dollars per year, and the salary and traveling expense of merchandisers, who train dealers directly and who make use of this material in the field, probably another half a million dollars, making a total of three-quarters of a million.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Does Standard Oil Company supply to its independent dealers a booklet containing a bookkeeping system for the purpose of keeping retail accounts?

[fol. 1908] A. That is correct.

Q. I will show you a booklet entitled, "Bookkeeping System, Retail Accounts, Standard Oil Company of California," and ask you if that is the book.

A. That is the book, yes, sir.

Q. Will you describe for the record the contents of that book and the purpose of the various sections?

A. Well, in addition to this book, there is a daily report that the dealer makes up for his own information, from which he enters to this monthly listing sheet. The book complete has 105 pages in it, and there is a monthly listing of sales of various commodities, and another section for bringing forward on a yearly listing sheet, a page for cost of sales inventory, another section to calculate profit and loss, another section for balance sheet, net worth, depreciation and capital account, and a pay roll record.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the sheet which I now hand to the clerk be marked, for identification, as Defendants' Exhibit next in order.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit AAA, marked for identification.

Mr. Hall:

Q. Mr. Thompson, is any of the contents of the book you have just described prepared for the purpose of transmission to the company itself, or is it solely for the dealer's own convenience in preparing his tax returns and for other [fol. 1909] purposes?

A. It is not made for any purpose of submission to the company. It is only for the dealer's own record. We find that the dealers generally have to have some form to keep their tax records, and that type of thing; and we have tried to provide a simple system which they can operate themselves.

Q. I show you a sheet which has now been marked as Defendants' Exhibit AAA, for identification, and ask you if that is the daily report sheet which is provided to the dealers for their convenience, as indicated in a previous answer to one of my questions?

A. That is the sheet. They keep this for their own record and for the purpose of posting in the ledger.

Mr. Hall: I offer in evidence the sheet which has been marked Defendants' Exhibit AAA, for identification.

Mr. Dixon: Objected to on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

The Clerk: Exhibit AAA in evidence.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Does Standard Oil Company provide sales and advertising aids to its dealers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you give me some examples of that?

A. Well, we provide them with direct mail follow-up [fol. 1910] material on lubrication work, and public orders, and various forms that are utilized in the lubrication of automobiles. We also make available to them at a low cost other forms of direct mail material for publicizing their stations in their neighborhoods; also stationery forms of various kinds, billheads, envelopes, calling cards, and we provide mats and cuts for use in newspapers and handbills which the dealer may have printed up, publicizing his outlet, and typical layouts that he can follow in making up his own advertisements.

Q. Did you mention travel maps?

A. No, that is one very important phase of the sales promotional activity. We have a very complete map service, which the dealers, which is available to the dealer for distribution to his customers, and also a routing service which plans vacation trips on request of the dealer.

Q. You mean a customer of the dealer will ask to have the dealer advise him as to routes to follow and places to go on vacation?

A. That is right. And the Travel Bureau will compile a map and routing service, and either mail it directly to the customer, to the dealer's customer, or to the dealer for personal delivery to the customer.

Q. What did Standard Oil Company spend last year for general advertising of its products handled through dealer stations?

[fol. 1911] The Court: In this area?

Mr. Hall: No, all together, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: I don't think the company goes outside of the seven western states.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Dixon: I object to the question, your Honor, on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

The Witness: Our expenditures in 1947 were in excess of three and a half million dollars for general advertising, such as newspapers, billboards, and radio. That is in addition to their advertising that has been described here as individual dealer advertising.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Now, will you describe briefly, and in a general way, the facilities which are provided for caring for the motoring public at dealer stations handling Standard Oil products?

Mr. Dixon: If the court please, I object to that on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Yes, I think that is immaterial and that is foreclosed. I think so far as showing the service that he gives to the customers that we have had enough testimony, and I do not believe I will allow you to go into that field. [fol. 1912] Mr. Hall: May I state my purpose, your Honor?

The Court All right.

Mr. Hall: This was for the purpose of showing—we have shown now what Standard Oil Company does in general for dealers, and we would like to show what that results in, that enables the dealer to do for the motoring public.

The Court: I will sustain the objection.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. You have mentioned, and I think Mr. McClanahan mentioned, Mr. Thompson, that Standard Oil Company will not sell its gasoline to what are called split pump accounts. Do you recall that testimony?

A. That is correct.

Q. Will you tell the reasons why Standard Oil does not and has not, as a matter of practice, sold gasoline to split pump accounts?

A. The primary reason is one of prevention of substitution.

Q. What has been your experience with respect to substitution?

A. Well, while the split pump policy was in force a few years ago, it was necessary to withdraw it from a great many accounts as a result of their substituting competitive products for our products, and in many instances making such sales on the company's credit cards.

Q. You mean something other than the Standard Oil [fol. 1913] Company products would be charged on the credit card?

A. That is correct.

Q. The company has a system of credit cards, does it not, which it issues to customers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on presentation of the card, the customer may obtain petroleum products and tires, tubes and batteries at any Chevron station?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, tell us just what it is that, in your experience, you have found that a dealer would do in the way of substituting one gasoline for another at a service station, how he would accomplish it.

A. Well, the pumps generally would be on a single pump block, and a customer attracted to the station—if our colors and signs were displayed, a customer desiring our products would be attracted to the station, and in pulling up to the pump block would naturally expect to receive the product that was generally identified in that unit, and it was very easy for the dealer to take the hose from some other pump, and without being observed by the motorist put the gasoline in the tank.

Q. Was there a practice in that connection that is known in the parlance of the trade as "long-hosing"?

A. Long-hosing is the term that was always applied to that.

[fol. 1914] Q. How did it get that term?

A. Well, they usually had a pretty long hose on the gasoline they probably chose to push, and they could reach almost any pump block area with a hose from this pump.

Q. Now, in your experience, has it appeared that there is danger of substitution in the case of lubricating oil at stations?

A. That is quite right. In fact, that was the birth, I think, of canned oil as a prevention of the substitution which occurred quite generally. It was difficult to tell after the oil was in the tank without chemical analysis as to just what was in there. It all looks like lubricating oil.

Q. Now, while we are talking about this policy of the company not to sell to split pumps, does the painting of the station in one color scheme have any relation to that policy?

Mr. Dixon: If the court please, I think that this line of testimony is also clearly immaterial and is objectionable.

The Court: Yes, I think I will sustain the objection. I think you are going too far afield now. The objection is sustained.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Would a split pump system of retail distribution for service stations, if adopted generally, be a more expensive distribution system than the system of distribution involved [fol. 1915] in a system where a single station is supplied by a single supplier?

Mr. Dixon: I object to that on the same grounds.

The Court: Yes, that calls for a conclusion of the witness. I will sustain the objection.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Reference has been made in the testimony, Mr. Thompson, to a Union Oil product known as TX-5, a lubricating oil. Will you tell us, was that a heavy duty oil?

A. It was an oil especially manufactured for heavy duty trucks, over-the-road haulers.

Q. When that oil appeared on the market, what did Standard do for the purpose of meeting that competition?

A. Well, that oil was put out by the Union Oil Company, and was very aggressively sold and promoted to the trucking industry; and it was something new at that time in the type of oil, and there was considerable demand for it at truck stations along the highways, and at our own truck stations, of which we have forty-four. They had some demand for that product due to the direct selling efforts of the Union Oil Company with the truckers themselves, and there was some fuel business in jeopardy, so several of our truck stations handled that oil to supply that demand.

Q. What did Standard do to meet the competition, if anything?

[fol. 1916] A. Well, we were at about that time launching upon a new product of our own, which was, in every respect, at least comparable in quality and price to Union's new product, and when that product was available a very strenuous effort was made on the part of our salesmen calling on trucking accounts to win them back to our brand, and in order to accomplish that we determined from our truck stations the names of the truckers who were currently buying the product, and put forth every possible effort to sell those truckers our own new oil.

Q. In other words, you went to the truckers direct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, in your experience, what percentage of service station customers buy tires where they buy gasoline?

A. It is my belief that less than one-fourth of the motorists buy their tires in the stations where they buy their gasoline.

Q. Well, you express that opinion generally, and not with particular reference to Standard Oil stations?

A. That is right. I think that is the general situation throughout all gasoline outlets.

Q. At the typical Chevron station, how many grades of lubricating oil does the dealer handle?

A. Well, he handles at least three grades of each of the three brands we sell.

[fol. 1917] Q. That would be nine grades all together?

A. As a minimum.

Q. If handled in bulk, that would be necessarily stored in tanks or drums?

A. In what is generally termed as highboys.

Q. What does a highboy hold, in volume?

A. There are two sizes; one 30-gallon and one 60-gallon.

Q. Does Standard experience any difficulty with its dealers in prevailing upon the dealer to observe the distinctive Chevron station color scheme——

Mr. Dixon: I object to that. Pardon me.

The Court: Let him finish his question.

Mr. Dixon: Yes.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. —by installing signs that do not conform to the color scheme?

Mr. Dixon: Object to the question, now, on the ground it is immaterial and irrelevant.

The Court: I will sustain the objection. I think we have already in evidence Exhibits relating to this color scheme used, and I think that is sufficient. I will sustain the objection.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. As a matter of experience and practice, has the color scheme of the Chevron stations been found to be an important factor in the marketing of its products?

[fol. 1918] Mr. Dixon: Objection to that, your Honor.

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the two photographs which I hand to the clerk be marked as one exhibit as Defendants' Exhibit next in order, for identification.

The Clerk: Defendants' BBB, marked for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Now, I show you the photographs, Mr. Thompson, which have been marked, for identification, as Exhibit BBB, and call your attention to the top photograph and ask you if the building depicted in the top photograph is the same building as depicted in the lower photograph.

A. That is correct. The change in appearance was accomplished through the addition of a canopy. There is also a different name appearing here for the reason that the old sign had never been changed. It is the same account and the same garage.

Q. So that the second photograph, that is the photograph bearing the name "Larry Hewer" shows the station after Standard had done certain work upon the station for the purpose of converting it to a Chevron station?

A. That is correct.

Q. In other words, these pictures are a before and after comparison; is that correct?

A. That is right.

The Court: Not a before and after taking. Let me take [fol. 1919] a look at the "new look."

Mr. Hall: I beg your pardon. I didn't hear your Honor.

The Witness: His Honor wants to look at the "new look."

Mr. Hall: I offer in evidence the photographs which have been marked for identification.

Mr. Dixon: Those are very nice pictures, your Honor, but I object to them on the ground they are irrelevant and immaterial. On examining the pictures, your Honor will notice that both of them, although Mr. Hall said it was before and after, show that, as appears from the signs, they were Chevron stations at both times.

Mr. Hall: Oh, no, they do not.

Mr. Dixon: One says, "Standard Dealer."

Mr. Hall: It says, "Standard Dealer," but that is not a Chevron station.

The Court: I think it bears upon the testimony.

The Clerk: Admitted, your Honor?

The Court: It may be received.

The Clerk: Exhibit BBB in evidence.

[fol. 1920] By Mr. Hall:

Q. Those pictures that have been marked that are now in evidence as BBB, are they typical of what occurs between the time the Standard takes over a station and the time that Standard puts a dealer in that station?

A. I do not believe I quite understand your question, Mr. Hall.

Q. Well, I will reframe the question. Do these photographs——

The Court: Do they depict the change that takes place when you walk in?

The Witness: It so happens that this station here was served by the company in the before and the after picture. It was known as a Standard dealer previously, before the conversion to the Chevron arrangement in late '45 and early '46. At the time we made the conversion we established the new color scheme, the new sign arrangement, endeavored to modernize and clean up the station, remove extraneous coca cola signs and one thing and another, trying to make that look like an inviting premise; and that is typical of the conversions that took place at that time.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Is it a fact that Standard distributes to dealer stations many different brands of accessories—and I am not talking now about tires, tubes or batteries—many different brands of accessories that are not Atlas products?

[fol. 1921] A. That is true. Some of them which even compete with Atlas products, such as Mac's-it auto polish, for example.

Q. In your experience from your observation what are the reasons usually given to a salesman by a dealer when the dealer does not want to buy a given product offered by the salesman to the service station?

Mr. Dixon: Object to that question.

The Court: Yes; objection will be sustained.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. When you were previously called as a witness by the Government you were asked to give from memory the proportion of the various brands of lubricating motor oils that are sold at Standard dealer stations, and I am referring to RPM and Standard Penn and Zerolene.

A. That is correct.

Q. And I think, in justice to you, Mr. Thompson, you said at that time that it was pretty much a guess, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Since then have you ascertained the exact percentages of those products which were sold through dealer stations during the year 1947?

A. I have.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the sheet I now hand the clerk be [fol. 1922] marked as defendants' exhibit for identification next in order.

The Clerk: Defendants' CCC for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you a sheet which has been marked Defendants' CCC for identification and ask you if that sheet shows now, and correctly, the proportions of RPM, Zerolene, and Standard Penn sold through Standard's dealer stations during the year 1947?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Hall: I offer into evidence the sheet which has been marked CCC for identification.

The Court: It may be received.

The Clerk: CCC in evidence.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. When Standard leases from a third-party lessor any station site which is subsequently occupied by a dealer is it a common practice to lease it from the owner of the property upon a rental computed at so much a gallon upon a total gallonage passing through the station or sold through the station?

A. That is correct. However, two-thirds of the leases where the company has the head lease are based on cents per gallon rental.

The Court: You pay that to the owner?

The Witness: To the owner, the owner of the property on a third-party lease.

[fol. 1923] Mr. Dixon: I am sorry. May I have the last question read, your Honor, and the answer, please?

The Court: That is that three-cornered deal.

Mr. Dixon: Yes.

Mr. Hall: It is a three-party deal, your Honor.

The Court: What is that?

Mr. Hall: It is where Standard owns property and leases it from a third party.

The Court: I am glad you bring that out, because I was going to ask that question. I had it in my notes. It was not quite clear from this morning how the arrangement works. All right; read the question and answer.

(Question and answer read by the reporter.)

The Court: And those, of course, differ with your locations, the percentages differ?

The Witness: The amount. It is usually on a cent a gallon or three-quarters or a cent or a cent and a half a gallon. It varies as to the value of the property. However, there is some uniformity for the reason that the larger production stations, on a cents per gallon basis, would carry a higher rent.

The Court: Would carry a higher rent?

The Witness: That is right.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. What can you tell us, Mr. Thompson,——

The Court: Just one minute, will you? It is so long [fol. 1924] since you have testified as to this matter covered in this Exhibit CCC that I want a little more details. What does this Exhibit CCC cover?

The Witness: It covers all of the lubricating oils sold through Chevron dealer outlets during the year 1947; and it is the ratio, the percentage of each of the three brands to the total sold. The other day——

The Court: That includes the entire group?

The Witness: The entire three oils which we sell through dealer channels. The other day I was asked to get that.

The Court: Tell me again—I am not very good at figures—but tell me again what this percentage is. Is it of the total oils?

The Witness: Of all of the lubricating oils we sell through dealer channels. In 1947, 69.2 per cent of it was our brand RPM; 15 per cent was our brand Zerolene; and 15.8 per cent was our brand Standard Penn.

The Court: So this 100 is merely a total of which this is a split of your own products?

The Witness: That is right. I missed the guess the other day.

The Court: All right, that is all right.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Mr. Thompson, can you tell us about the dealers' margin of profit on lubricating oil that is Standard's lubricating oil as compared with the lubricating oil of [fol. 1925] Pennzoil, Quaker State, and Valvoline?

Mr. Dixon: I object to that question.

The Court: Yes; the objection is sustained. We are not here for comparative profits. I am visiting with your witness. I told him you were giving him a work out here.

Mr. Hall: The work out is done as far as I am concerned, your Honor. You may take the witness.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Dixon: Thank you, Mr. Hall.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. Mr. Thompson, who is the largest marketer of petroleum products, that is, of gasoline, oils, lubricants at retail outlets in the western area, do you know?

A. Through dealer outlets?

Q. Through retail outlets in the western area.

Mr. Hall: You are asking the entire western area as a unit, counsel?

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

A. I really haven't that figure, Mr. Dixon. I could tell you, I believe, on dealer outlets.

Q. Have you ever made it your business to determine what the position of Standard was in that market?

A. Of course, my responsibility is limited to dealer-operated stations and I have the figures at hand upon the [fol. 1926] dealer end of the business. But, to combine the two and compare with competitors whose sales, of course, are not available through any source to retail outlets, I could not give you that figure.

Mr. Hall: Would you permit a question, Mr. Dixon?

Mr. Dixon: Certainly.

Mr. Hall: Are you referring just to dealer outlets or are you including Standard Stations?

Mr. Dixon: I am first including Standard Stations along with dealer outlets. I assumed that you might be familiar with that.

Q. Are you familiar with it, Mr. Thompson?

A. Only in a general way on the company's business, but I am not at all familiar with the volume that moves through retail channels of competitive products, because there is no source for that information.

Q. Did you have occasion at any time to look at any of these charts that your very able counsel for Standard Oil Company submitted in evidence in reference to Standard's position?

A. That position, I think, is based upon the total available, rather than upon the retail available.

Q. Directing your attention to the two charts VV and YY, I believe, do you know what the position of Standard was in the retail outlet market in those two areas shown in [fol. 1927] those two charts?

Mr. Hall: Just a minute. You want, of course, to show the charts to him, don't you?

Mr. Dixon: I thought he would be familiar with them. Of course, if he has not seen them before, we would like him to see them.

My error. It is Exhibits V and Y, not VV and YY.

A. That is the Bay area, San Francisco Bay area, and Los Angeles Basin survey. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever seen those before?

A. I have seen these charts; yes, sir.

Q. Will you state what the position of Standard is in that market with reference to the total sales at retail outlets in those two areas?

A. In the Los Angeles Basin, based upon the estimates of sales of the various competitors at bona fide stations, we have 2.43 per cent of the total.

Q. Talking about the total sales of retail outlets of the Standard Oil Company to its stations and dealer stations.

A. You mean now to include Standard Stations with that? I didn't understand your question.

Q. Yes.

A. We have, between the two—I will have to make a computation here—11.14 per cent.

[fol. 1928] Q. Was there any company that you see represented in those charts that sells a greater percentage than that in those two areas, the total amount sold at retail outlets?

A. General Petroleum has 11.06 which is very close. Their sales, I believe, are primarily through dealer outlets, which compares with our 2.43.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to have any survey made of sales made of the company through its company-operated and retail dealer outlets in the western area as to the relative percentage of its sales through said outlets in the western area?

A. I have not had such survey made. It is my impression that the figure Mr. McClanahan gave you the other day is somewhere between 12 and 14 per cent, would probably be my best estimate.

Q. And that that represents the largest percentage of the total sales made by any one company through retail outlets in the area, does it not?

A. I couldn't tell you that because we have no way of knowing what percentage of competitors' gallonage moves through retail outlets. We have no source for that information.

Q. So the only estimates you have ever made of the competitors' gallonage anywhere in the western area is that indicated by those two exhibits, V and Y, is that correct?

A. This is the only study that I know of that has been [fol. 1929] made which comprises the number of units and gallonage estimate, because of the size of these two markets.

Q. Do you know what the percentage is of the total sales through retail outlets at Standard with reference to any of the other companies selling through retail outlets in the western area?

A. You are again talking about retail business?

Q. That is right.

A. I don't know what our competitors sell through retail outlets. There is no source for that information, Mr. Dixon.

Q. There are no figures available anywhere so far as you know to determine it?

A. There is no figure. The only figure that we have to work on is the figure, the taxable gasoline figure, which includes sales to agricultural, industrial, and we have no way for breaking that out except for our own company.

Q. All right. Now, Mr. Thompson, from the survey which you had made of competitor outlets in the western area, that is, the retail outlets, what company, if any, has a larger total amount of such retail dealer outlets in the western area than Standard?

A. I did not say we ever made a survey of the western area. These are the only two surveys I am aware of.

Q. I am talking now about a survey of the number of [fol. 1930] outlets, the dealer outlets in the western area.

A. The total number of outlets, you have reference to the listing of outlets, existing outlets as shown by that evidence earlier in the day?

Q. That is right.

A. Is that what you have reference to? Now, what was your question, may I ask? I was not quite clear on it.

Q. Well, very briefly, does any company selling gasoline and petroleum products through retail dealer outlets in the western area have any more outlets than Standard has, according to your survey?

A. I had never compiled it on that basis. It could probably be determined from the records that are available there, but I don't know that, Mr. Dixon.

Q. What was the purpose of determining or getting that information, Mr. Thompson?

A. That is a report that is regularly used in our branches for keeping track of the movement of competitive business, and made from estimates that our salesman and branch managers make in the field; and it was merely gathered together in one compilation as to numbers of accounts only. I do not believe our detail showed the volume of business involved.

Q. I am talking now only about the number of outlets, Mr. Thompson. From that survey was it not indicated what [fol. 1931] companies that you called or described as being in competition with Standard were operating such dealer outlets, or whose products were being sold at such dealer outlets?

A. I can't recollect that that form had the listing separate by companies. It may have. If I might look at the exhibit, I could tell that, because that is the only thing we have.

Q. Your records would clearly show that, wouldn't they?

A. Not any records that I have.

Q. I am talking now about the records that are available to you as a result of this survey.

A. There is no record available as a result of that survey except what is in evidence, Mr. Dixon, and I do not believe that includes the number of stations separated by companies. I would have to look at the exhibit to be sure, but I don't believe it does. I think it was a total by our districts, and that is the only result that the survey developed.

Q. In other words, do your district managers who secure that information for you just fail to list the names of the companies selling petroleum products in competition with your company in their district?

A. Our request did not ask for that information. They probably could have made it available had we asked for it.

[fol. 1932] Q. It is the fact, isn't it, that they probably did have that information in the records?

A. That is, sir.

Q. But you did not ask for it?

A. It may be entirely possible, but we did not ask for it.

Q. Could you get it?

Mr. Hall: Mr. Dixon, you know as well as I do that that information is here available to you in the wooden box on the table over here.

Mr. Dixon: That is why I am asking this witness. It does not appear from there that the information that I am asking him was contained in those records.

A. Well, the information that I understood you were asking about had to do with the number of outlets operated by the various companies which was to have resulted from a survey that we made; and the only survey we made did not disclose that information. The basic data, as Mr. Hall says, is in that box. It may be or it may not be possible of assembly. Certainly it would not be possible to assemble it as of a year ago because I stated this morning in my testimony that those records are currently. Deletions are made and additions are made out of a current record that has been going on for years.

Q. So I take it from your testimony that you do not [fol. 1933] know, then, whether there is any company in the business of selling gasoline to petroleum outlets in the western area that has more retail outlets at which their products are sold than the Standard Oil Company?

A. Well, I could not say for a certainty, Mr. Dixon.

Mr. Hall: Well, again, Mr. Dixon, are you taking the entire area?

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

Mr. Hall: Or part of the area?

Mr. Dixon: The entire area.

A. I could tell you about these two areas that we made it a point to investigate specifically on the point that you are making.

Q. Yes; I understand that. But I am asking now about the area, Mr. Thompson, is all.

A. Yes; but other than that I haven't any knowledge of that figure.

Q. And, as general manager of dealer sales you have never made it your business to determine the relative position of Standard in the retail outlets—well, withdraw that. As general manager of Standard sales for the Standard Oil Company in the western area, you have never made it your business to determine what the relative position of Standard Oil Company of California was with reference to its relative position in the total of dealer outlets in the [fol. 1934] western area, the total number of dealer outlets in the western area?

Mr. Hall: Now, just before you answer that, may I ask counsel whether you are including in that question Standard Stations and Chevron stations?

Mr. Dixon: Yes; I am including Standard Stations and Chevron stations, both.

The Court: I do not know the materiality of it.

Mr. Dixon: I will limit it, then, your Honor.

The Court: He says he does not have it.

Mr. Dixon: I will limit it to dealer stations, then.

A. Well, as to numbers, Mr. Dixon, that has never particularly been of concern on a basis of the seven western state study, and I actually have never developed it on that basis. From the standpoint of volume, yes; I have already made an estimate as to where they stood there, and in the San Francisco and Los Angeles Basin, where we do have facts that were developed, those are self-evident.

Q. That is why I asked the question. I understood that you combined the Standard Stations with your dealer stations in making both of those surveys.

A. In these two here we separated them. You asked me to combine them.

Q. Now, Mr. Thompson, I notice in the Exhibit BBB that you labeled that "before and after," as I recall it, those two pictures. Was there any difference in the agreements [fol. 1935] that were in use by the operator of the station before and after, as you described it, in that exhibit?

A. I would say generally not, except that in that particular exhibit—I am guessing now from the appearance of the unit—I would say that we probably installed a canopy there to modernize that station, and there might have been some change in those agreements. But, as a general thing, that conversion from the Standard dealer to the Chevron dealer was made without any change in agreements. It was merely a conversion of appearance.

[fol. 1936] Q. In other words, there wasn't any difference between the agreements governing the relationship between the Standard dealer and Standard Oil Company or Standard Stations, Inc., and a so-called Chevron dealer and Standard Oil Company, was there?

A. Not as a general thing. I said in this particular case here there may have been because the pictures indicate the addition of some modern equipment, which may have occasioned some change in agreement.

Q. By the way, do you know what the profit was, that is, the net profit of the Standard Oil Company on the sales of all of its products to dealer outlets in 1946?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you make it your business to find out whether that section or division of the Standard Oil Company is operating at a profit?

A. No, we don't work our arrangements on that basis. I haven't those figures, the profit figures, available to me, Mr. Dixon.

Q. So you are not in a position to state to the court whether the division of the Standard Oil Company under your supervision made a profit or suffered a loss as a result of its operations in selling and distributing its petroleum products, and tires, tubes and automotive accessories to dealer outlets in the year 1946?

[fol. 1937] The Court: Don't answer that question. I will not allow you to answer the question. I am not interested in profits. If you are going into profits, we will be going into a field that may involve many matters, and that isn't material.

Mr. Dixon: The only reason I asked, your Honor, and I withdraw the question, is because of certain questions which were asked by counsel in relation to advertising expenditures, and so forth.

The Court: That is not the point. They were not trying to show whether it was expensive or not, but were just trying to show the method of merchandising, which you brought in yourself by showing inducements, and, once more, the fact which you stressed so much, that they had forgiven some moneys which were advanced. So that I allowed them to show the inducements, or, to use the pet phrase of luncheon clubs, that they were giving "service," a lot of service. That is all there is to it. We are not going into any question of profits. The Standard Oil Company is not in business for its health. No company of that size is; at least, I do not assume that any is. They would not stay in business very long if they didn't make a profit, and the question of a profit is not condemned by any law I know of. Our economy is based on a profit system, and I assume they made a profit. Whether the particular department did [fol. 1938] or did not make a profit is not material. Undoubtedly, it is possible that one division may not make a profit. I know in one instance in a case before me it was shown that they suffered a loss in certain of their activities, but the reason was that the particular establishment they had would be profitable more or less to the entire system, although it wasn't profitable as to that particular division. But we are not interested in that.

Mr. Dixon: I agree, your Honor.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Dixon: I will proceed along other lines.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. With reference to these two-thirds of the leases that you stated were within the three-party classification deals that you described, which contained a gallonage rental based upon the number of gallons of gasoline sold, those leases also contained minimum rental provisions, Mr. Thompson, did they not?

A. In some instances they do. However, where the minimum is established, it represents generally a higher cost rental to the company; and, in other words, the more we sell, the more rental we pay, and then after sales fall off, we still have to pay a relatively high rental, so we try, if we can, to negotiate leases without the minimum. We do try, however, to get maximums in there which, by the same [fol. 1939] token, the landlord tries to exclude. There are many of them that are flat gallonage cents per gallon rent.

Q. Now, coming down to the change-over to the Chevron station type of arrangement that you have testified to, I believe you testified that that took effect in 1945, was it,—or, 1944?

A. We started it on a trial market basis in '45, and late that year, before we were able to get materials, and from that time until mid '46 we had practically completed the conversion, yes.

Q. What was the general purpose of that change-over from a Standard station, so-called, to a Chevron station?

A. Well, to begin with, these Standard dealers, we called them, were very closely identified with Standard stations, insofar as their color scheme was concerned, and even their sign identification was similar. The competitors had been for many years advertising and promoting independent dealer operation, telling why the public should buy from the independents, the small businessman, and notwithstanding the fact we had 6,000 odd independent dealers, the public was unaware of that fact, and we found by no other means than to completely change the appearance of the station were we able to segregate as between the two. That was the birth of that idea.

Q. I take it, then, from your testimony, that one of the [fol. 1940] purposes was to establish the Chevron dealer as an independent businessman; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. But the agreements, as such, were not changed in substance, were they, at that time? I mean Government's Exhibits 1 through 5?

A. If I recall those agreements correctly, the dealer agreement, the dealer agreement TBA, and the petroleum products and equipment agreement, those agreements were not changed in substance.

Q. And the distributor agreement, also?

A. No, we did not have a distributor agreement in use at the time we started the conversion. They had been eliminated in 1944 and supplanted by the TBA agreement.

Q. Now, going back, rather briefly, to the lease and agency agreement, former type of arrangement you had, I believe you testified that was superseded by the dealer agreement, that is, Government's Exhibit 1,——

A. That's right.

Q. —in about 1938; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. What was the change in substance, if any, between the lease and agency agreement and that represented by the dealer agreement, which was put into effect in 1938?

A. I believe I testified, Mr. Dixon, when I was on the [fol. 1941] stand earlier in this case, that I was not intimately associated in that end of the business in 1938; that the only change that I am aware of is the matter of change in corporate structure. Prior to '38 these leases, as I understand it, were signed in the name of Standard Stations, Inc., and at about the year 1938 the agreements, while negotiated by Standard Stations, were entered into under the name of Standard Oil Company.

Q. Well, from your knowledge of the business, can you state to the court whether there was, in fact, any change of substance between the agency arrangement and that represented by the dealer agreement which supplanted the Government's Exhibit No. 1 in 1938.

A. Well, all I can say, I was close enough to the picture to know from a matter of practice there wasn't any change in the method of operation of the stations or the company's dealings with their dealers at that time. As to the legal agreements, I am not familiar with that.

Q. Now, directing your attention to Government's Exhibit No. 3, I believe you testified that the petroleum products and equipment agreement supplanted these dealer agreements in 1944; is that correct?

A. No, it was added to.

Q. It was added to?

A. Let me clear my point on that, Mr. Dixon.

[fol. 1942] Q. All right.

A. Your exhibit number—what did you say?

Q. No. 3.

A. That is what? What is the title?

Q. Petroleum products and equipment agreement.

A. That was just an additional type of agreement that was initiated in 1944, and it did not take the place of the signed on one agreement and some on the other. dealer agreement. In subsequent deals, some of them were

Q. For the purpose of the record and in aiding the court, can you state what difference, if any, there is in substance between the dealer agreement, Government's Exhibit No. 1, and the petroleum products and equipment agreement, Government's Exhibit No. 3?

Mr. Hall: Now, you are asking him for the difference in language between two agreements. They are in evidence. I object on the ground that it calls for a conclusion of the witness, no proper foundation laid, and not the best evidence.

The Court: I will sustain the objection. I think you may ask him if there was any change in the practices generally.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. Was there any change in the practices represented by that agreement, that is, the petroleum products and equipment agreement, against any of the other agreements used [fol. 1943] prior to that time?

A. No change in the practice between that and the dealer agreement.

Q. That is right. Now, when the Standard Oil Company first began to sell tires, tubes and batteries,—I believe that was in 1932 or '33, was it?

A. In 1931 they started to sell them through their company-employee-operated stations.

Q. When did they start to sell them through their lease and agency agreement, or what subsequently became the dealer outlets?

A. Well, as I understand it, they didn't sell tires through their lease and agency agreements. That was the reason for the introduction of the authorized distributor's agreement in 1934. It was my understanding that that is the year. While I was not associated with that phase of the business at that time, it is my understanding that in 1934 they started to sell through dealers on the distributor agreements.

Q. That is tires, tubes and batteries?

A. Tires, tubes and batteries.

Q. Under the distributor form,——

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —Government's Exhibit No. 2?

A. If that is the exact number, yes, sir.

[fol. 1944] Q. And was there any change in practice of the company when the dealer agreement TBA form, which you have testified came into general practice in 1944?

A. Well, I came into the picture just as the TBA dealer agreement came into being, and, so far as I know, there was no change in the actual operation; I mean in the procedure of dealing with our dealers as between those two forms.

Q. In other words, the practice was substantially the same?

A. I would say that, yes.

Q. Under the distributor agreement and the dealer agreement TBA?

A. I would say that.

Q. Now, under the distributor agreement or dealer agreement TBA, I believe you testified that the Standard Oil Company never made any effort to determine the amount of accessories which would go to dealers under those agreements. Is that correct, Mr. Thompson?

A. I don't understand what you mean by "never tried to determine the amount." If you mean that we tried to push the sale of accessories, we did not do that. We naturally tried to sell our accessories.

Q. As I understand your testimony, and if I am wrong, don't hesitate to correct me, you testified under these agree-[fol. 1945] ments until very, very recently anyone who had a distributor's agreement, or, anyone would have to have, put it that way, a distributor's agreement or a dealer agreement TBA to buy any accessories from the Standard Oil Company or through the Standard Oil Company; is that correct?

A. You were talking about accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries?

Q. That is right.

A. Yes, sir, you are correct, up until recently.

Q. And that was true under both agreements, was it not?

A. Of the agreements that remained of the distributors. There was only a few remaining.

Q. Yes. That was the practice of the company, was it not, under both agreements, that is, the distributor's agreements and the dealer agreements TBA, until it was recently changed?

A. Well, I can only now go back as far as the instigation of the TBA agreement. As far back as that started, accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries, were not sold to any dealers except those having TBA dealer agreements. Now, the distributor agreement—I don't know what took place prior to that, but we functioned in the same manner with the remaining distributor agreements, which were at that time eliminated.

[fol. 1946] Q. When did you change this policy and permit anyone, I mean any of your dealers, to buy accessories through or from the company without entering into a dealer agreement TBA or a distributor's agreement?

A. Well, that policy has been considered for some time, but owing to the short supply during the war it wasn't possible to supply the dealers with TBA agreements with an adequate supply of accessories, so as soon as the accessories were available, which was sometime since the first of the year, and I have forgotten the exact date when it went out, but it has been within the last couple of months, I would say that the program was announced as it relates to accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries, and only to dealers handling our gasoline.

Q. But prior to that time, as you have testified, no dealer could purchase any accessories from or through the Standard Oil Company, under either the distributor agreement or the dealer TBA agreement, unless he had signed one or the other of those agreements?

A. Your question rather confuses me. You mean a dealer without a TBA agreement or a distributor agreement could not buy accessories?

Q. That is right.

A. That is correct. Those were the instructions issued to the field organization.

[fol. 1947] Q. Now, I believe you testified that Standard does not sell any gasoline to any dealer who sells any other type of gasoline; that is correct, isn't it?

A. That is our policy and instructions to the field.

Q. How long has that been the policy of the Standard Oil Company?

A. Well, at least 10 years.

Q. Now, these stations or these places where you only sell the gasoline to them, I believe you have referred to them as open account stations; is that correct?

A. Yes, they are included among the open account.

Q. Now, after you have sold gasoline to such an outlet, do you subsequently endeavor to change them over to dealer outlets for the company products?

A. You mean to try to get other products in there?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, that is our stock in trade, is to sell you the full line.

Q. And you are quite frequently successful, are you not, in subsequently turning these open account outlets into either dealer or dealer TBA accounts?

A. I wouldn't know the number, but we are reasonably successful, I would say, in that. We get a number of them on tenure.

Q. Now, do you now sell any of your so-called Atlas line [fol. 1948] of products, represented by tires, tubes and batteries, to any station or any retail outlet that does not sell Standard gasoline?

A. No, we do not.

Q. In other words, to sell any of the Atlas brand of TBA products or automotive accessories, a dealer outlet must also handle Standard gasoline; is that correct?

A. Atlas and any other line of accessories that we——

Q. Sell?

A. —sell, and in addition to handling our gasoline, in the case of tires, tubes and batteries must also be signed on a TBA contract.

Q. Did I understand you to testify that the company-operated stations, that is, the stations that are operated by employees hired and under control of Standard Oil Company are generally in less favorable locations than the dealer outlets?

A. I didn't say that.

Q. All right. I just wanted to correct the record.

A. I didn't say that.

Q. What is the fact with reference to that, if you know, Mr. Thompson?

A. The fact of the matter is that that segregation does not enter into our decision as to which type of operation it is. There is a certain type of trade that Standard Stations [fol. 1949] are in a position to serve that quite frequently are in these locations that I referred to as being locations where possibly restrictions might prevent a great deal of development of service station units, and such as we have very frequently are turned over to company operation. We also have company-operated stations in residential areas. It is the pattern of balanced distribution that involves both types of marketing plan.

Q. In other words, that generally, then, is not a fact, is it? I mean, that stations operated by the Standard Oil Company itself are generally better situated from the point of view of securing business than the so-called Chevron dealer outlets?

A. I don't think I could say that. In the first place, may I correct that Standard Stations operate these stations and not the Standard Oil Company.

Q. In other words, I take it you don't know anything about that type of operation, do you?

A. No, I don't. I do want to explain——

Q. Well, did I understand——

Mr. Hall: Just a minute, let him finish, please.

The Court: Yes, let him finish his explanation.

The Witness: I just wanted to say I do know enough about the locations to say that there is no attempt to put Standard Stations in all the choice locations that occur in [fol. 1950] the usual development of outlets, nor in the worst locations; and, likewise, that applies to the dealers, because that is the thing I am most interested in. But there is a pattern of distribution that involves both types of outlets, and it could very well occur that one unit would be in one favorable location, and another type of unit in another.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. Did I understand your testimony correctly to the effect that company-operated stations are frequently turned over to Chevron dealers?

A. I wouldn't say frequently, but there has been—we have had very many turned over. I think the question you have reference to, Mr. Dixon, was that in establishing Chevron stations that we have taken a great many station managers, who are employees of Standard Stations, and made them Chevron dealers because they wanted to branch out in business for themselves, and the Chevron dealer provided them with a good opportunity to do that.

Q. And what consideration, if any, determines whether or not the company shall relinquish a company-operated station to a dealer?

A. Well, as I say, that happens very infrequently, when a company station is turned over to a dealer. They have their pattern of development, and we have ours. But when it does occur, it is probably an occasion where, and I will go back to the testimony I gave earlier, that we try to cover [fol. 1951] our market with the fewest possible number of outlets, and that there may be an opportunity to serve a locality with the clientele of company-operated stations with one less station than we have got, and that, in turn, might be turned over to a Chevron dealer who could then compete with the competitors who have been promoting the sales of their products through independent dealers for many years.

Q. So you do regard, then, the fact that the Chevron dealer is an independent dealer as of import in determing the ultimate sales that may or may not be made to any Chevron outlet?

A. He is an independent dealer, but we feel a responsibility to him in trying to help him——

Q. Yes, I understand.

A. —to be a good dealer.

Q. Yes. Now, in connection with your testimony, I believe you stated that the Standard Oil Company spent a million dollars or more in painting stations in 1947. How much, if any, did the company spend of that amount on company-operated stations?

A. I don't know, Mr. Dixon. They keep them well painted, too, but there would be a lesser number, I would say probably, oh,——

Q. But you don't know?

A. I don't know, but probably one-fourth or one-fifth, [fol. 1952] probably something of that sort.

Q. Now, these exhibits that you testified were given to the dealers, like Exhibit WW, XX, YY and AAA, are those the same documents that are given to the operators of your company-operated stations, that is, your employees?

A. Some of them are; for instance, the lubrication guide. I can't correlate your numbers there with the exhibits, but I assume that the lubrication guide is one that you mentioned.

Q. Exhibit WW is the lubrication chart.

A. The lubrication guide, yes.

Q. That is the same chart, is it not, that goes to your company employees, operating company stations?

A. It goes to Standard Stations employees, although I believe it has a different cover on that. Other than that, the basic data is the same.

Q. Now, do I understand from your testimony concerning Exhibit WW that the two automobile companies that you mentioned recommend only Standard Oil greases for their cars?

A. No, I didn't say that.

Q. I just wanted the record to be clear on that.

A. No, the recommendations that I referred to were not a sanctioning of the product as a product. It is a case where our research laboratories, knowing the character of our oils, the crudes from which they are manufactured, and [fol. 1953] the service characteristics of the oil, together with the motor car manufacturer's engineers, who know the requirements of the automobiles, get together and prescribe certain grades and weights and frequencies of lubrication. But my statement was not intended to say that the car manufacturers recommended——

Q. I think you have answered my question on that point, Mr. Thompson. Thank you very much.

Now, I believe you also testified that the company — by the way, how much did the Standard Oil Company spend for advertising in 1947; do you know?

A. I gave that figure as approximately something, I think, in excess of three and a half million dollars.

Q. Is that the total amount spent by the Standard Oil Company for advertising all its products?

A. That is the amount spent in the seven western states for the products marketed out here through general media, that is, newspapers, billboards, radio, direct mail, and that sort of thing.

Q. That includes products, petroleum products, sold by the company, that is, the Standard Oil Company, through its company-operated outlets?

A. That is, as I understand it, it includes only those products that are sold to the motorist, gasoline, lubricating oil, and—— [fol. 1954] Q. I am not sure that you got my question.

A. Maybe I didn't.

Q. I say, does that amount also include the advertising of the products of the Standard Oil Company that are sold at the Standard Oil Company-operated stations?

A. Oh, yes, there is no way of distinguishing them.

The Court: He didn't distinguish between that, as I understand it.

Mr. Dixon: I just wanted the record to be clear, your Honor. I didn't understand whether this witness said this amount was used only to advertise Chevron——

The Court: Oh, no, he didn't so limit it.

[fol. 1955] By Mr. Dixon:

Q. I believe in connection with this so-called split pump testimony that you have referred to the fact that the reason the company did not sell split pumps was because of the long-hosing practice. I am not clear what that was, but from your testimony, as I understood it, it was the fact that the dealer operating that station would have a long hose that would go into a tank or from a pump other than that of Standard and would put that gasoline rather than Standard's gasoline into the tank when the motorist asked for Standard gas. Am I correct in that?

A. Well, the point—that is partially correct. The problem is that we, when we get a station painted and signed, it becomes our package and a direct tieup with the advertising that we had; and its purpose of being so displayed is to attract any other people who want to buy our product, and they get in there and another pump on the block that maybe does not engage—the supplier does not engage in that amount of advertising and makes some other inducement to sell his gasoline, it is quite easy for the dealer to make that substitution.

Q. By the way, let me ask you this question: How many of those instances of long-hosing practice came to your personal knowledge and experience?

A. Well, the long-hosing deal was somewhat serious in one instance I recollect, minor in another. I think Mr. [fol. 1956] McClanahan testified the other day that one instance where the sales through our pump exceeded greatly the delivery that we had made, which was one method of checking. I know of a number of instances—I would not know how many, but it has been so many years ago—where competitive gasolines were sold to motorists who had come in ostensibly to buy Standard's gasoline.

Q. May I interrupt you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To ask you this question, in the interests of hurrying on? Can you state to the court any such instance by name of location?

A. No; I could not, Mr. Dixon. It has been too long ago.

Q. That is what I wanted to get from you.

A. It has been too long ago.

Q. This TX5——

The Court: But your entire object was to prevent another product being palmed off as yours; isn't that correct?

The Witness: That is correct.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. This practice of long-hosing that you described, the gasoline actually came from a pump and the tank that is purported to come from, didn't it?

A. I don't believe there was any switching of pipelines, if that is what you mean.

[fol. 1957] Q. That is right.

A. I think it was merely a case where the customer drives into the pump block and disregards the pump that he was receiving the product from. I don't know of any case where there was any mixing, although there have been cases reported where the dealer himself would pump the product.

Q. To your knowledge?

A. Not to my personal knowledge.

Q. In other words, I am talking now of what you know about it personally.

The Court: He said he did not know. All right.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. Mr. Thompson, you testified concerning this TX5 oil as being competitive with your RPM, is that correct?

A. It is RPM heavy-duty type of oil, not the regular RPM.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, as a result of the efforts of Standard Oil Company in connection with that situation of your Chevron dealers selling that TX5 at Chevron outlets, that the Standard Oil Company got the name or names of the customers that were using and asking for and purchasing that oil, didn't it?

A. Our truck station operators were very glad to give that information to us, because they found it more desirable to buy our lubricating oil but were not salesmen enough [fol. 1958] themselves to sell the truck operator, who probably didn't have anything to do with buying the oil, anyway. And it was necessary for us to get the names of these truckers and go directly to the principals of the trucking concerns and convince them that we had a product worthy of their purchase.

Q. But it was because of the fact that you found out that these stations, Chevron stations, were selling this TX5 to customers that wanted it that you got the names of those customers; isn't that a fact?

A. Well, I presume that would be the case, yes.

Mr. Dixon: That is all.

The Court: Any redirect?

Mr. Hall: I don't think so, your Honor, but pardon me just a minute. That is all, your Honor.

The Court: All right; step down.

Mr. Dixon: I was a little longer than I expected to be, your Honor.

The Court: What?

Mr. Dixon: I was a little longer with the examination than I expected to be, your Honor, but I tried to shorten it up.

The Court: That is all right. Considering the length of the direct examination, I think you were very moderate. Tomorrow at 10:00 o'clock.

[fols. 1959-1960] (Whereupon a recess was taken until 10:00 o'clock a.m. of the following day, Wednesday, May 26, 1948.)

Appearances:

(As heretofore noted.)

[fol. 1963] Los Angeles, California, Wednesday, May 26, 1948. 10:00 A. M.

Mr. Hall: Mr. Garrett.

Robert W. Garrett, called as a witness by the defendants, being first sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

The Clerk: What is your name, please?
The Witness: Robert W. Garrett.
The Clerk: And the spelling of your last name?
The Witness: G-a-r-r-e-t-t.

Direct examination.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. What is your present occupation, Mr. Garrett?

A. I am the secretary of the Appropriations Committee of the Standard Oil Company of California.

Q. Will you tell us of your academic training and experience with particular reference to training in the field of economics as it relates to petroleum products marketing?

A. I attended grade school and high school in Walla Walla, Washington, majored in economics in high school. I attended Whitman College in Walla Walla, graduated with an AB degree in 1929 with a major in economics.

After graduation I applied for a fellowship, a teaching fellowship, at the University of California and was offered a fellowship for the succeeding year. I took graduate work [fol. 1964] under this teaching fellowship for two years at the University of California, working toward the Ph.D., Doctor of Philosophy degree. At the end of the two years I left the academic field to take appointment with the Standard Oil Company of California. I did not complete my Ph.D. work, although I had taken practically all of the necessary graduate courses.

After employment with the company I took graduate seminars in the evenings for two years. Then with the Standard Oil Company, I first was employed at the Richmond refinery in the engineering division of the manufacturing department, worked on general studies, cost, time, inventory control, and was transferred to the home office in San Francisco about a year later, also in the engineering department, the general engineering department of the company; and worked there for about a year and a half in studies of distribution, procedures for departmental activities, income tax work, and then I was transferred—we called it the general office. It also became the comptroller's department of the company; worked in some general analytical studies for a short period of time and then was part of a new function that was created for reviewing appropriations.

"Appropriations" is simply a term for expenditure request covering capital expenditures of the company, the improvements, modernizations, additional facilities.

[fol. 1965] Q. May I interrupt you there? Would that include capital investment in retail dealer outlets?

A. Yes; it includes the capital investment in all retail dealer or company-operated outlets. In other words, it covers all of the departments of the company and all capital investments of the company.

That activity has been carried on. I have been engaged in it more or less—I would say "more," because except for about two years I have been constantly engaged in that type of activity since 1935.

My work has quite definitely pointed all these years toward the analyses of the marketing problems, and particularly the very numerous service station expenditure problems; and others whom I have been associated with have been more specialists in the technical aspects of the business, that is, the refining or some of the engineering problems that come up. I have endeavored to specialize in the marketing aspects. In that connection I have had occasion to work with many studies on costs of marketing, costs of distribution. I have engaged in making some of them myself, personally traveling in the field, making studies of the costs of distributing gasoline through service stations and through other types of outlet.

[fol. 1966] Q. In that cost research have you had occasion frequently to examine into all factors that might have a bearing upon your costs?

A. I believe that's true.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the sheet I now present to the clerk be marked with the Defendants' letters next in order, for identification.

The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibit DDD, marked for identification.

Mr. Hall: I have one for your Honor, if you desire it.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you, Mr. Garrett, a sheet that has been marked, for identification, as Exhibit DDD, and ask you if you prepared that sheet.

A. Yes, I had that sheet prepared.

Q. What is it designed to exhibit?

A. It shows the minimum average installation costs for installing at a service station one or two pumps and the underground tanks and necessary lines that go with it to make an installation to handle one grade of gasoline through a pump. It shows the costs of a small tank, the 550-gallon tank, and a larger tank, a 1000-gallon tank.

The Court: How is that computed? Over a period of time?

The Witness: No, it is supposed to be a normal figure, [fol. 1967] a current figure of costs in an average situation. It would vary by locality, but is fairly typical of costs we would incur.

The Court: But at what date?

The Witness: Within the last month. It is a current figure.

The Court: It is a current figure?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: What would the figure be if you had taken last year's basis, say at the end of last year?

The Witness: It would be somewhat lower.

The Court: It would be lower?

The Witness: Yes, because costs have been rising.

The Court: Well, we always take judicial notice of that.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the sheet which I now present to the clerk be marked with Defendants' letters next in order, for identification.

The Clerk: That is Defendants' Exhibit EEE, marked for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you the sheet which has been marked Defendants' Exhibit EEE, for identification, and ask you if that was prepared at your direction, Mr. Garrett.

A. That is correct.

Q. What is that graph or chart designed to depict?

[fol. 1968] A. That chart shows the relationship between the amount of product delivered at one time and the cost per unit—this is expressed in cents per gallon—of making that delivery. It reflects—it is a typical curve; that is, almost a mathematical function of a type of operation where you have a very large fixed cost and a relatively small variable cost. The costs of delivery of the product to the service station are made up, as I say, of two basic parts; the fixed cost that represents the cost of filling a truck, getting it to the service station, getting ready to make the delivery, that is, sticking the tank and finding out how much of the product is now in the tank, making out a delivery invoice, making the collection from the service station, getting ready to dump and getting ready to leave. Those are fixed costs and they are standard whether they leave 100 gallons or 1,000 gallons at the service station. The variable cost is simply based on the time it takes to pour out of the tank truck a given number of gallons, and that is a function more of the flow rate of the truck. In fact, it is entirely the flow rate of the truck. So that figure increases at a substantial rate, depending upon how many gallons you deliver, but the fixed costs are so high that when you deliver small quantities, as this chart brings out, the costs rise very rapidly.

Mr. Dixon: If the court please, I have listened to this [fol. 1969] line of testimony now for some time——

The Court: Speak a little louder, please. I can't hear you.

Mr. Dixon: Thank you, your Honor. I say, I object to this line of testimony. As I have endeavored to understand or to speculate as to the purpose of its being offered, it appears to be relevant only on some economic theory that the defendants may have concerning the cost of delivering their product to a station in connection with the price at which the product is sold to the consuming public at the station. I submit that this type of testimony is irrelevant and immaterial to any issues in this case, and I object to it on that ground.

The Court: The objection is overruled. I am not going to allow any testimony regarding the effect of this arrangement on prices, because I have already said that I consider it immaterial for two reasons; first, that this is not a price-fixing case and, in the second place, it appears that the unreasonableness of the restraint under the Sherman Act and the substantiality of the restriction under the Clayton Act are not affected by the price at which the product is sold to the public. But I think this is material to show the relationship to the so-called independent dealer. It is quite apparent from the line of questioning of the government's witnesses, and also the cross examination, that it is sought [fol. 1970] to show that in reality these station operators did the bidding of the Standard Oil Company. I cannot tell at the present time what effect such testimony would have. The evidence so far isn't limited merely to the effect so far as freedom to purchase is necessary, but also to give the effect as to the manner of conduct of the station; and not only on that score, but also on the general question before us, the services rendered to the individual operators other than the mere delivery of the goods are material as showing the true relationship of the parties, and that shows the reverse of the picture presented by the government's testimony, namely, that they expended large sums of money in order to carry into effect this exclusive feature of the contract for the mutual benefit of them both. Limited to that issue, which has a bearing upon the problem before the court, I think this testimony is admissible, and it is along the same lines as the testimony given yesterday as to the general expenditure for painting the stations and the like. The objection will be overruled.

Mr. Hall: I offer in evidence the documents which have been marked as Exhibits DDD and EEE.

Mr. Dixon: Objected to on the ground they are irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Overruled.

[fol. 1971] The Clerk: Defendants' Exhibits DDD and EEE in evidence.

Mr. Hall: Now, in the questions that I am going to put to the witness now, I shall try not to entrench upon your Honor's ruling of yesterday and today. I have in mind your Honor's statement at an earlier stage that an offer of proof is, of course, unnecessary to the questions or exhibits or the line of inquiry intended.

The Court: That is right.

Mr. Hall: Even so, in view of your Honor's ruling, I shall not intentionally enter into the benefit or detriment to the public aspect, but I have certain questions to put to the witness which relate to competition,——

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: —and I ask your Honor to believe that I am endeavoring to develop that.

The Court: I see.

Mr. Hall:

Q. Now, will you bear in mind, Mr. Garrett, that the questions that I am going to put to you relate to the Western Area, so-called, that is, the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Utah and Nevada.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Idaho, also?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you bear in mind also that this case involves cer-[fol. 1972] tain clauses in forms of contract and sublease between a supplier of products and a dealer, which obligate the dealer to buy from such supplier his resale requirements at a given location of all such products. I will call these clauses, for brevity, requirement clauses, and will you bear that in mind in connection with my subsequent questions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what, in your opinion, would be the result of the elimination of all clauses in contracts or leases which I have described as requirements clauses?

Mr. Dixon: Object to the question as wholly irrelevant and immaterial, and calling for conjecture and speculation of the witness.

The Court: I think it really calls for an interpretation of the requirements or of the terms. Some questions were asked of witnesses for the government, but they were questions which directly called for facts and not for the interpretation of requirements, and I allowed it merely to the extent of permitting questions or permitting the witnesses to testify as to the reasons for continuing certain things. Now, it is one thing to have a dealer testify that after he entered into the contract he obtained certain products exclusively from Standard, but it is another thing to have somebody unconnected with the actual operation, an economist or a statistical expert, to answer a question of the type propounded, in which you ask for an opinion.

[fol. 1973] Mr. Hall: The last question I put to the witness may not be definite and narrow enough. I would like to withdraw the question and put another one.

The Court: All right. But I tell you, to indicate the kind of testimony you desire to offer and to avoid making an offer of proof, if you want to ask a leading question I am going to allow you to do so. If the object of the question is to focus the witness' attention to something specific that you may want, it will help the record by showing what you are seeking to elicit from the record.

Mr. Hall: Let me reframe the question and possibly that will fulfill what I am attempting.

Q. What, in your opinion, Mr. Garrett, would be the effect on competition of the elimination of requirement clauses by suppliers generally? I am asking you for your opinion as an expert in the field of marketing of petroleum products and in the light of your training and experience in that field.

Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the grounds that it is irrelevant and immaterial.

The Court: Will you read the question to me again? My thought wandered away for a moment to something else and I just did not hear it.

(Question read by the reporter.)

The Court: That clearly calls for economic effect of dis- [fol. 1974] continuance of the policy.

Mr. Hall: Yes, your Honor. I am not limiting it to the Standard Oil Company. I am putting the broad question to a man whom I have qualified as an economic expert, familiar with the factors that would enable him to express an opinion upon that subject.

The Court: I will sustain the objection. I think that opinion brings us to speculation upon the economic effect of that type of abandonment of the quality which the Government alleges is violative of the Act; and under my view of the cases it is not material and it does not tend to prove either the reasonableness of the restriction or its non-monopolistic effect. It is a clear question which shows clearly what you are trying to prove, so that the record is as perfect as you could make it.

Mr. Hall: Now adopting the intimation that your Honor has made as to specific questions, I would like to put further questions along the same line. Would the elimination of requirement clauses, Mr. Garrett, by suppliers generally, in your opinion, tend to a substantial increase in company-operated units?

A. I believe that is true.

Mr. Dixon: I take it, your Honor, we have——

Mr. Hall: Do not answer until counsel objects.

The Court: The answer may be stricken. Just go slowly, [fol. 1975] will you, please?

The Witness: Surely.

The Court: I do not know whether you understand what we are doing. We are what we call making a record. So just do not be too quick to answer. Give counsel an opportunity to object so that I can pass on the objection.

Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the grounds it is irrelevant and immaterial, and the answer thereto would not tend to prove any of the issues involved in this lawsuit.

The Court: The objection will be sustained for the reasons already indicated.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Mr. Garrett, in your opinion, would the elimination of requirements contracts by suppliers generally tend to promote the growth of dealer-operated chain of service stations?

Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the grounds previously given.

The Court: The objection will be sustained for the reasons previously given. I will adopt your pattern.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Mr. Garrett, assume that a split-pump system became general; in your opinion, based upon your training and experience, what, if any, would be the change in the overall competitive picture under such split-pump system so far as it relates to suppliers of products to retail outlets?

[fol. 1976] Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the same grounds and basis as previously stated.

The Court: The objection will be sustained for the reasons already given.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Would the elimination of all requirements clauses by suppliers generally increase or decrease the number of existing service stations?

Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the same grounds as previously given.

The Court: The objection will be sustained.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Would the elimination of all requirements clauses by suppliers generally tend to give the more prominent suppliers a competitive advantage?

Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the same grounds as previously stated.

The Court: The objection will be sustained.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. From the economic standpoint, Mr. Garrett, what can you tell us about the split-pump distribution system as compared with the present single supplier system of distribution in the petroleum marketing field?

Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the same grounds previously given.

The Court: The objection will be sustained.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. From the economic standpoint does a split-pump dis-
[fol. 1977] tribution system increase the cost of distribution as compared with a single supplier system so far as the dealer is concerned?

Mr. Dixon: To which question the Government objects on the same grounds previously given.

The Court: Yes; the objection will be sustained.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. From the economic standpoint does a split-pump distribution system increase the cost of the distribution as compared with a single supplier system so far as the supplier is concerned?

Mr. Dixon: The same objection, your Honor.

The Court: The same ruling.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Is a split-pump system inherently and from the economic standpoint a more expensive system of distribution?

Mr. Dixon: The same objection, your Honor.

The Court: The same ruling. When you reach the end of this series of questions and before you go to another topic, let me know because I want to do something in the record.

Mr. Hall: Yes, sir. I have just one more question along this line.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. Assuming that a split-pump system from the economic standpoint would be a more expensive system, in your [fol. 1978] opinion, would the added expense under a split-pump system be ultimately borne by the purchasing public?

Mr. Dixon: The same objection.

The Court: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Hall: You may take the witness.

Mr. Dixon: No questions.

The Court: All right. You may step down.

I desire to state for the record that I consider the questions propounded to this witness as going to the economic merits or demerits of the present system as contrasted with a system which prevailed prior to its establishment and which would prevail if the court declared the present arrangement between the supplier, the Standard Oil Company, and the stations governed by dealership contracts or the TBA contracts other than and not including the company-operated stations.

For the reasons indicated, I consider the inquiry beyond the scope of this lawsuit and entirely immaterial, because, if the practice is one forbidden by the Statute, the fact that it may result in economic benefit or its abandonment might result in economic loss is not material under the decisions of the Supreme Court and the Circuit Courts of Appeals, as I read them.

I will state for the record that I would sustain objections to similar inquiry on the part of any other witnesses that [fol. 1979] the defendant might produce; and I would sustain objections to any chart or documentary evidence seeking to elicit the facts implied in these questions.

And I will further state for the record that, because of that, the defendants need not call such witnesses or offer such exhibits or make an offer of proof to cover the facts sought to be elicited through this inquiry.

What is that old expression? "Hog-tight, bull-strong, and horse-high," isn't it, like an old-fashioned fence? I have given you a ruling there that will allow you to bring up any facet of that question before any court of appeal that this case may reach.

Mr. Hall: Mr. Hillback.

ELLIOTT D. HILLBACK, called as a witness by the defendants, being first sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

The Clerk: What is your name, please?

The Witness: Elliott, E-l-l-i-o-t-t, D. Hillback, H-i-l-l-b-a-c-k.

The Clerk: H-i-l-l-b-a-c-k—right?

The Witness: That is right.

Direct examination.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. What is your present occupation, Mr. Hillback?

A. My formal title is coordinating specialist in the merchandising division of dealer sales, Standard Oil Company [fol. 1980] of California which in effect means that I direct the activities of the merchandising office under the division manager.

Q. And how long have you held that position?

A. That particular position, about a year and a half; similar positions in the same department or divisions, for three or four years; and prior to that, four or five years in various organizations within the marketing department.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the sheet that I now hand to the clerk be marked for identification with defendants' letters next in order.

The Clerk: That is FFF for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I call your attention to the sheet which has been marked FFF, Mr. Hillback, and ask you if that was prepared under your supervision?

A. It was.

Q. At about what time was it prepared?

A. It was prepared, this particular piece of paper was prepared sometime last month, but it is taken from a survey that was made in the early part of January, or in January, 1947 and extended for approximately two months.

Q. And upon what was the survey based?

A. This summary is based on a survey of our field organization and which the home office requested, as we do so often in the normal course of our business, to determine [fol. 1981] just what our position is with our dealers and what kind of merchandise they are handling, and, as a result, we got out a little form which we sent to our districts which asked them to fill it out with respect to each of our dealers and forward it to us for analysis and consideration, and this is a summary of those sheets.

Q. I notice on this sheet a vertical column headed NO. OF CDA'S. What are the numerals in that column; what do they represent?

A. That represents the number of CDA'S, that is, the number of Chevron dealers handling our TBA line that were covered by this survey in the respective districts shown on the left.

Q. So that the survey covers 2,777 dealers handling tires, tubes, and batteries?

A. Handling the tires, tubes, and batteries sold by the Standard Oil Company; yes.

Q. Under the general heading TIRES in the next vertical columns there is one columned head "NO." and another column headed by a per cent sign. What do those two columns represent?

A. Well, the first two headed with NO., meaning number, indicates the number of dealers handling our line of tires, batteries, and accessories who are also handling competitive merchandise of like character; and the second column is [fol. 1982] merely a per cent that that number represents to the total number of such dealers that we have in that district.

Q. Now, the same may be said, may it not, of the vertical columns under the headings TUBES and BATTERIES and ACCESSORIES?

A. That is correct.

Q. Coming to the two columns headed with the word ANY, what do they represent?

A. That represents the number of stations handling the company's TBA which also handle any competitive merchandise of like character; and the second column, again, represents the percentage that such stations represent of the total.

Q. Are the original reports upon which Defendants' FFF for identification is based in the court room?

A. They are.

Q. Are they in that large packing case over on the table?

A. The second of the two, the one we have already looked at; yes.

Q. How many thousands would you say there are?

A. There are 2,777, if the thing is complete, and we have every reason to expect that they are.

Mr. Hall: I offer into evidence the document which has [fol. 1983] been marked Exhibit FFF for identification and tender to counsel examination of the original documents which the witness states were the foundation for the compilation or the summary.

Mr. Dixon: Objected to, your Honor, on the grounds it is irrelevant and immaterial under Section 9 of the TBA contract, Government's Exhibit 3—pardon me, Government's Exhibit 4, paragraph 13, the same being the dealer agreement TBA form and distributor agreement, Exhibit 2, the provision contained in that exhibit entitled "breach of contract."

Mr. Hall: If the court please, this, if for no other purpose, would be admissible as refutation of the testimony of numerous witnesses produced by the Government, inasmuch as the sheet shows the exact status, at least of that period, of tires, tubes, batteries, and accessories handled by these particular Standard dealers.

The Court: I think it already appears from the evidence and it was admitted by one—well, by practically every witness that appeared for the Government, and also one of the witnesses for the defendant, that despite the fact that the contract, as interpreted, practically called for the supplying by Standard of all the requirements, as a question of fact, first, brought on by scarcities and then brought on by the individual desires of the individual patrons, the competitive [fol. 1984] products were sold at these outlets. I think this bears upon that same topic. The objection is overruled. Do I correctly understand the purpose of this?

The Witness: That is right, your Honor.

The Court: I confess I need a lot of explanation in words of one syllable when it comes to mathematics. Off the record:

(Brief comment off the record.)

That will be received as FFF.

The Clerk: Defendants' FFF in evidence.

Mr. Hall: I ask that the three sheets which I now present to the clerk be marked for identification with defendants' letters next in order, as one exhibit.

The Clerk: Defendants' GGG marked for identification.

By Mr. Hall:

Q. I show you the sheets that have now been marked Defendants' Exhibit GGG for identification and ask you what those sheets are designed to depict?

A. This is a list showing by states what companies in the seven western states market their own brand of lubricating oil, depicts a certain number of which I do not know the total but which can be determined by simply adding them up.

Q. It does not show the quantities; it simply shows a list of the companies and the states in which they retail lubricating oils, is that correct?

[fol. 1985] A. That is right; it is merely a list of our competitors. It takes some three or four pages.

Q. And it was prepared in the lubricating oil division of your department?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Hall: I offer into evidence the sheets that have been marked as GGG.

The Court: They may be received.

The Clerk: GGG in evidence.

Mr. Hall: Now, your Honor, we could take a recess, I think we might be done but I want to be sure.

The Court: All right; we will take a short recess.

(Short recess.)

[fol. 1986] The Court: All right, gentlemen, proceed. Mr. Hall, have you finished with the witness?

Mr. Hall: I have finished, yes.

The Court: All right.

Cross-examination.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. Mr. Hillback, directing your attention to Defendants' Exhibit FFF, at whose direction did you make this survey from which the figures contained in said exhibit just mentioned were secured?

Mr. Hall: Will you put the exhibit before the witness, please?

Mr. Dixon: Oh, I am sorry.

The Witness: Mr. W. A. Frasier, the manager of our merchandising division, dealer sales.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. What was the purpose of the survey, if you know?

A. Well, I wasn't told that the purpose is such and such. If you want my opinion, I will give it to you.

Q. No, I don't want your opinion. I want to know what the purpose of the survey was.

A. On that basis, I would have to say I do not know. I would only be speculating.

Q. What conversation, if any, did you have with Mr. Frasier at the time he told you to have this survey made? [fol. 1987] A. Well, if I remember it, we were discussing at that time the fact that we wanted to begin to develop our merchandising. After all, we were a young organization, having been created only in 1944, and we had been, from a merchandising standpoint,——

Q. Let me interrupt you.

A. I can explain this, if you will let me finish my answer.

Q. I just asked you for your conversation with Mr. Frasier, if any.

A. All right. He said to me that inasmuch as we are now in a position to supply more merchandise, I think it would be wise for us to develop just what type of merchandise our dealers are handling, and to get a basis upon which we can develop some merchandising program, and as a result see if you can draw up a form to get our branch people to investigate the situation, and we will go on from there. That is about the extent of the conversation with me.

Q. Pursuant to that conversation you prepared the form which was ultimately used in making the check of your TBA dealers, did you?

A. Well, I; in conjunction with several other people in the organization, yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the court how that survey was made?

A. Well, I did not do the actual survey work, as you [fol. 1988] probably understand.

Q. It was done by several, shall we say, hundreds of individuals, was it?

A. Possibly that is true. The forms as such, which were prepared in our office, were forwarded to the district managers, asking them to see that in the course of regular business they would have our field representatives, as they called on stations, fill them out and return them. And that was done, I should say, over a period of about two months.

Q. Then a visit was made, was it, by a representative of the company to each of the Chevron dealers who had a TBA agreement, to determine whether or not he was carrying competitive merchandise?

A. I would say that is not correct.

Q. Well, was any visit made by anyone to any Chevron dealer station to get the information as to whether that station was carrying what you call competitive TBA merchandise?

A. Well, I already testified, I believe, that this was done in the normal course of business. Every one of our representatives has a normal number of dealers to call on, and when he was there, he filled out the form and sent it in. So there was no special visit made to inspect for this purpose.

Q. But a visit was made to the station, wasn't it, to de- [fol. 1989] termine whether or not it was carrying competitive TBA merchandise in this survey?

A. You are trying to twist what I said.

Mr. Dixon: No, I am not trying to twist anything that you said.

The Court: No, he wants to know how you arrived at that.

The Witness: Every one of these sheets——

The Court: There are various methods of finding out whether a certain policy is carried on.

The Witness: That is right. Well, a visit was made for every report, that is correct.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. By a representative of the company?

A. Correct.

Q. And at the time that visit was made, he inspected the TBA Chevron dealer station to determine what competitive TBA merchandise that Chevron dealer was handling; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after that inspection was made, he filled out the report and forwarded it to the proper representative of the company?

A. That is correct.

Q. And those reports are the ones contained in the box which has been made available to counsel for the government?

[fol. 1990] A. That is right.

Q. Now, again directing your attention to Exhibit FFF, in the columns where you have inserted the numbers, under the heading "Tire, Tubes, Batteries and Accessories," if any single item was found within those categories named as a result of the examination of the reports before referred to, then you would regard that station, that TBA Chevron dealer, as handling competitive merchandise and would list him within one of these columns; is that correct?

A. That is correct. With respect to tires, it could be one tire or fifty, as was the case sometimes.

Q. I have taken at random one of these reports, which I will ask be marked for identification.

The Clerk: Government's Exhibit 105, for identification.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. (Continuing:) —which I have taken from the box containing the reports made available to the government, and will ask you if that is the form of report and the type of report that was submitted as a result of this survey?

A. That's correct. These or similar ones to them were prepared in our office, the form itself, and forwarded to the district to be filled in, as I have previously testified.

Mr. Dixon: The government offers Exhibit 105 in evidence.

[fol. 1991] Mr. Hall: You are offering it just as a sample?

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

Mr. Hall: No objection.

The Clerk: Admitted, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

The Clerk: Government's Exhibit 105 in evidence.

By Mr. Dixon:

Q. Now, this survey was completed when?

A. Well, it was started in the early part of January, and, to the best of my knowledge, was completed in about two months. However, the forms themselves are dated, and there may have been a few straggling in a little longer than that.

Q. Have you made any similar survey since the early part of 1947, that is, January of 1947, of this character, Mr. Hillback?

A. I have not, and I know of none.

Q. Now, I believe you also testified at the time this survey was made the supply of the items of tires, tubes, batteries and accessories were just becoming more plentiful; is that correct?

A. Well, I would put it this way, that certain of them were and certain of them had been in good supply, but, generally speaking, we at that time felt that we should look [fol. 1992] into the situation, and, generally speaking, that was based on the supply situation.

Q. Now, again directing your attention to Exhibit FFF, you will find there in the last column under the heading "any" the number, say, under the San Francisco area, of 131. What does that number represent?

A. "131" represents the number of dealer stations in the San Francisco district who were handling the Standard Oil Company's TBA, and were also handling some competitive merchandise of a similar kind to that that is distributed by our company.

Q. And even though if there was only one tire or one single item, it would be included within that total of 131: is that correct?

A. I believe it would.

Q. Now, directing your attention to Exhibit GGG,—do you have that?

A. Not up here.

Q. Do you know how many outlets any of the companies named in said exhibit have in the states mentioned therein for the sale of their products, that is, the lubricating oils to the motoring public?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any information concerning the number of outlets of any of the companies named on Exhibit GGG, [fol. 1993] where their lubricating oils are sold to the public at retail in any of the states within the Western Area?

A. That was kind of long. Would you mind reading it back, please?

(The question was read.)

A. I have a bare knowledge of our own, and if our company appears on this list, then I know something of that, but I merely know because I work for the company, and not as to actual figures. But with regard to the other companies, I know nothing.

Mr. Dixon: I think that is all, Mr. Hillback.

The Court: That is all. Any redirect?

Mr. Hall: Just a moment, your Honor.

No examination, your Honor.

The Court: Step down.

Mr. Hall: The defendants rest.

The Court: Any rebuttal, gentlemen?

COLLOQUY

Mr. Dixon: If the court please, if it is agreeable with the court, I would like until the afternoon to determine what rebuttal evidence or testimony the government will present. I will say to the court that there may be a very short examination of one witness on a matter, not with reference to any new material, obviously, but with reference to some of the exhibits, and so forth, that have been introduced in evidence, and that will constitute the government's rebuttal, if any.

[fol. 1994] The Court: Now, gentlemen, let me ask you this question: Would you be ready to proceed in case you did offer any additional testimony, with the argument?

Mr. Dixon: Well, if the court please, I would prefer to commence the argument tomorrow, if the court could see fit to give us that additional time. Frankly, I haven't had time to gather all of the material I would like to make available to the court, and I mean factually speaking, in the way of argument.

The Court: I am compelled to ask that question by two things, this case is an important case, not only from the standpoint of the particular defendants, but from the standpoint of the government as well, because it is evident now that you were correct, Mr. Dixon, when you said at the beginning that the case affects not only this particular defendant, but also practices which, as the evidence shows, are indulged in by other companies in this particular area, as the representatives of those companies very frankly, and I may say I use the word intentionally because it expresses my view very forthrightly, admitted when they were called here.

Because it has been pending for a long while, it is of utmost importance that it be decided as quickly as possible. I have already indicated that I would be generous with time [fol. 1995] so far as argument is concerned.

Now, the longer the week-end I have, the more time I will have to gather my own thoughts, and even after all the facts are before me, the nature of my work, as you know, is such that I cannot take a week off to determine the case. If I take a week's time, I will have to take it after hours or in between. So if it were possible to begin the argument this afternoon, even if we put in no more than an hour or two, it might be possible to conclude the argument tomorrow, which will give me the entire week-end to devote to the study of the case while the facts are clear in my mind and before I begin to try other cases which follow.

I may also say that taking down argument, solid argument, is very, very hard on the reporters. The reporters may take down several hundred pages of testimony by questions and answers during a long session without tasking their strength, but four or five hours of argument during a day taxes the strength of the strongest reporter, even when they work in relays, as they do at the present time.

An examination of the transcript shows that we have put in a tremendously large number of folios day in and day out, even excluding the documentary evidence.

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: So if it were possible to begin, I would be willing to adjourn, say, to 3:00 o'clock so that we might [fol. 1996] get a start, and if you take two hours to give your presentation, if you do not conclude, then we can continue tomorrow. If you do conclude, we will not break the continuity of the other side, and then we can try to arrange our hours tomorrow so that it is possible that the entire argument will be concluded fomorrow.

I am presenting that to you both, so that we may arrive at a decision in the matter. I think so far as today's testimony is concerned, it is not of a character that requires any special analysis.

Mr. Dixon: That is my thought, your Honor.

The Court: And if you want, I will fix the hour at any time you desire. If you intend to take some time now, we will adjourn until 3:00 o'clock, and then we can begin with the argument.

I think the principles of law have been pretty well discussed in the brief and in the memoranda, and in the arguments on the admissibility of the testimony, and I think the case has narrowed down to the limits I expressed yesterday. So I think we can begin the argument, because an afternoon will not do you much more good than the time you have between now and then. If I gave you two or three days, it might make a difference.

Mr. Dixon: I wouldn't ask for that time, your Honor.

The Court: But an hour more or less, or two hours, more [fol. 1997] or less, one way or the other should not make much difference. What we are interested in are not rounded periods of a formal talk, but an informal discussion of the facts in the light of the principles of law which govern the case. That, as I say, I think can be done, and unless it creates a special hardship for you, I would prefer we do that rather than take the afternoon off, because so far as my own time is concerned, the only time I can achieve any work is when I have uninterrupted time. Split time does not help.

To illustrate, I came down this morning at 9:00 o'clock, believing that I would have an hour to myself to devote to this case. I found two attorneys waiting for me, and they had not given me notice in advance, but it was on an urgent matter. It is an appeal in an insurance case in which I had to decide what, if any, supersedeas bond was to be put up in case of an appeal, and by the time we got through discussing the various matters and looking at the record and agreeing upon an amount, why, the hour I had thought I could devote to formulating some of my thoughts in advance, preparing myself for the argument, was gone. In fact, I asked counsel whom you all know very well, Mr. Thomas Menzies, for one, to come and bear me out and to tell you they had kept me in there until 15 minutes after ten.

So in view of the fact that the testimony today is not [fol. 1998] of any new character that requires any special study, I feel I would not be imposing any special hardship by requesting you to begin your argument this afternoon.

Mr. Dixon: I will endeavor to comply with your Honor's request.

The Court: Would you like me to give you until 2:30?

Mr. Dixon: Well, I have another problem to decide over the noon hour, your Honor, and that is what rebuttal testimony, if any, we put in.

The Court: Let's make it 2:00 o'clock, then.

Mr. Dixon: Then I might say this: the one reason I would need any additional time would be more or less to marshal the evidence, to aid the court in getting at those exhibits and things that we regard as being material, and that, frankly, I have not had time to do yet.

If it were at all possible to begin working tomorrow morning earlier, say, at 9:30 or at 9:00 o'clock, I think I could make my argument certainly before the noon hour closed, because I don't, frankly, expect to make a very long argument, your Honor, but I do want to give to your Honor the benefit of what we feel is the evidence that we should like to direct your Honor's attention to, particularly in this mass of evidence that has been produced in the trial of the case.

The Court: I think, as I told you before, gentlemen, I [fol. 1999] have studied this mass of evidence, and, as a matter of fact, while it is voluminous,——

Mr. Dixon: It is all of the same character.

The Court: —it is all of the same character.

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: And the facts here are simple. They do not compare to the complicated issues that I had before me in the Food and Grocery case,——

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: —although that case did not take the time that this case has taken, because, as I see it, the pattern that has developed is clear and practically uncontradicted.

Mr. Dixon: That is right. I agree, your Honor.

The Court: Then we will make it 2:00 o'clock.

Mr. Dixon: All right, your Honor.

(Whereupon at 12:00 o'clock noon, a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock p. m. of the same day.)

[fol. 2000] Los Angeles, California, Wednesday, May 26, 1948. 2:00 P. M.

The Court: All right, gentlemen. Proceed. Are you going to present additional testimony?

Mr. Dixon: No, your Honor. We decided not to offer any rebuttal testimony.

The Court: All right. Then I want the record to show that you have rested.

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: Proceed with the argument.

OPENING ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF PLAINTIFF

By Mr. Dixon:

May it please the court, this is an action brought by the Government to enjoin the enforcement of certain provisions of certain contracts as used by the defendants in seven western states in connection with the sale and distribution of petroleum products and automotive tires, tubes, and accessories. The Government is asking that these provisions in the contracts that I will discuss in a moment be declared void and unenforcible as to these defendants, and for such other equitable relief as the court may determine to be just and proper on the basis of evidence submitted.

The questions presented to the court in this case, I believe, are rather simple. The Government charges in its complaint that the provisions in the contract referred to [fol. 2001] operate to restrain trade and commerce in the commodities involved and sold and distributed under these contracts, under Section 1 of the Sherman Act, and that they are also illegal under Section 3 of the Clayton Act; and that they tend to substantially lessen competition and to promote a monopoly in the sale and distribution of the products covered by these contracts.

As we view the law—and I am going to only briefly refer to it at this time—there is really only one question presented to the court on the evidence that has been submitted by the Government and the defendants in this case; and that is as to whether or not these contracts—and there are some 7,000 of them that are in use by the defendants in the western area—operate to restrain the market, and as to whether or not the market restrained is a substantial market.

In other words, under the recent decisions of the Supreme Court in the International Salt case and the Yellow Cab case, it is the contention of the Government that where you have contracts of this character in wide use, such as they are in this case, operating and in effect in seven different states, and that where the commerce involved and subject to those contracts is a substantial amount, that on a showing of those facts, the contracts themselves in their context become illegal per se under both the Sherman and the Clayton Acts.

[fol. 2002] In other words, the Government is not contending here that ordinarily a requirements contract would be illegal. We are not here raising that position or contention.

The Court: That is a departure from the position you presented in your case.

Mr. Dixon: No; I don't think it is, your Honor.

The Court: In your pleading?

Mr. Dixon: No. And if your Honor has that view, I am glad you raised the question now so that we can clearly state our position.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Dixon: That the contracts here, as in the International Salt case, are illegal per se; that is, the requirements contracts and exclusive dealing type of contracts are illegal per se because they operate to completely foreclose a substantial market from all interstate competition for that market. I mean by that from any manufacturers that are producing products comparable to those, competition-wise, that are being covered by these contracts, that those manufacturers, on the one hand, are completely excluded from this market by these contracts, and that the dealers who are also subject to the contracts are completely precluded from even bargaining with these manufacturers to purchase their products.

[fol. 2003] In other words, as I suggested a moment ago, a requirements contract, standing alone as a single contract, if the court please, between an individual and a corporation or between two individuals, would not necessarily in and of itself be a violation of the Sherman or the Clayton Acts, but when you get, as you have in this case, a substantial amount of such contracts, all of which are substantially the same in the language used, and, certainly substantially the same in the effect and purposes for which they are used, that, under those circumstances, the contracts become illegal per se under both the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

The Court: Then your concession relates merely to size. You still insist they are illegal per se because, instead of being one or two, there are many?

Mr. Dixon: That is right, your Honor; correct.

The Court: And that if that is the case, then all the court would have to consider is whether the number of contracts is a criterion, regardless of the actual effect on commerce generally or interstate commerce in the particular area.

Mr. Dixon: I think that is correct, your Honor.

The Court: I just want to be certain I am getting your contention.

Mr. Dixon: Yes, that is correct.

[fol. 2004] The Court: —because even in the Yellow Cab case the Supreme Court states that exclusiveness of a contract is not in itself an illegality; that it does not make it illegal. They refer to a transportation case and refer to exclusiveness of transportation, in a case in 198 U. S., an early case. It is because of that that I raise the point, so as to give you an opportunity to express your views.

You still maintain, put it this way, that given a large number of these contracts affecting an area they become illegal, and we need not concern ourselves with the actual effect in quantity upon the commerce, and the fact as to whether there was actual competition in the field, so long as there was no competition as to these particular outlets.

Mr. Dixon: That is right, your Honor. You have stated it, and that is our view exactly.

The Court: I am trying to understand your position.

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: I spent the entire noon hour rereading the last group of cases that we have been talking about, eliminating the old ones, but the cases that have been called to my attention in the memoranda, and especially those that formed the topic of discussion both at the beginning of the case and especially in the last week, on Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Dixon: Yes. I think I stated in answer to your Honor's question early in the trial, as to whether or not [fol. 2005] there was a difference of criteria applicable under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act, and I said that, from the context of the facts in this case our position would be the same, that the contracts would be illegal.

In other words, in the International Salt case, which your Honor has read many times, and, of course, is familiar with, the amount of commerce and the market that was foreclosed from competition by those contracts,—I mean, there were only about 800 of them that were involved in the International Salt case, and in dollar volume it constituted a market of less than $1,000,000. In other words, as I recall, there was about $500,000 involved. Yes, the opinion here states that a half a million dollars was the total amount of the market which was involved in the International Salt case, and it was that market from which all competition was excluded by reason of the agreements in the International Salt case. But the Supreme Court, in reviewing the decision of the District Court holding those contracts illegal, under a motion for summary judgment, in that context, if the court please, held there was a substantial market involved in that case, namely, that half a million dollars worth of commerce between the various states of the United States constituted a substantial amount of commerce, and then applied the principle of law that where the contracts—and I emphasize the plural there, because there were some [fol. 2006] 800 of them, your Honor may recall—where the contracts operate to foreclose all competition from what the Supreme Court called a substantial market, that they were in that context illegal per se.

Now, applying that principle of law to the facts of our case, as we see it, we have in this case clearly shown that a substantial interstate market is involved, because the commerce here totals, from the sales of gasoline, lubricating oils, tires, tubes, batteries and accessories, for the year 1946 in excess of 58 millions of dollars, and for the year 1947 in excess of 68 millions of dollars. In other words, by comparison, the Supreme Court having held we feel, as a matter of law, that a half a million dollars worth of commerce in salt constituted a substantial market, certainly a market involving 58 millions; or to bring it up to date for the last year, 1947, a total amount of 68 millions of dollars of interstate commerce, or of commerce, certainly involves a substantial market. So that the only question which we feel is open for the court to decide in this case is whether or not these contracts, by their language, operate to foreclose competition from this 58 million or 68 million worth of business which the Standard Oil Company and its wholly-owned subsidiary enjoy under these contracts.

It might well have been that the government could have [fol. 2007] rested its case here upon a showing merely of those facts, namely, the total amount of commerce involved, showing that it was interstate in character, or localized throughout the various states, the seven states in the Western Area, and that these contracts, by their language, operated to preclude all competition for that market.

However, we did put on the testimony of some 40 witnesses. There were a total of 50 witnesses, I believe, that were submitted by the government here, your Honor, but the greater portion of them by far testified to their experience, factually speaking, in endeavoring to tear down this wall which we contend has been created and built by these contracts to exclude them from that type of market. In other words, your Honor, these contracts, by their language, and I am going to discuss that in a moment very briefly, we submit operates to require all of the dealers or the persons who have entered into these contracts, selling Standard Oil products and Atlas products and accessories, to purchase their requirements only from the Standard Oil Company, and in many cases, as the leases involved here and the contracts themselves provide, to sell no other type of merchandise competitive with those products on the premises at which the dealer operates the retail service station outlet.

Now, if these contracts, as a matter of law, from the construction of them will have that effect, and if there is any [fol. 2008] question as to that point, we submit that it certainly has been definitely shown by the testimony that in practice and in operation these contracts have had that effect, then the only remaining question, as I said, is from the evidence as a question of fact do they operate to foreclose that competition from a substantial market? On the basis of the International Salt case, the Supreme Court has held, as a matter of law, that half a million dollars worth of business is a substantial amount of business to be foreclosed by competition, and where it is foreclosed under contracts which have that effect, those contracts are illegal per se both under the Sherman Act and under the Clayton Act.

In the Yellow Cab case, where a similar situation was presented, factually speaking, there were only 2500 taxicabs involved, and the area involved was rather local, involving only three or four cities in the United States, and the total amount of articles or subjects of commerce there, as I have suggested, were only 2500 taxicabs. Yet the Supreme Court held that to conspire to foreclose that market from all competition, such as was alleged in the complaint, and, of course, for the purposes of that case the complaint or the facts alleged were conceded to be true on the motions of the defendant to dismiss the complaint, and on argument in the Supreme Court, so that where you have a market of that [fol. 2009] character the Supreme Court has held, as a matter of law, that that constitutes a substantial market, sufficient to make the contracts or the action to foreclose it from all competition illegal under the Sherman Act. Of course, the Yellow Cab case was not a Clayton Act case, because it was a conspiracy case to restrain competition in the sale of cabs, but the restraint was the same in effect as we have in this case, because the contracts by which the restraint was imposed operated to completely eliminate all competition from any other manufacturer for the sale of the 2500 taxicabs, and both as to the manufacture, or as to other manufacturers for that business, and also to prevent the operator of the taxicab companies from purchasing the taxicabs from any other source other than the defendant company producing them, and which sold them under the exclusive sales contracts.

The Court: Don't the courts hold in interpreting Section 2 of the Act, which is the conspiracy section, that as to that the amount of commerce is not important, that the amount of commerce is immaterial. Isn't that the exact language which Judge Hand uses in the Aluminum case, by saying that one act is sufficient under the Conspiracy Statute?

[fol. 2010] Mr. Dixon: All right, your Honor. In other words, if the act charged as being the violation of the Sherman Act is the act of conspiring to restrain trade, if the conspiracy, if carried out, would operate in fact to unreasonably restrain trade under Section 1 of the Sherman Act—of course, if I might suggest, the conspiracy section applies to both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act.

The Court: That is true, but you are not charging conspiracy here.

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: This is merely an act between the principals, between the corporations.

Mr. Dixon: Then if it is clear that the intent of the parties is to restrain trade and commerce—I mean intention of the Act is to restrain trade and commerce, under those facts you may have no actual restraint even shown, and the amount of commerce is wolly immaterial insofar as violating the Sherman Act is concerned.

So that you can very well have a violation of the Sherman Act under both Sections 1 and 2 without having, in fact, any actual restraint of commerce at all. But that is not our situation here and that is not the contention the Government is making in this case.

The Government contends in this case that these contracts—and this is a Section 1 case under the Sherman Act, [fol. 2011] as well as Section 3 under the Clayton Act—that these contracts operate to unreasonably restrain trade and commerce in petroleum products, tires, tubes, automobile accessories because in their effect they operate to completely foreclose a substantial market from all competition. That, in a very few words, is the position of the Government in this case: that where you operate, or where your acts—and in this case it is the contracts that they entered into—operate to completely foreclose all competition for a substantial market—and you must have those two things, those two requirements, of course, to have a violation—that in that context they become illegal per se under the Sherman Act and also under Section 3 of the Clayton Act. And the test under the Clayton Act is, of course, that these contracts, by completely foreclosing all competition for that market, not only tend to substantially lessen competition for the sale of those products, but that it tends—and I emphasize the word "tends" because your Honor is familiar with the recent Sugar case—I mean the Morton Salt decision, Federal Trade v. Morton Salt, where the Supreme Court has said that under the Act it is sufficient if the contracts, or, to use the term applicable to this case, even may have the possible effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to promote a monopoly.

We do not have to show here, and the Government does [fol. 2012] not contend, that the Standard Oil Company is monopolizing this market for petroleum products in the seven western states, except that it does have a monopoly on the business——

The Court: Of the particular states.

Mr. Dixon: That is right; of all of the outlets that are subject to these contracts. And that is the point where we and counsel for the defendants differ, because——

The Court: Lots of difference.

Mr. Dixon: —on the evidence which they have endeavored to—I mention this, your Honor, I am not being facetious, because I believe it does represent the real difference between the Government and the defendants in this case.

As I endeavored to analyze the testimony which they were putting in here of how much business other companies did with reference to what Standard did, to me it was wholly immaterial because we are not charging Standard here of having a monopoly of all of the petroleum business or all of the automotive accessory business in the seven western states at all. But we do contend and we submit that facts clearly show that as to the outlets subject to these contracts that they do have such a monopoly, and they have it because no one can compete. I mean no other manufacturer of petroleum products, no other manufacturer of tires, tubes, batteries and automotive accessories can compete for the market, the interstate market of these seven states [fol. 2013] which is represented by the approximately 6,000 outlets that are subject to these restrictive agreements.

I suggested at the outset that we do have in this case, we submit, a substantial amount of commerce involved. In other words, we have a substantial market that is subject to these restrictions; and that the top dollar volume of that market for the year 1947 is in excess of 68 millions of dollars.

The next question arises as to how many contracts or how many agreements are involved here.

Well, the record shows that over 7,100 agreements are in use and operate to effect the complete exclusion of all competition for the market represented by these approximately 6,000 outlets at which the Standard products and the Atlas products are sold exclusively. I can break that down briefly for your Honor as to the character—I mean the types of contracts, and perhaps it might be helpful to do so.

I briefly state that over 1,656 of these agreements—and these figures, your Honor, are all taken as of March 12, 1947. I do not know whether they have increased in amount since that time or decreased, but at least for the purposes of this lawsuit that is the only figure before the court. And the dealer agreements, as I suggested, Government Exhibit No. 1, there are over 1,656 of those agreements in operation and effect as of March 12, 1947.

[fol. 2014] Of the dealer agreement TBA—that is Government's No. 4—there were over 2,221 of those agreements in effect on the same date.

There were over 912 of the petroleum products and equipment agreements; that is Government's Exhibit 3.

There were over 556 distributor agreements—that is Government's Exhibit 2—in effect.

And in addition to those agreements, there were 1,800 of these so-called subleases which were also involved and which are involved in this lawsuit.

So that the total number of agreements involved here are in excess of 7,100.

The Court: Just a minute. What is the number of the Exhibit that is the sublease? That is 5, isn't it?

Mr. Dixon: The sublease, your Honor, is No. 5.

The Court: 5, that is right.

Mr. Dixon: Briefly, coming to those agreements, because if we are to rest our case solely on the agreements and forget about the oral testimony, it is necessary, of course, to examine the provisions of these agreements to see whether they can or may or do operate to exclude all competition from what we call a substantial market.

Paragraph 1 of the dealer agreement—that is Government's Exhibit 1—provides that the Standard Oil Company agrees to sell and the dealer agrees to buy, and then I am quoting:

[fol. 2015] "all of dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by the dealer."

And then follows a place in the contract form for the description of the premises. So that under dealer agreement, Government's Exhibit No. 1, the dealer must purchase and can only sell such petroleum products as are sold to him by the Standard Oil Company for sale on the premises covered in the agreement.

I am going to briefly refer to two other provisions in this dealer agreement, No. 1, because they do appear throughout all the other agreements, with the possible exception of the lease. In substance the language is the same in all of them.

Paragraph 7 of the dealer agreement then goes on to provide that:

"in the performance of this agreement dealer is engaged in an independent business"——

And I emphasize the words "independent business." Continuing:

"and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement."

[fol. 2016] Then follows further language to the effect the Company reserves no right to control any of his employees and comparable provisions, the obvious purpose of which is to make it clear that, as a matter of law, the dealer is in no sense of the term an employee of the Standard Oil Company such as would in any sense of the term make the Standard Oil Company liable for any injuries under the Workmen's Compensation Act or any of the social security or unemployment taxes that are imposed upon companies that are operating in the relationship of employer and employee or of principal and agent.

Paragraph 9 of this agreement is also of import and I am going to refer to it here, because much has been made in one of the defendants' exhibits of the fact that other competitive products have been sold under the TBA agreements. I think your Honor is familiar with the testimony along that line. It happened during the war, and so on. It was a temporary waiver of this provision, as we construe it. But in any event paragraph 9 provides:

> "The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default."

I mention that merely because I anticipate that the defendants here—I do not know, but from the line of testimony in that exhibit they may contend that competition [fol. 2017] here was not restrained in fact. But regardless of what happened concerning that period after the war when materials were scarce, the provisions of this agreement—and they are substantially the same in the other agreements attacked here—give to the Standard Oil Company the right at any time to re-impose any of these provisions of the type and character that we challenge in this case with any dealer who has entered into this agreement. So that the power, the power is ever present in the defendants under these contracts to at any time re-impose these exclusive dealing requirements on the dealers that are operating under these agreements.

Passing now to Government's Exhibit 2, the distributor agreement, the language of this agreement provides in substantially the same language——

The Court: Which are you going to now?

Mr. Dixon: Exhibit 2, your Honor.

The Court: Exhibit 2?

Mr. Dixon: That is right; the distributor agreement, and under the marginal heading QUANTITY you will find this language:

> "Company agrees to sell to Distributor"——

The Court: What paragraph is that?

Mr. Dixon: It is not numbered by paragraphs. You will find merely a marginal descriptive characterization of the [fol. 2018] paragraph in caps at the side of the agreement, your Honor, and the descriptive character is entitled QUANTITY. This provision, and I am reading now:

"Company agrees to sell to Distributor, and Distributor agrees to buy from Company and stock and offer for sale all of Distributor's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor in the conduct of his business on the premises hereinafter described."

Then I will omit certain portions or provisions, and coming down to the end of that paragraph we find this language:

"Distributor agrees not to store, handle, distribute, or sell any other brand or brands of petroleum products at or from the station."

Now, your Honor may recall that this distributor agreement was really the forerunner of what is now called the TBA agreement; so that this so-called distributor agreement had a comparable provision to what is also now in the TBA agreement and relating to the purchases and sales of tires, tubes, and automobile accessories. And this provision reads as follows, the first portion of it, and this is under the caption OTHER MERCHANDISE.

"Company agrees to sell or consign to Distributor and Distributor agrees to purchase or receive from Com-[fol. 2019] pany, and stock and offer for sale, all of Distributor's requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor on the premises above described."

And then it goes on to provide that the tires, tubes, and batteries sold or delivered to the distributor shall be the Atlas brand of tires that are handled by the company at its service stations.

And then we have the provision that I mentioned a moment ago with relation to the legal position of the company and the distributor under the heading CONDUCT OF DISTRIBUTOR'S BUSINESS and I read just this portion from that. It is a rather long paragraph covering substantially the same thing that I mentioned a moment ago, but here is the language which is the criteria of the relationship between the Standard and the dealer:

"It is understood and agreed that Distributor in the performance of his agreement is engaged in an independent business, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Distributor with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of this agreement."

And then we have the similar provision under the heading BREACH OF CONTRACT, covering the waiver of any [fol. 2020] default in the contract by the Standard Oil Company, to the effect that if there is any breach of the contract by the dealer and any temporary waiver of it, that that shall not be construed by the Company as any waiver of any subsequent breach of the contract.

Now, Exhibit 3 is the PETROLEUM PRODUCTS AND EQUIPMENT AGREEMENT. This agreement, your Honor will recall, tended to supplement the dealer agreement that is Government's Exhibit No. 1, in the year 1944. This agreement, in paragraph 1, has substantially the same language as contained in the dealer agreement, Exhibit 1, and I read as follows concerning the requirements imposed upon the dealer under this agreement.

"STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, hereinafter called 'Company,' agrees to sell to"—— and then follows a blank space for the name of the dealer——

"hereinafter called 'Dealer,' and Dealer agrees to buy from Company,"—— and then this is the language that I direct your Honor's attention to again:

"all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at"——

And then follows a place for the description of the property.

[fol. 2021] Then in this agreement, in paragraph 7 we have again the same provision, in substance, that we have found in the other two agreements, covering the legal relationships between the company and the dealer insofar as employer and employee is concerned. This paragraph is a little different. The wording does not contain some of the provisions that are in the other, but in substance it is the same. I quote:

> "In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement."

And then paragraph 9 is the usual waiver provision.

> "The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of the default of any other provision hereof."

Now coming to Exhibit 4, that is the dealer agreement TBA. This agreement, your Honor recalls, in a sense tended to supersede the distributor agreement in the year 1944. This agreement is somewhat—well, this embodies both petroleum products and tires, tubes, batteries, and automotive accessories. The first provision therein reads as follows: —this is paragraph 1.

"STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA [fol. 2022] hereinafter called 'Company' agrees to sell to"—— and then a place for the dealer's name.

> "hereinafter called 'Dealer,' and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used, sold, or bought to be used or sold, by Dealer at"——

And then a place for the description of the premises. And then paragraph 2 provides:

> "Company agrees to sell or consign to Dealer and Dealer agrees to purchase or receive from Company, and stock and offer for sale, all the Dealer's requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer on said premises."

Then going from paragraph 2 to paragraph 10, we find this provision again referred to in the other contracts, as follows:

"Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer's conduct in the performance of this agreement."

And then paragraph 13 contains the waiver provision that we have found in all of the other types of agreements that I have just referred to and described.

The last agreement involved in this case is Government's [fol. 2023] Exhibit 5 which is entitled SUBLEASE. As your Honor may recall, this lease is frequently used, and I believe in almost all cases with the exception of a very, very few, it is used in connection with some one of these other types of agreements that I have mentioned.

Paragraph 4 of the language of this contract is the language that the Government complains about. It reads as follows:

"Lessee shall handle and sell on the leased premises only such petroleum products as are sold Lessee by Lessor, and Lessee agrees not to store, handle, sell, or distribute on or from said premises any petroleum products of any description other than those petroleum products sold to Lessee by Lessor."

[fol. 2024] That, your Honor, contains in substance the provisions in these contracts that the government is complaining of, and which we are asking your Honor to declare void and unenforcible insofar as the defendants are concerned in this case.

Now, the next question which arises, as I suggested, is if you had just one, two, or three, or four of these agreements, the government would not be here challenging the legality of these agreements, but the evidence shows, as I suggested, that there are over 7,000 of these agreements in their total number that are in use and effect by the defendants in the seven western states that are involved in this case.

Now, from those we have, as a part of our oral testimony here, endeavored to select what perhaps you might call examples of the types of agreements we are complaining of here from the various states in the Western Area to indicate to your Honor, if there is any doubt about the matter, how these contracts actually operate in the states in which they are in use.

We put on evidence in this case of six dealer agreements which were in use in the states of California, Idaho and Utah. We put on evidence of 60 TBA agreements which were in effect in the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Nevada and Arizona. In other words, the TBA agreement was put in for every state in the Western [fol. 2025] Area, and the total amount of those agreements in evidence numbered 60. We put in three of the distributor's agreements from the states of California and Washington. We put in six of the petroleum products and equipment agreements from the states of California, Oregon, Washington and Nevada, and their the subleases attached to some of those agreements went along with the exhibits. But the total number of contracts involved here, that is, I mean that we put in evidence as illustrative of the operation of these contracts in effect that they have in competition in the seven western states totaled approximately 75 contracts. It was obviously not necessary, and would only have been cumulative to have put in more, but the government did submit evidence concerning particular types of agreements to give life to the case, and to show, if there was any question whatever from the language of the cases, and we submit there is none,—but that if there was any question, that these contracts had the practical effect to exclude all competition for this dealer market in the seven western states represented by these over 7,000 contracts, and that it operated directly to accomplish that effect.

We put on the testimony, your Honor will recall of several witnesses. As I suggested, I believe there were some 40 of them, all of which dealt with the various phases of [fol. 2026] this business. There were 13 distributors of oils and greases representing five independent companies; 14 distributors of tires manufactured by 9 independent companies; 14 distributors of batteries manufactured by 11 independent companies. And they all testified to the restraints or their inability to sell their products to the Chevron dealers that were covered or were subject to the particular type or types of contracts that we have just described; and the sales representatives of the manufacturers of these products testified to active efforts at solicitation for the business of these various dealers, in an effort to sell their products to them.

Your Honor is familiar with the testimony—I am not going to go into it at length at this time—but I will briefly refer perhaps to some individual witnesses and their testimony as merely illustrative of the type of evidence which we submit has been presented to the court throughout the trial of this case by the government.

Now, there isn't any question, we submit on the record in this case, but that the defendants are the largest producer and seller of gasoline and petroleum products in the Western Area. If there is any question about that, I submit it is put to rest by the testimony of Mr. McClanahan on page 50 of the transcript, where he estimated that percentagewise his company had between 12 and 14 per cent of the [fol. 2027] total retail sales of petroleum products in the Western Area, and that he did not know of any company that sold more petroleum products than Standard in this area, with the possible exception of one or two states, where he said they might occupy a second position.

So coming back again to the International Salt Company case, if the facts in that case are to apply to this case, your Honor will recall that the record in the International Salt Case shows that it was the largest producer for industrial uses of salt in the United States, and here the similarity, we submit, is that the Standard Oil Company——

The Court: Are we talking about the International Salt case or the Morton Salt case?

Mr. Dixon: Not the Morton Salt case; the International Salt case.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Dixon: Here we submit that the Standard Oil Company is the largest producer and seller of petroleum products through retail outlets in the Western Area as a whole, and in every state in that area, with the possible exception of two, in which they rank or they come in second to one of the other companies that your Honor has frequently referred to and which is commonly referred to as the majors, as distinguished from the independents or whatever other classification may be given to other than the seven leading sellers of petroleum products in this area.

[fol. 2028] The Court: Let me ask you a question there.

Mr. Dixon: Certainly.

The Court: Aren't we confronted there with the situation, which is a little different, because there the court, while dealing with the antitrust statutes, was dealing with a tie-in contract which compelled the purchasers, as a condition of purchasing, to buy from them containers as to which they did not have any patent monopoly, and must not those cases be read in that light, remembering that beginning 15 years ago, even before the court condemned price fixing per se, but beginning with the paving case the court has held it will not extend the patent monopoly to allow a person to tie in with his monopoly the use of unpatented ingredients; a case which was later on followed in the Ethyl Company case, and the Apex Hosiery case, and similar cases, cases, however, which are modified recently to some extent by the Trans-Wrap case, where the court held that the rulings in those cases did not stand in the way of a patentee tying his licensee to an agreement whereby any improvements in the patent should belong to the patentee and be taken out in his name. That is the question covered, and it has rather a long decision.

Mr. Dixon: I think I understand, your Honor, and my answer is relatively short, that the vice that is condemned [fol. 2029] by the Sherman and Clayton Acts is the character of restraint, not the means whereby it is effected, necessarily.

Now, in the patent line of cases, and there, of course, you always have a tie-in type of case, where you are endeavoring to justify your restraint by making it a part of the field covered by your patent, under those cases if you exceed the limitation of the patent granted, that is, if you endeavor to tie in the requirement, as was done in the Salt case, with the use of an unpatented article as a condition to the use of your patented article, then you are clearly violating the law, the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act, because you have exceeded the limits of the patent grant conferred upon you at the time you got the patent.

Now, we submit that where you have no patent—I mean, in other words, the patent is used as a means of endeavoring to justify the imposition of the restraint, and that was precisely the defense that was raised in the International Salt Company case, where the Salt Company said, "Why, this is a perfectly legal restraint, because it is a part of the use of our patent monopoly," and the Supreme Court and of course, the District Court had previously held otherwise. Now, if you have no patent at all, in other words, there is in the nature of a plea of confession and avoidance, and you certainly have no patent in this case, then if your contract operates to completely exclude all competition from the [fol. 2030] market, and that was what was being accomplished by the agreements in the Salt case, we submit you have an a fortiori case of illegality under both the Sherman and the Clayton Acts.

The Court: Let me follow up with another question. In those cases you start out with the idea that the court says that any such tie-in, regardless of the amount of commerce involved, appears illegal because of its effect, while here we have to start out with the idea that exclusiveness of handling is not in itself illegal, and I insist that that is still the law today. I have read and reread since we discussed the matter the Griffith case, and the other cases referred to, particularly the case you cited Friday——

Mr. Dixon: The Signoid case?

The Court: —the Signoid case, that is right. I have reread those cases.

Mr. Dixon: And the Oxford Varnish Company case?

The Court: What was that?

Mr. Dixon: The Oxford Varnish Company case?

The Court: That is right. I am still of the view that these late cases do not hold an agreement for exclusiveness of outlet is in itself illegal; that is, they are not illegal regardless of the effect they have in substantially affecting competition, and I am impressed by a paragraph in the Yellow Cab case which I didn't see the other day, but which [fol. 2031] I saw during the noon hour, and to which I referred before, where they say that a contract for exclusive transportation or exclusive control of transportation is not illegal.

Now, doesn't that call for a different criteria of result than the other cases?

Let me explain a little further what I mean. Can we here apply the rule so as to say that regardless of the fact that other companies were in the field and actually marketed through agencies of their own, through similar or other arrangements on these products, and that as a fact the percentage of these products, the petroleum products and accessories—there has been a distinction made between accessories, as used originally by us in the pleadings and as used by the representatives of Standard or the witnesses for Standard. They designate as accessories everything except tires, tubes and batteries. In other words, they would designate as such windshield wipers, hub caps, carburetors, and things like that,—but using the word "accessories" in the broad sense, the evidence before the court which was admitted over your objection does show that considering the entire field, whichever one of these accessories we consider, or if we consider the petroleum products, that the amount of trade controlled by Standard is a small percentage only of the commerce in those commodities within [fol. 2032] the area.

Mr. Dixon: Yes, I think I see your Honor's point.

The Court: Now, the whole difference between us lies there.

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: And do not designate that as a point, please. You have learned to know me now,——

Mr. Dixon: That is right, your Honor.

The Court: —and counsel for the defendants have known me for many years. I do not want to and I do not like to have any questions which I ask counsel in this kind of a discussion be taken as an indication as to how I am going to rule.

Mr. Dixon: Certainly.

The Court: I may ask questions one way and then rule the other way, and that is legitimate practice on the part of any judge. And you yourself know how often people have been disappointed in the Supreme Court and the Appellate Courts, because they assumed from the questions asked a certain attitude, and found not only the court, but the particular judge took a different attitude. The reason I give that warning is because I had a very unfortunate experience recently in a case which did not have any great importance legally, as a matter of fact: did not have 100 per cent the importance that this case has or the challenge that this [fol. 2033] case has, but because it involved the motion picture industry it was given a lot of undue publicity. I asked counsel a question, and in answer he forthrightly said, "No." I asked if he knew of any law which authorized a judge or an administrative body to ask a witness a question and insist that he answer it "Yes" or "No" without giving him a chance to explain, and he answered, as I say, forthrightly: "No." That is all that happened. I didn't rule on anything. But that was made the cause of publicity, and my own daughter in New York read on the front pages of a paper there that I had ruled that Congress could not ask that particular question, which wasn't what I had ruled at all, because the question wasn't even before me.

So I have become, I would not say I have become more cautious, but I try to avoid such misunderstandings, because they are not pleasant; in the particular instance I referred to it went so far as to be editorialized by a very good friend of mine, Mr. Judge Holland Palmer, who himself published a long editorial on this supposed ruling, until I finally was compelled to send him the transcript and show him there was no ruling. Of course, newspaper men and editors never change their editorials, so whether I have convinced him or not, I don't know, but he never wrote a correcting editorial stating that I did not make any such ruling.

[fol. 2034] For that reason I am making this particular statement now so that there will be no misunderstanding as to what I am doing. I am merely asking questions to clarify my own thought, because if your contention is correct, then, regardless of the fact that the actual sales in the field of these commodities, petroleum products and others, —regardless that their money value amounted to a small percentage only of the commerce in these commodities in these states, the mere foreclosure of these particular markts you say is illegal. In other words, I am asking the question whether, in determining what is or what is not substantial or in determining what is or what is not unreasonable, I am limited only to the number of outlets which are foreclosed, or can I take into consideration the overall picture and include, as an effect of the restriction, the quantity in products which are controlled, so you say, by this exclusion? That is the problem.

Mr. Dixon: In answering your question, your Honor, I answer it perhaps, as best I can say, by giving you our view directly and applying that we feel, as our position, that if your Honor concludes that the amount of commerce which we have shown to be subject to the restraint here, namely, the $67,000,000 worth of commerce for the year 1947 in petroleum products, tires, tubes and batteries is a substantial amount of such commerce, then your Honor is not con[fol. 2035] cerned with how much of a percent of the total amount of such commerce that amount may constitute.

The Court: In other words, you would depart from the words which, I think it was, Judge Hand used, and, some of the other circuits, and I am following only cases that have the approval of the Supreme Court, like the first Aluminum case, and others which are cited by the Supreme Court, that the restraint may be localized to such an extent as to outlets, that even though the percentage of control affects a portion only of the commodities, nevertheless it is exclusive——

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: ——as to 7,000 outlets, and that the percentage, in effect, of the commerce becomes immaterial.

Mr. Dixon: That is right; on those facts, your Honor.

The Court: Have I given you the thought?

Mr. Dixon: Yes.

The Court: Because these statistics do show, and I forget the exact percentage, that the other companies still control something like 90 per cent of the sales in volume.

Mr. Dixon: Well, let me pose this possible answer or situation, your Honor, in further reply to your question. The Sherman Act is concerned, as your Honor well knows because you have decided many cases under the Sherman Act, with the maintaining of our system of free competition, [fol. 2036] and it looks with disfavor upon restraints, generally speaking. But as the law requires that a restraint to be illegal under the Sherman Act must be proved to be an unreasonable restraint,—that is the qualification in the Standard Oil case, and so on, of 1911, and in previous decisions, so the question arises that not all restraints are illegal. It is only those restraints which are unreasonable.

Now, upon that premise, that is the obligation of the government, to prove that the restraints here are unreasonable under the Sherman Act, and also have the purpose, in effect, as set forth in Section 3 of the Clayton Act to preclude or, I mean to completely eliminate competition from a substantial market. And whether a market is substantial is a question of fact, I mean in the last analysis and in law. But where you operate to exclude all competition from what the law calls, or the courts call, as a question of fact, a substantial market, then you are to that extent interfering with the operation of the forces of free competition, which is the thing which the Sherman Act was passed to protect.

Now, to come down to the particular question, if we are to compare, or, I mean if we are to adjudge the reasonableness or unreasonableness of this restraint, and I think it perhaps is not even open to dispute, at least, in our point [fol. 2037] of view we submit it is not, that there is a restraint on this market by these exclusive dealing contracts, that where you have a restraint of that character that affects a market of substantial volume, dollar volume, that that becomes, then, illegal per se.

Why? Why, because of its tendency to monopolize. In other words, your Honor has already suggested, and I believe the record shows here that five or six of the other companies that compete with the defendants in this case for the petroleum products business and automotive accessories business at these outlets use similar or substantially similar types of contracts.

The Court: I suggested, or I said that there is evidence to that effect.

Mr. Dixon: There is, your Honor.

The Court: And they brought in their own forms which, in substance, contain similar restrictive conditions.

Mr. Dixon: So what would happen, if the court please, if we are to adjudge the legality of this restraint by comparing it with the total business done by the competitors of the defendants in this area? Then, in practical effect it means that, say, seven companies can completely control all of this business, and no one else would ever have a chance to get into the business or to compete for their market that is completely sewed up by this type of contract.

[fol. 2038] The Court: Of course, if they do so individually, the mere fact that it has that result wouldn't make them guilty of a conspiracy. If they did that as a result of a conspiracy, you can charge them with conspiracy.

Mr. Dixon: My point is that the Clayton Act was aimed directly against that sort of possibility, when it says any restraint which tends to create a monopoly or to substantially lessen competition. And if you take the 12 per cent, or whatever the percentage of this market is, out of competition, certainly you have tended to substantially lessen competition for that market, for those products, and have tended to create a monopoly, because if you go on with this king] of practice of 12 per cent, 14 per cent, 15 per cent, the tendency is the thing which the Clayton Act condemns.

The Court: That is true, but if you adjudge it merely by outlets, and supposing that Standard went back to the system of having only what has been called here employee-operated agencies, that would exclude as effectively the others, because they could market in their own places their own products.

Mr. Dixon: That is right. But that is not the system that they choose to follow, your Honor. They chose deliberately to get away from that system, and they chose to make every one of the dealers, and I again stress this term, independent [fol. 2039] businessmen, and that is quite a different proposition from Standard selling its own products or dealing with persons who want to sell them products. Here they are preventing the operators of these outlets from exercising their independent judgment on the purchase of any of the commodities that they are required to purchase solely and exclusively from Standard Oil Company, and that is the same type of restraint that is referred to in the Yellow Cab case, and, if I may, and if your Honor will just bear with me a moment,——

The Court: I will take my time out of your time.

Mr. Dixon: All right, your Honor. Thank you. I am reading from page 226 of 322 U. S., as follows:——

The Court: You mean 332 U. S.?

Mr. Dixon: 332, U. S., yes, your Honor, at page 226.

The Court: That is right. It is the advance sheets.

Mr. Dixon: And I quote:

> "* * * By excluding all cab manufacturers other than CCM from that part of the market"—this is a part of the market—"represented by the cab operating companies under their control, the appellees effectively limit the outlets through which cabs may be sold in interstate commerce."

Then continuing, in addition to that,—they have done that, they have limited the outlets, the possible outlets for [fol. 2040] sales in interstate commerce; but in addition to that, they have, and I quote:

> "In addition, by preventing the cab-operating companies under their control from purchasing cabs from manufacturers other than CCM, the appellees deny those companies the opportunity to purchase cabs in a free, competitive market. The Sherman Act has never been thought to sanction a conspiracy to restrain the free purchase of goods in interstate commerce."

Now, if I may briefly paraphrase that language to the facts in this case, we could say that the Supreme Court could write an opinion in this case,——

The Court: They probably will ultimately.

Mr. Dixon: —as follows:

"By excluding all petroleum and automotive accessory manufacturers other than Standard from that part of the market represented by the dealers under their control, Standard effectively limits the outlets through which petroleum products and automotive accessories may be sold in interstate commerce. In addition, by preventing the dealers under their control from purchasing petroleum products and automotive accessories from manufacturers other than Standard, Stand- [fol. 2041] ard denies those dealers the opportunity to purchase products in a free, competitive market."

The Court: Give me the page of that again, please.

Mr. Dixon: It starts on page 226, your Honor, and ends at the top of page 227.

The Court: Have you finished? I mean, are you through with that portion? I want to ask you one more question.

Mr. Dixon: Yes, your Honor, I am through with that portion.

The Court: Here is one question: In the Standard Oil case, the original case, the case which introduced in 1911 the concept of reasonableness for the first time under the statute, the court in defining what reasonableness is—I don't want you to think that I have so wonderful a memory that I remember this, but I want to say I read it at noon today—the court says, in effect, that what is reasonable or not is a question to be determined with relation to the facts in each case. In fact, there is a portion there which I can almost quote verbatim, in which they said that Congress had established the boundaries, but had left the limitations to be determined in each case in the light of reason, and the principles of law, and so on, and so forth.

I think I have given you a fair resume of that particular portion of the opinion.

[fol. 2042] Now, the question is this: Can we in a case of this character leave entirely out of consideration the quantum of commerce in these commodities in an area and determine unreasonableness and substantiality solely on the basis of the number of outlets which are the subject of these contracts?

Mr. Dixon: I think you are limited to this extent by the recent decision of the Supreme Court: You shall take the number of outlets, the number of agreements that are involved, and the actual amount of commerce that is involved. In other words, it might well be that you might in certain cases have two or three thousand agreements of this character—I don't mean in the oil business, because you could not have in the oil business or, rather, not have them operate—but, in some other industries, and not be an actual restraint of commerce because there would not be a substantial amount of commerce involved.

I mean that is the burden the Government has in this case is to still convince the court—I mean present facts from which the court may conclude that a substantial amount of commerce is affected. I do not mean to indicate that your Honor does not have discretion in passing upon that question, because the burden is with the Government under the International Salt case to show that a substantial amount of commerce has been affected.

The Court: But you would limit my determination to "substantiality and the amount of commerce involved in [fol. 2043] the restraint," not merely to the relation of that commerce to the free commerce.

Mr. Dixon: Correct, your Honor. And may I suggest that in the Salt case, of course, there are many other salt companies, as your Honor knows, perhaps sell salt in the United States besides the International Salt Company. Now, there was a comparison made there in that case, nor was it ever even considered in the District Court or in the Supreme Court as to whether or not the $500,000 worth of commerce in salt that was held to be restrained both by the District and the Appellate Court by those agreements was to be determined, as far as determining whether it was a substantial amount of commerce or not, by putting it in its context with the total amount of salt that would be sold in the industry in the United States; or, assuming in this case, in the area in which the contracts operate.

The Supreme Court in the Salt case held, we feel and we submit that the reading of the opinion so indicates, that a substantial market as a matter of law is involved when you have facts comparable to those which you have in the International Salt case, namely, when you have shown that you have a substantial amount or number of agreements that are used to effect the restraint; second, that a substantial, using the same term, or that a large dollar volume of commerce is subject to that restraint and that it is inter[fol. 2044] state in character. Having shown that, under the decisions in the Salt case and, we feel, also the Yellow Cab case is directly in line with the same view, the Government has met the burden of proof to show that where the contracts exclude all competition from that market, your Honor—I am emphasizing that word "all"—I mean excluding all competition, because if that were not the case then you would have a different factual problem, perhaps, you might be open to consideration of what percentage of this commerce Standard had with relation to the total amount and various other matters, but where you have a complete exclusion of all competition for that market, we submit that a showing that the market excluded from competition is a substantial one in dollar volume, under the Salt case that is sufficient to make the restraint illegal per se without a further showing.

As I again point out, both in the District Court in the Salt case and in the Supreme Court there was no evidence nor was there any comparison made. The only criteria that the court applied was, on page 394, that the International Salt Company is the country's largest producer for industrial uses of salt, and that they sold approximately 119,000 tons of salt in the year 1944 for about $500,000 worth of business.

And then the court says, page 396:

> "By contracting to close this market"—— > [fol. 2045] What market? Why, the $500,000 market.
> "for salt against competition, International has engaged in a restraint of trade for which its patents afford no immunity from the Anti-Trust Laws."

And then going on in the same opinion the court says the volume business affected—and that comes directly to the question your Honor posed a moment ago—

> "The volume of business affected by these contracts cannot be said to be insignificant or insubstantial and the tendency of the arrangement to accomplishment of monopoly seems obvious."

In other words, if we read that language correctly, the Supreme Court is saying, certainly insofar as the Salt case is concerned, that $500,000 worth of business in salt affected by the contract cannot be said to be insignificant or unsubstantial.

The Court: If you have reached a good stopping point, I will give you a good recess.

Mr. Dixon: Thank you, your Honor. It is a good place.

The Court: All right; recess for 15 minutes.

(Short recess.)

Mr. Dixon: I might say a word or two more about the Salt and Cab cases, your Honor, and then I will proceed to a discussion of some of the evidence in the case.

[fol. 2046] The language of the court in the Salt case that we believe is particularly significant is also contained on page 398, where the court is again discussing the character of the restraint, and states:

> "but it is admitted that, at times, at least, competitors do offer such a product. They are, however, shut out of the market by a provision that limits it, not in terms of quality, but in terms of a particular vendor."

And I emphasize the last portion of the quotation from the opinion: That they are limited in this case in terms of a particular vendor, namely, the Standard Oil Company; and they are precluded, as they were in the Salt case, from purchasing at any time. In the Salt case there was a provision in these contracts, your Honor will recall, that permitted competitors of the Salt company to furnish the salt where the Salt company itself could not do it. The court held that that did not operate in any sense of the term to make that which was otherwise illegal legal, since they could impose the restriction at any time that they saw fit, and that it did not operate to limit all competition as to salt.

The Cab case does deal, in parts of the opinion, with the question that your Honor posed a moment ago about this comparison of percentage of Standard's business to the total business done by the competitors in the area. I be- [fol. 2047] lieve the significance of the Cab case lies in the fact that it presents the "appreciable segment" test of the market, rather than whether or not you have in fact a percentagewise control of the market. And the appreciable segment test, in a sense, is perhaps a departure from the prior cases or the prior rulings of the courts on the question of whether or not you have a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act when you show that only a small part, relatively speaking, of the total commerce involved or business involved is subject to the restriction.

In connection with that perhaps I should refer your Honor, if you are interested, to a recent article or an article in the Columbia Law Review for September of 1947, on page 928, where reference is made to the decision in the Yellow Cab case.

The Court: I do not have it. I only get Harvard and the two California Law Reviews. I can get it at the library.

Mr. Dixon: That is right.

The Court: What is the page?

Mr. Dixon: 928 of the September, 1947 volume of the Columbia Law Review, where a discussion is had concerning the importance of the appreciable test as laid down in the Yellow Cab case.

Then, your Honor, I believe, is already acquainted with the recent language or the language used by the Supreme [fol. 2048] Court in some of the movie cases and the Morton Salt case. It is true it is not decisive, perhaps, of the question involved in this case, but it nevertheless is illustrative of the general principle which the Supreme Court applies in determining whether violations of the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act exist on a particular set of facts.

In the Paramount case, for instance, a recent slip decision, on page 35 language is found again which illustrates the point I just mentioned about appreciable segments of a business, in which the court says:

> "'Any part' is construed to mean an appreciable part of interstate or foreign trade or commerce." Citing United States v. Yellow Cab Co. case.

And then the general language of the Supreme Court in the Griffith case, on page 7, slip decision:

"The Anti-Trust laws are as much violated by the prevention of competition as by its destruction."

A reference is made to the Aluminum case that your Honor has just referred to and the opinion of Justice Hand, Learned Hand, in that very important decision on monopoly. But here we do have, if I may digress or use a monopoly term, an actual monopoly by Standard of an appreciable segment of this business in the western area, applied specifically to the facts of this case. We are, however, not charging Standard here with having a monopoly of all of the [fol. 2049] business or a monopoly of the petroleum business or of the automotive accessory business, but we do charge that they have monopolized by these contracts an appreciable segment of that business in this area.

In other words, the $68,000,000 worth of petroleum products, tires, tubes, and batteries does, we believe, even if your Honor feels that you should make the comparison suggested by the defendants, that that nevertheless would be an appreciable segment of that total business and, to the extent that all competition has been eliminated for that business, you have in fact a monopoly of an appreciable segment of that business in this area.

Now, that is, of course, important under Section 3 of the Clayton Act where the tendency to monopolize is the vice and violation of the law.

In other words, the act which tends to effect the monopoly or which tends to substantially lessen competition becomes a violation of the Clayton Act, Section 3; and, of course, where it effects an unreasonable restraint to trade as we claim it does under the decisions and the principles of the International Salt case and the Yellow Cab case, you have a definite violation of the Sherman Act also on the ground that the restraint excluded all competition from a substantial interstate market for the products involved in this case.

[fol. 2050] Now, passing now rather hurriedly to a discussion of some of the evidence in this case, I believe I have previously suggested to the court that the government does not feel that it was necessary to prove by this evidence the practical effect of these contracts in operation. However, if your Honor deems proof on that phase of the case essential, we submit that the record in this case clearly shows that the contracts involved here have operated to have the effect charged in the complaint.

Let us take, for example, the petroleum products phase of the business. We have there the testimony of Mr. Ellis on page 347 of the record, who solicited the business of a Douglas station and sold them some products, Pennzoil and Quaker State. Then that station was changed to a Chevron station, and when he went back to solicit some more of that business, of course, he didn't get it. Then he went to another station operated by a Mr. Mortimer, and this appears in the record on page 351, where that transaction is discussed, and he was told to pick up his containers after that station became a Chevron station, and the competitive products with Standard that had previously been sold there and which were, in fact, sold for a short time after it became a Chevron station because of customer demand, were eliminated from that station.

However, perhaps as good an example of the effect of these contracts on the oil phase of this business is shown [fol. 2051] by the documents of the defendants themselves. I refer specifically to Exhibits 23 and 24, and all of the parts of those exhibits. Exhibit 24-A, for example, is a letter on the letterhead of the Standard Oil Company of May 19, 1947, to Mr. Thompson from Mr. Cuyler concerning the sale of T5X, a competitive product with RPM, the motor oil of the defendants, and this notation appears in pencil on this exhibit:

> "Please write the districts concerned, each account separately and ask them to set up the truck station operators to follow through and ask for a report which will indicate when each of these accounts is operating in line with commitments on our products."

And then the notation following the initialed signature, "Please let me see the results."

Well, the reports show that the results were that the competitive oils at these dealer outlets, operated supposedly by independent businessmen, were eventually completely eliminated from those stations.

Exhibit 23-S, for example, deals with one of these other stations, and the operator, who had been contacted by one of the Standard Oil supervisors or men, whose testimony indicated he visited the Chevron dealers from time to time, and the operator reported in this exhibit 23-A to the [fol. 2052] Standard supervisor that he will discontinue the handling of these lubricating oils if one of the other stations that was also handling it would also discontinue handling it. He states according to this exhibit, "We will be very much disappointed if the Santa Maria Truck Station does not discontinue, as we have, and soon."

In other words, I believe this document, or type of document, your Honor, illustrates better than anything that I can say that the tendency of these contracts is to monopolize or to bring into effect a monopoly by eliminating the competition theretofore in existence at that station with competitive products which were demanded by customers who came to that station asking for the product which was ultimately eliminated by reason of these contracts.

The further exhibits, and I direct them to your Honor's attention, deal with similar situations.

This testimony is corroborated by witnesses which the government submitted. Mr. Mortimer, for example, was questioned at page 394 of the record with reference to his handling TX-5, and he said, or, he was asked:

"Q. Why did you handle this oil?
"A. Due to customer demand."

Then follows some further testimony, and he says that he was asked to dispose of a barrel of this oil by the Standard Oil supervisor, Mr. Burke, and not to replace it. [fol. 2053] Then on cross examination, on page 396, he was asked:

"Did the time come when you ceased to have demand for that product"

And the answer was: "No."

Then we have the testimony of Mr. Russell Garett Stephens, which appears on pages 513 through 518 of the transcript, and I quote from just a portion of that testimony. After he had been asked about having competitive oils on his property, the question was asked:

"What happened and what was said?"

And the answer was as follows:

> "Well, after an inspection of my station by Mr. Westbrook, he found approximately six cases of Quaker State Oil partially hid in my lubrication room and immediately come to my office, called me into my office, rather, and said, 'Mr. Stephens, I wasn't kidding you last month when I was out here about discontinuing the handling of Quaker.'"

That is very illustrative, we submit, of the effect of these contracts in completely closing these outlets to all competition; in this instance all competitive lubricating products. The testimony of Mr. Johnson, in the record at page 291, is along the same lines, and numerous other witnesses testified [fol. 2054] concerning the oil situation tie-in with that type of testimony.

Now, one of the things which resulted from this check by the Standard Oil Company, and which again illustrates the way in which competition is in fact eliminated, as shown by these witnesses, and, further, by which a tendency through these practices to monopolize is clearly illustrated is that after the supervisors for Standard had been around to these stations and checked and found the competing oils there, that they got the names of the customers who were asking for those products and then proceeded to go around and sell them on their products, after the competitive product had been eliminated from the Standard outlet subject to the contract restriction.

Now, of course, that is perhaps a very small part and you might say of no importance in this case, but it does suggest that through these contracts, where the customer demand exists for competitive products, and I believe their own records show that, as well as the testimony offered by the government, that these contracts give Standard a way to come in and not only eliminate that competition, but to convert that business to their own products.

Well, what about the situation on tires? One of the examples there, again, was of another Mr. Stevens, who spells his name S-t-e-v-e-n-s, and not this time Mr. Stephens, as the former witness I just described, and who [fol. 2055] was a Chevron dealer operating a station, or, rather, he was a solicitor or distributor of the Pennsylvania Rubber Company for tires, tubes, and batteries, and he called on a Chevron dealer, at Harry Naylor's, at Knolls, Utah, and he had sold him over $1300 worth of tires in April of 1947. This outlet was out on the desert, and apparently it had been an outlet that the Standard supervisors had overlooked from the point of view of stocking it with a large amount of tires, because the record here shows that this station sold what would be a relatively large amount, I believe, of tires for a station of that character, over $1300 worth in a very short period of time. This business was eliminated when Mr. Stevens went back in July and asked for some more business, and he was told he would not be able to handle—that is, Mr. Naylor, the Chevron dealer, would not be able to handle the Pennsylvania Rubber Company's products or tires any longer, that he was sorry, he would like to give him some more business, but he couldn't do so.

Now, the TBA contract in evidence in this case on this station, of course, in this instance effectively operated to eliminate not only that business of the Pennsylvania Rubber Company, but all competition in the future, not only from that company which had previously been selling that station but from any other manufacturer of tires or comparable products subject to these agreements as well.

[fol. 2056] Then we have the testimony of Mr. Willard Snow on page 618 of the record. He was a sales representative for the Kelly-Springfield Tire Company at Salt Lake, and his testimony shows that he came to one of the outlets and met a Mr. Reynolds, and that was one of the Chevron outlets, and on page 618 of the record we find his testimony, that Mr. Reynolds said that the Kelly-Springfield tires should not be displayed in the same place, and where they would be in actual competition, competitivewise, with the Atlas products, and his quotation was, according to Mr. Snow, and this was not disputed in the record:

> "We do not permit a Chevron station handling Atlas products to handle other than Atlas products, or we will take their franchise away from them."

Of course, we submit that whether they can take their franchise away or not is immaterial, because the contracts in this case do contain cancellation clauses, and, of course, it is not necessary to give the dealers any reason of any kind as to why the contract is canceled when the company desires to cancel. Of course, the same privilege exists in the dealer, perhaps; but I submit that the situation is not on a comparable basis from the point of view of having a right to a reason for cancellation, if the dealer desires to continue to operate that outlet under circumstances that are otherwise satisfactory.

[fol. 2057] Then we have the testimony of Mr. Emerson, a former Standard Oil employee for a number of years on automotive accessories. Your Honor will recall that he took over a Chevron station, operated it for several years, and then finally resigned to go into the business of selling wax and polishes for automobile accessories. But while he was getting ready to leave, the testimony shows at page 942 of the record that he had stocked a large number of competitive items, including some fan belts manufactured by the Gates Manufacturing Company, and that Mr. Krisel looked over the stock of Gates' belts that Mr. Emerson had, which was rather large, and told Mr. Emerson, "You will have to get rid of those Gates belts before the new owner comes in."

Well, of course, he got rid of them. That, again, is of import, your Honor, only in showing that under these contracts it did operate to exclude all competition from this market.

Now, the fact that Standard Oil Company said that during the war period they permitted the dealers to purchase products and accessories from other sources we submit is in no way relevant to this case. And if that were the fact, then, of course, Standard should not object to having a decree entered in this case, in accordance with the Government's request, opening up this market to competition, because that is all the government is asking in this suit. But, [fol. 2058] of course, when business became better and Standard was then in a position to furnish tires, tubes and batteries and accessories to these dealers who had previously been able to go out and buy competitively where they could get it, and could perhaps be sold competitively on the theory that the sellers or manufacturers of competitive products would continue to have their business when times got better, when there were more products on the market, but those dealers were told that the time had come for them to cease buying from pie wagons, as they were called, and to take Atlas products. Well, that is but natural, and I say that because the contract gives them that right. These are exclusive requirement contracts in practically all phases of the business that is involved here, and the provisions that I mentioned at the outset in these contracts gives Standard the right to temporarily waive, or, I do not mean gives them the right, but it clearly provides if they do waive these provisions, as they did perhaps during the war out of necessity because they couldn't supply them themselves, why, they could reinstate them, and they did reinstate the requirements' provision at their option and pleasure. The power is there at all times under these contracts, your Honor, to determine from whom these dealers shall buy.

Now, the defendants perhaps will argue that this does not apply to automotive accessories other than tires, tubes [fol. 2059] and batteries. I think the testimony here shows from one of the Standard witnesses, on cross examination, that until two months ago or since about two months ago that Standard would not sell any automotive accessories to any dealer unless he signed a TBA contract. In other words, if they wanted any accessories from Standard, even though this TBA contract purports to give them the privilege of buying elsewhere, nevertheless they couldn't get them unless they signed up on the full line enforcing contract, namely, the TBA contract, which required them to purchase all of their tires, tubes and batteries from them, and then had this other provision in it that made it optional with Standard at its pleasure to supply them with such other accessories as the dealers might have occasion to want from or through Standard.

Well, that is as broad as it is long, in our opinion, and that is typical of a tie-in requirement such as in the contract which your Honor has mentioned, insofar as the automotive accessories are concerned as distinguished from tires, tubes and batteries, and that provision falls along with the rest of the provisions in this contract.

In any event, in the relief which the government is asking for in this case, assuming your Honor holds the rest of these contract provisions illegal, certainly the defendants could have no objections to making it clear to the dealer [fol. 2060] that this provision means that they can purchase these accessories elsewhere from any competitive sources, if they care to do so, at any time, without any tie-in requirement or any bonus tie-in requirement of the types that have been submitted in evidence.

The Court: In other words, they put them on a voluntary basis, like the restrictive covenants of which the court spoke recently?

Mr. Dixon: The Supreme Court.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Dixon: I think your Honor clearly understands the purpose of this suit is to open up this market which we claim has been restricted or, rather, that Standard has monopolized through these contracts.

Now, some of the media of accomplishing this, while it isn't perhaps too important to this case, nevertheless, some of the means are described in the complaint, in what we have referred to frequently as financial inducements. Some exhibits have been put in evidence concerning that type of practice. I am not going to go into them, but they are Exhibits 16 through 22, which are illustrative of this sort of thing. But referring to one of those exhibits, for example, Exhibit 16, it shows a case where $4,000 was loaned supposedly to the dealer to construct a service station, and a mortgage note was given back by the dealer to the Stand-[fol. 2061] ard Oil Company, payable in a certain percentage, or $20.83 per month, without interest. That is Exhibit 16-E, but accompanying that exhibit or mortgage and mortgage note was Exhibit 16-F, a letter of confirmation and waiver, under date of April 10, 1945, which provided that if the sublease remains in full force and effect during its term, and all rental due thereon is paid, Standard agrees to cancel the promissory note and surrender it and release the mortgage.

In other words, your Honor, this is perhaps another example of the way in which the contracts are tied in and the dealers are obligated, and inducements are given to them to comply with the contracts. So that, if there was any violation of the contract resulting in the cancellation of the lease and, of course, the lease would have such a provision, as shown by the exhibits, then the dealer would lose the $4,000 supposedly loaned to him under the non-interest-bearing type of arrangement, but if he went through all the way, then the property represented by the $4,000 loan to construct the service station became the property, in fact, of the dealer on the expiration of the lease.

Now I want to just briefly discuss a couple of the exhibits of the defendants, and then I am through, your Honor. Your Honor will recall that we had or that there was submitted in evidence Exhibits V and Y, which dealt [fol. 2062] with the so-called competitive service station report or analysis covering the Los Angeles Basin Area and the San Francisco Bay Area. I think I pointed out that these exhibits, which purport to cover Chevron and Standard Stations in those areas, and the percentage of the gasoline which they enjoy in that area, covered 454 of the Standard Oil outlets, I mean of their total outlets, and only 363 of the dealer outlets. There are 1,063 Standard-operated stations, and there are 5,939 dealer outlets. So at the outset, if your Honor feels that they have any relevancy at all, we submit that they do not have, but if your Honor feels they do, we then suggest that they are not, first, illustrative of the market that is involved in this case, and we are dealing here with the market of the Chevron dealer, and this document deals only with, or, these two exhibits deal only with 363 Chevron dealers, or approximately a little over five per cent of the total number of outlets we are talking about in this case. But if your Honor should still feel that nevertheless is immaterial, we direct to your Honor's attention the figures in these exhibits. The total gallonage sold through the Chevron dealers on these exhibits on a monthly basis is 39,425,855 gallons. Mr. Travis testified on page 1,232 of the record that these figures were on a monthly basis. Now, on an annual basis, then, the total gallonage of the Chevron dealers in the San [fol. 2063] Francisco Bay and the Los Angeles Basin Area, multiplying the monthly figure of 39,425,855 gallons by 12 would be 470,110,260 gallons for the San Francisco Bay and the Los Angeles Basin Area for the year 1946, or for the year in which this was taken.

Now, if your Honor then will compare that with Government's Exhibit 9, which shows the total amount of gasoline sold by Standard to dealers, it will show 135,455,124 gallons for the entire State of California. So there is a discrepancy between these figures on these exhibits of over 334,655,136 gallons.

Now, we suggest, as I said, that these exhibits are of no import to begin with; and are irrelevant and immaterial. But if they are to be regarded by your Honor, we submit that on the testimony of this record they do not furnish the basis of any factual finding that this court may make on any phase of the case that may depend for its basing or foundation on these two exhibits.

Now, coming to these other exhibits, the type of exhibit Z, and related exhibits, that were made by Mr. Dern, or concerning which he testified, I want to point out that in connection with those exhibits the estimates or these trend charts, so-called, that were prepared by Mr. Dern took the total gallonage figures from all sources, the taxable gallonage of the states in most instances, as a base for determin[fol. 2064] ing the percentages of Standard's gasoline for the purpose of making these trend charts that were put in evidence, and that he testified on page 1252 of the record that the gallonage included in these State totals which does not pass through retail outlets would be gasoline that went to industrial plants, or commercial establishments, or to agriculture, or something of that kind, and that his answer on page 1253 is, "Provided that is taxable, yes."

[fol. 2065] If we are to have any comparison here or anything at all to be drawn from these charts, your Honor, showing the trend, we submit that you must have a reliable comparison between a known factor, at least, and another known factor, not based upon all of the gallonage which is taxable in that state, but that the only test that can be made from a point of view of comparing the two, namely, the amount of gasoline sold by Standard through its outlets, company-owned or Chevron dealer outlets, with the total amount sold through all retail outlets would be to have that fact disclosed in the record, and that did not appear; but, rather, the figures upon which these trends have been based in part, at least, are figures which relate to the total amount of taxable gasoline sold in the area, which includes industrial gasolines not sold, obviously, through retail outlets.

We are commenting only upon these two exhibits, feeling, as we do, that they are irrelevant and immaterial, but we are pausing only to point out that if your Honor still feels that they merit consideration in any view of the case which your Honor ultimately takes here, that there are certain factors in connection with these exhibits that we suggest make them unreliable from the point of view of being any basis for any ultimate findings of fact which your Honor may make in this case upon any issue of fact involved.

I think, your Honor, that I have come to a good stopping [fol. 2066-2067] place and I am ready to call it quits for our argument in chief for the day.

The Court: You have concluded your opening argument?

Mr. Dixon: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: You will have the close, of course.

Mr. Dixon: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: All right. We will take, gentlemen, our adjournment to the regular hour in the morning, and I shall adjust the time tomorrow depending upon the progress we make.

(Whereupon, a recess was taken until 10:00 o'clock a.m. of the following day, Thursday, May 27, 1948.)

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANTS

The Court: Proceed, gentlemen.

Mr. Hall: May it please the court: Counsel in his opening argument yesterday has referred to the contract said to be involved in this case. We may at the outset properly remove from consideration the distributor's agreement, which is Exhibit 2. Government's Exhibit 6 shows that the use of that agreement was discontinued in September, 1944; that in March of 1947 there were 556 of those agreements outstanding, and that as of a later date, a more recent date, the number has been reduced to 232. So that the authorities cited on page 2 of our brief are applicable to the effect that where a practice has been abandoned before suit is instituted, and there is no showing of any probability that the practice will be resumed, there can be no injunction with respect to such practice. And certainly in this case there is no showing in the evidence that there is any purpose or intent or probability that the distributor's agreement will be put back in use.

This case involves certain separate categories of products, and it will be our contention that the effect of the contracts must be ascertained with respect to those separate products: first, gasoline; second, lubricating oil and other petroleum products like greases; third, tires; and [fol. 2071] fourth, accessories.

Before proceeding with the main argument, it may also be proper to point out that the Standard Stations, that is, the company-operated stations are not involved in this suit. I think that fact is well understood.

The Court: I think Mr. Dixon so stated.

Mr. Hall: The reason that I mention that, your Honor, is that Mr. Dixon referred to 7,000 retail outlets. He could have referred to 7,000 only if he had included the Standard Stations, the company-operated stations.

The Court: Well, he gave that list, and as he gave it, I took them down in order, one, two, three, four, and five, and they didn't cover, as I understood them, the employee-operated stations, because in the order given No. 1 was dealer agreements, No. 2 was distributor agreements, No. 3 was petroleum products and equipment agreement, No. 4 was TBA, and No. 5 was subleases, and the figure he gave was some 7100 covering these five categories, and I didn't remember the inclusion among them of any company-operated stations.

Mr. Hall: I am sure he did not intend to include them, but his figure of 7,000 would include the company-operated stations, and it included also the open accounts, which, I take it, are not involved in this proceeding because with respect to the open accounts, there were no contracts or [fol. 2072] leases of any character whatever. So it is much more proper to use a figure of 5,000 as the number of outlets involved than it is to use a figure of 7,000.

Now, the government——

The Court: Let me ask you this before you go on, so that we will agree on figures. Government's Exhibit 6 has under item A, as a total of leases, subleases, dealer agreements, dealer agreements TBA, and petroleum products agreements outstanding as of March 12, 1947,——

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: And that total was 10,533.

Mr. Hall: Those are the agreements outstanding, your Honor,——

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hall: But your Honor will recall that in the case of a given service station, there might be more than one agreement. There may be a lease and there may be a dealer agreement, or there may be a sublease and a petroleum products and equipment agreement.

The Court: What is there in statistical form that gives the correct number?

[fol. 2073] Mr. Hall: Before I leave this Exhibit 6, your Honor, if it is before you, may I point this out? Have you Exhibit 6 before you?

The Court: Yes; that is what I was looking at.

Mr. Hall: On the first page of the exhibit that is the number of documents outstanding, but the first document referred to, the lease, the lease has no bearing whatever upon this case because that is the lease under which Standard Oil Company acquires the property as lessee. It is not the lease made with the dealer. So that the top horizontal row of figures on that exhibit should be eliminated if you desire the entire number of documents outstanding.

Now, if your Honor will turn to Item C in that exhibit—no; Item D in that exhibit, you will see there a recapitulation of the number of stations involved; and your Honor will see that the stations that have leases or contracts are shown on the first page of Item D and that the total was—it has not been totaled on that exhibit—but the total is 5,197. Those are the stations that have either subleases or agreements of some kind.

Then, on the next page, page 6, your Honor will see the open accounts listed, 742 of those; and following that your Honor will see the number of Standard Stations listed, 1063.

The Court: That is right. 5,197, let us take that. I am interested in those.

[fol. 2074] Mr. Hall: The total of page 5 on that exhibit, your Honor, of the right-hand vertical column, is 5,197.

The Court: What total is that?

Mr. Hall: That is page 5, the right-hand column, that total.

The Court: The last one, the total?

Mr. Hall: Yes, 5,197; and that is the number of stations involved that have some leases or agreements.

The Court: All right. His correct total, as I added it up while he was giving the figures, was 7,145, and, as listed under these three groups which he gave: Dealer agreements, 1,556; distributor agreements, 556; petroleum products and equipment agreements, 912; dealer agreements TBA, 2,221; and sublease agreements, 1,800. Those are the figures I took from yesterday, which correspond to page 1.

Mr. Hall: I assume that he gave those figures as the number of agreements and leases outstanding.

The Court: Outstanding as of March 12th.

Mr. Hall: But that is not the number of service stations, because there was a doubling up, your Honor, or a tripling up.

The Court: I see. I am glad you called that to my attention because I did not get that distinction from the list he disclosed.

Mr. Hall: At any rate it is all in Government's Exhibit 6.

[fol. 2075] The Court: All in Government's Exhibit 6; all right.

Mr. Hall: The Government's position has been clarified yesterday—clarified in a way that I thought, as I think your Honor thought, was a departure from any expression of their previous opinion, and that is, that the Government now makes the contention or makes the concession, rather, that the contracts are perfectly legal unless their effect is a violation of the Statute.

Now, the Government's theory as announced by Mr. Dixon is that competition is shut away from the 5,000 outlets with which Standard has contracts. These outlets, say the Government, are a substantial market from which competitors are barred. From this Mr. Dixon concludes that there has been an unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act and a substantial lessening of competition or tendency to create monopoly under the Clayton Act.

Mr. Dixon says that we may not go beyond this and see what the competitive situation was in fact. It is enough, says Mr. Dixon, that the outlets were substantial in number and that Standard marketed a large volume of products through those outlets. He mentions the figure $67,000,000, and it will appear that that figure represents 80 per cent gasoline.

Mr. Dixon says that we should not be permitted to inquire as to the total outlets in the area beyond what sells the products of Standard; that we should not be permitted [fol. 2076] to inquire as to the number of competitors in the area; that we should not be permitted to inquire as to the volume sold by competitors in the area; and that we should not be permitted to inquire whether competitors compete in the area by means of the very practices which, in the case of Standard, are condemned: All that area is blank, says Mr. Dixon. We may not trespass upon that area. We must look simply at the stations that sell Standard products.

This theory, I submit to your Honor, is a misinterpretation of the Act of Congress and a misinterpretation of the meaning given the Act of Congress by the courts.

If this theory is correct, that is, that Standard has monopolized 5,000 outlets, then why didn't they bring suit under the monopoly section of the Sherman Act?

If this theory is correct, why the introduction of volumes of testimony during the first three weeks of the trial?

Let us examine this theory now and consider, first, Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The case cited here, the Sherman Act case which counsel relies primarily upon, is the Yellow Cab case. Counsel himself very frankly says that this case is a departure from prior cases. I do not emphasize that, but I want to consider the Yellow Cab case and to point out the very marked distinction between that case and the case at bar.

In the Yellow Cab case, a Michigan corporation manufac- [fol. 2077] turing taxicabs, having stock ownership in cab-operating companies in Chicago, conspired with such cab-operating companies to the end that they would buy all their cabs from the Michigan corporation. It was shown conclusively—now, your Honor, and I want to emphasize this particularly—it was shown conclusively that the Chicago cab companies had a monopoly in Chicago because they held substantially all of the available cab licenses and the Chicago situation did not permit other licenses to be issued to other cab companies.

The case went up on the pleadings; there was no trial in the case; and in the pleadings that monopoly situation in Chicago is gone into with the utmost particularity. The result was that any cab manufacturer who wanted to sell cabs in Chicago was shut out by the conspiracy, for the conspiracy gave the Michigan corporation the exclusive right to sell cabs to the only cab purchaser in the entire Chicago area.

Now, I have said that this case went up on the pleadings. The court says in that case, and I quote very briefly:

"* * * The theory of the complaint,"——

And that is all the court had to go on was the complaint——

> "The theory of the complaint, to borrow language from United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57, is that 'dominating power' over the cab operating companies 'was not obtained by normal expansion to meet [fol. 2078] the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management, but deliberate, calculated purchase for control.
> "If that theory is borne out in this case by the evidence, coupled with proof of an undue restraint of interstate trade, a plain violation of the Act has occurred."

There is the meat of the Yellow Cab case—a complete monopoly in the Chicago area and preempting of that large area of the only purchaser for taxicabs. No other purchaser could have stepped into that area.

In our case, your Honor, it is not shown that the dealers to whom Standard sells its products have or can have anything approaching a virtual monopoly of the retail gasoline business in the seven western states.

[fol. 2079] They never could have since the potential outlets for the products involved in this case are practically unlimited.

We have in evidence an exhibit which indicates activity in the Long Beach area in July, 1947. Forty gasoline stations were under construction in that area, and not one of those stations were being constructed by Standard Oil Company of California.

If Section 1 of the Sherman Act is what the government is relying upon, clearly the Yellow Cab case is no basis for granting the government the relief it prays for.

Now, let's consider section 3 of the Clayton Act. Thereunder contracts are condemned only when their effect may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Counsel tries to apply language in the Yellow Cab decision to interpret the Clayton Act's language "to substantially lessen competition." Particularly, counsel points to the language in the Yellow Cab decision, reading as follows, and I quote:

> "It is enough if some appreciable part of interstate commerce is the subject of monopoly."

Now, the reason for the use of that language in the Yellow Cab decision is perfectly clear from reading the opinion. The court in the Yellow Cab decision said:

> "It follows that the complaint in this case is not defective for failure to allege that CCM has a monopoly [fol. 2080] with reference to the total number of taxicabs manufactured and sold in the United States."

There was the contention of counsel in the Yellow Cab case. They said to the government, "You must show a restraint extending over the entire taxicab buying business in the United States." And, naturally, the court said to the government, "You don't have to do that. You have shown a monopoly in the Chicago area. You have shown that this conspiracy preempted the only purchases in the Chicago area. There was nobody else in the Chicago area to which a competing manufacturer of taxicabs could have sold taxicabs, and when you have done that," says the court, "you have done enough, and all you have to do is to bring it into interstate commerce, and if it had an appreciable effect, that Chicago monopoly, if it had an appreciable effect upon interstate commerce, that is all you need to show."

Now, that is the language, nevertheless, which counsel tries to take out of that Sherman Act decision and apply to the vital language of the Clayton Act, which must govern a determination in this case,—substantially lessens competition.

This appreciable part of interstate commerce referred to in the Yellow Cab decision is a concept that has no relation whatever to our case. In the Yellow Cab case you [fol. 2081] started with a monopoly. If the monopoly appreciably affected interstate commerce, it came within the Act. In our case you do not start with a monopoly. The government had the burden of proving a monopoly, and the government can't raise itself by its bootstraps to accomplish that proof by applying this "appreciable part of interstate commerce" theory to the language of the Clayton Act which calls for a substantial lessening of competition.

But now let us look again at the language of section 3 of the Clayton Act.

The Court: Let me ask you this: Do I gather from your argument that you feel that a greater proof is necessary under the Clayton Act than would be necessary under the Sherman Act?

Mr. Hall: I am saying that this language of the Yellow Cab case, "an appreciable part of interstate commerce,"—that particular concept in that case cannot be applied in determining what is meant by the language "a substantial lessening of competition" in the Clayton Act.

The Court: Granting that the language was used in conjunction with the Sherman Act, the historical fact remains that the Clayton Act was aimed at practices which could not be reached under the Sherman Act, because under the Sherman Act the task of reasonableness required an actual resulting restraint, but under the Clayton Act contracts [fol. 2082] which had a tendency to achieve that result, that is, a contract resulting in the lessening of competition is covered, and the Supreme Court in the late cases has departed from the interpretation which governed in the past, and interpreted the word "may" to mean "probable" or "probability," such as the cases you cite in the brief to mean "possibility," a fact which has led the dissenting justices in the Morton Salt case to insist that they had repudiated the prior concept.

In other words, the point I am trying to grasp is this. To me it seems that less proof is required under the Clayton Act than is required under the Sherman Act; and here the charge is violation of both.

Mr. Hall: Yes. My argument was a little narrower than that, your Honor. I was protesting against the application of this language in the Yellow Cab case, namely, "appreciable part of interstate commerce" to an interpretation of what is meant by "substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly," as used in the Clayton Act.

I think an answer to your Honor's remarks or that argument addressed to your Honor's remarks will come a little bit later, because I agree with your Honor that as far as the broad standard of legality is concerned, the test under the Sherman Act may well be the test under the Clayton Act, except that the Clayton Act, as your Honor points out, [fol. 2083] was intended to reach practices in their incipiency.

The Court: That is right. In other words, my thought from reading the cases, and I have read and reread them since we have been trying this case, is this, that anything which in the end could be said to be an unreasonable restraint would be a practice which, in its beginning, would tend to a monopoly or substantial restraint. In other words, what would in its effect be punishable or be prohibited under the Sherman Act would, in its beginning, be prohibited under the Clayton Act, provided its effect is, let us say probable or possible, whatever term you choose.

Mr. Hall: I think that would be true, your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: Now, I have discussed, if I may recapitulate, section 1 of the Sherman Act and the Yellow Cab case.

Then let us look again at the language of section 3 of the Clayton Act. It does not say that the contracts were illegal if their effect was to shut competitors out of a substantial market. It says, rather, that the contracts were illegal if their effect was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. Some effect must be given, your Honor, to the language "substantially lessen competition." Some effect must be given to the language "in any line of commerce."

If Congress had intended to enact a law which would [fol. 2084] have forbidden contracts which had the effect of shutting competition out of a market, it would have said so. Instead it forbade contracts which have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

The government here has merely shown Standard's volume and the number of Standard's outlets. How can the government from this limited showing properly argue that there has been a substantial lessening of competition or a monopoly in any line of commerce?

During the trial your Honor remarked that this language "any line of commerce" is a broad and not a narrow term. We agree, and we have tried to develop our proof on that basis.

To determine whether there has been substantial lessening of competition in any line of commerce, it would seem that one should take a look at the overall competitive picture, that is, the line of commerce. To determine whether there is a tendency to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, it would seem that one should take a look at the competitive situation in the area said to be monopolized, that is, the line of commerce.

Now, the government says that the thing monopolized was not a line of commerce, but Standard's own dealer stations. Nothing else. Is that a line of commerce?

[fol. 2085] No case can be found where the contracts are perfectly legal, irrespective of their effect, and where the Act is held to have been violated simply on a showing that the contracts were with a large number of outlets handling a large volume.

The major fallacy of the government's case lies in the contention that competitors were shut out of a market because they couldn't sell merchandise to certain service stations. But that is not an exclusion from a market.

I want your Honor to note the absurdity that this contention leads to. I think your Honor may have had it in mind yesterday afternoon when the contention was made.

Suppose that Standard, or some other company, instead of contracting with dealers to buy their requirements, had contracted with 4,000 dealers to sell each dealer 2,000 gallons of gasoline a month over a period of one year. Would the government say that was unlawful? If they say that that is unlawful, then the commerce and industry of the country is at a standstill. No contention the government could make would be more disrupting to our system of free enterprise.

As a matter of fact, the contracts in the illustration I put would be perfectly legal. Yet in the case I have supposed, Standard's competitors would be shut out, to use the government's parlance, from a market embracing 96,000,000 [fol. 2086] gallons of gasoline. And I challenge the government to point out the line of demarcation between the case I have supposed, and the case at bar. And if they say that in the case that I have supposed, where each dealer was required by his contract to buy 2,000 gallons a month, that the dealer was also permitted to buy any excess amount that he might need from somebody else and that that relieves the situation, then my question to the government is this: Isn't it a fact that with respect to the 2,000 gallons a month, there has been a shutting out of competition, a shutting out amounting in one year's time to 96,000,000 gallons of gasoline?

That is the absurdity that the contention of the government leads to inevitably. That is the kind of precedent the government would like to have in this case.

Each one of the dealers that I refer to in my hypothetical case, having bought 2,000 gallons a month from Standard, had satisfied his requirements to the extent of 2,000 gallons per month, and nobody else in the world could sell him the gasoline to take the place of that 2,000 gallons.

What kind of a precedent is it that the government is seeking in this case? No case that they have cited, or no case that they can cite will show any parallel to what they contend for in this case.

Let us look for a moment at the Boro-Hall case. That is a case, your Honor, that is cited on page 14 of our brief.

[fol. 2087] The Court: Yes, I have it in mind.

Mr. Hall: It was a case——

The Court: I am familiar with it. I cited it myself in one of my opinions.

Mr. Hall: Then if your Honor is familiar with it, you will see how that decision would have been impossible under the government's contention.

Take the Pictorial Review case cited at page 63 of our brief. There is another case where the Pictorial Review, to use the government's parlance, was shut away from probably thousands of prospective purchasers. That case could not have been decided in that way under the government's contention.

The Pearsall case, which I called attention to in argument today, and which your Honor cited in his San Francisco opinion, could not have been decided the same way if the government's contention is the law of the land.

Under Section 3 of the Clayton Act the government cites the International Salt case, and I am not going to spend very much time on that case, because I have already referred to it in argument during the course of the trial. But I will just read again the language which is the heart of that case:

> "The appellant's patents confer a limited monopoly of the invention they reward. From them the appel- [fol. 2088] lant derives a right to restrain others from making, vending or using the patented machines. But the patents confer no right to restrain use of, or trade in, unpatented salt. By contracting to close this market for salt against competition, International has engaged in a restraint of trade for which its patents afford no immunity from the antitrust laws."

The patent confers a limited monopoly. The limitation of that monopoly may not be extended by a tie-in agreement. That is the International Salt case.

In the recent Morton Salt case the Commission had found that the Salt Company had discriminated in price between different purchasers of like grades and qualities of salt, in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act. Reversing an order of the Circuit Court of Appeals, setting aside the Commission's order, the Supreme Court held that the burden was on the company to show that the company's discount differentials were justified by cost savings under the Act, and the court found that such justification had not been made.

The contracts, therefore, in the Morton Salt case under the proof became illegal at once, when that justification was not made, because they forced one purchaser to pay more for his product than another purchaser, in violation of sec-[fol. 2089] tion 2 of the Clayton Act. Thus, the contracts under the proof in that case were illegal.

In our case the contracts are not illegal unless they unreasonably restrain interstate commerce, or unless their effect was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. And that is the very fact at issue here, and it is a question of fact.

[fol. 2090] In the Morton Salt case the court says in its opinion—I just want to read one sentence which I think is significant:

> "That respondent's quantity discounts did result in price differentials between competing purchasers sufficient to influence their resale price of salt was shown by the evidence."

No such attack upon the legality of the contracts at bar is possible. Under counsel's own theory the contracts of the case at bar become illegal only if their effect was to restrain or substantially lessen competition.

If counsel's theory is correct, how could it have been possible to reach the result that was reached in the Bausch & Lomb case, reported at 58, page 58 of our printed brief? There was a case that went up to the Supreme Court and was affirmed by a divided court. I believe Mr. Justice Jackson took no part in the decision. It is probable that it was decided when he was abroad. So it was affirmed by an equally divided court.

But in that case let us see what the facts were. Briefly, a manufacturer of lenses made a contract with Soft-Lite Lens Co., by which Bausch & Lomb agreed to manufacture all the pink tinted lenses required by Soft-Lite in its wholesale distribution of lenses and not to manufacture such lenses for anyone else and not to compete with Soft-Lite in the sale of such lenses. Those lenses were distributed [fol. 2091] through between 7,000 and 8,000 retail dealers in the United States. There is volume for you. There is a shutting out for you. And if counsel's theory is correct, the decision in the Bausch & Lomb case would have been impossible.

I have said, your Honor, that I think the test, the overall test of illegality, is much the same under the Sherman Act as it is under the Clayton Act with the exception that, as your Honor points out, under the Clayton Act the situation may, as the courts say, be reached in its incipiency. I have said as much in the printed brief we filed with your Honor. There I have quoted the International Shoe Co. case reported in 280 U. S., 291. There the court said:

> "In Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 282 Fed. 81, 87, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit applied the test to the Clayton Act which had theretofore been held applicable to the Sherman Act, namely, that the standard of legality was the absence or presence of prejudice to the public interest by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the due course of trade. * * *
> "'The great purpose of both statutes was to advance the public interest by securing fair opportunity for the play of the contending forces ordinarily engendered by an honest desire for gain.'"

There is one assumption that seems to have been indulged in this case that I would like to address myself to for a [fol. 2092] moment, and I don't know that the point has been mentioned before. We seem to have been assuming all along that these contracts that are here involved, these so-called requirements contracts, come within Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

Section 3 of the Clayton Act provides that it shall be unlawful to sell or contract to sell on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise of a competitor where they effect, etc.

Now, looking just at that language, do our contracts come within the Act?

We submit they do not. This language does not say and does not mean that a contract is unlawful where it is upon condition that the buyer will not deal in the goods of a competitor at a given spot. The prohibition is a prohibition against the contract where it is upon the condition that the buyer will not deal anywhere or at all in the goods of a competitor.

The prohibition of Section 3 of the Clayton Act is against a condition which forbids any dealing in the goods of a competitor in any event at all, not simply a condition which forbids a dealing in the goods of a competitor to a limited degree.

How else can you reconcile the Sinclair case referred to [fol. 2093] at page 65 of our printed brief, or the Pick case which your Honor has heretofore referred to?

Both these cases held there was no violation of law, yet in the Sinclair case the condition was that no competitor's gasoline should be sold through Sinclair pumps; and in the Pick case the condition was that no competitor's automobile parts should be used in the repair of Chevrolet cars.

If the thing forbidden by Section 3 of the Clayton Act is a condition that a competitor's goods shall not be dealt in at one place, although they may be dealt in at another place, then the Sinclair and the Pick cases were wrongly decided. To make this specific, the Sinclair case upheld a condition which forbade the sale of a competitor's gasoline at a given pump, the buyer being free to handle a competitor's gasoline elsewhere.

How, then, can a condition be unlawful which forbids a sale of a competitor's gasoline at a given station, the buyer being free to handle a competitor's gasoline across the street or next door or anywhere he pleases?

If Section 3 does not forbid the one, how can it be said to forbid the other?

And is counsel making a distinction between a service station property and a pump block? Clearly, the language of Section 3 does not make unlawful anything less than a condition which forbids the buyer from dealing in a com- [fol. 2094] petitor's goods anywhere or at all. Clearly, any other interpretation of the language of Section 3 would extend its prohibitions to absurdity.

As I have already pointed out, any contract for the sale of goods lessens competition to the extent that such a contract satisfies the buyer's wants. To that effect I have cited, I think, three cases at page 54 and subsequent pages in our printed brief.

Therefore, if the language of Section 3 is to be distorted so as to render invalid every contract which is conditional upon the understanding that the buyer will not in a certain instance or at a certain place or for a certain purpose buy the goods of a competitor, it renders invalid an appalling number of commercial and industrial contracts.

Section 3 must be taken to mean what it says—to forbid only contracts conditional upon the buyer not buying from the competitor at any time or at any place during the life of the contract.

Now, that is not what our contracts do; it is not what our sublease does. Our contracts are all limited to the requirements at a given place of business, and the same is true of the sublease.

Thus, I think, your Honor, we must discard counsel's theory and turn to the effects of the contracts, not the narrow effect on 5,000 dealer outlets, but the effect in the area [fol. 2095] selected by the Government when they brought this suit, the seven western states. And the question then is: Did the contracts unreasonably restrain commerce or have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in the petroleum products and the tires, tubes, and batteries dealt in in the commerce in that area?

Would your Honor consider a recess at this time?

(Short recess.)

The Court: Mr. Hall, before you proceed, I want to ask a question. I took these exhibits along with me and I got my notes all mixed up. I was not able to find what I wanted. I have found it now. I want to make just one observation to help clarify my own thoughts.

In this opinion in the Yellow Cab case, on page 226, the court used this language:

> "Nor can it be doubted that combinations and conspiracies of the type alleged in this case fall within the ban of the Sherman Act. By excluding"——

This is the significant language.

> "By excluding all cab manufacturers other than CCM from that part of the market represented by the cab operating companies under their control, the appellees effectively limit the outlets through which cabs may be sold in interstate commerce. Limitations of that nature have been condemned time and again as violative [fol. 2096] of the Act. Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1-18-19, and cases cited."

The reference to that decision is very significant to me in that, as I read it, I think the nucleus of the embryo of the decision in the Yellow Cab case is in the Associated Press case, and that case has a greater significance to me than the Yellow Cab case because in the Associated Press they were dealing with the effect of the individual contract, which, as you and I probably know better than the average legal person, because of our former association with newspapers, it made the Associated Press the sole owner of any local news gathered by the members.

So that the court there had as a factual basis, based on testimony, the proposition whether such individual restriction is, regardless of geography, just a limited outlet, within the scope of the prohibitions of the Sherman Act. And this is the language they used, and with that, I will yield to you, because my study of these cases since yesterday raises this interesting question as to whether the Government may not be correct, that we are confronted here with a deviation from the concept or from the criterion which the court established in the Pick and other cases. And this is what the court says, beginning at the bottom of page 18 of 326 U. S.:

> [fol. 2097] "The restraints on trade in news here were no less than those held to fall within the bars of the Sherman Act with reference to combinations to restrain trade outlets in the sale of tiles,"——

I am not going to cite cases. Citing Montague and Co. v. Lowry; or enameled ironware; or lumber; or women's clothes; or motion pictures.

> "Here as in the Fashion Originators' Guild case, supra, 465, 'the combination is in reality an extra-governmental agency, which prescribes rules for the regulation and restraint of interstate commerce, and provides extra-judicial tribunals for determination and punishment of violation, and thus "trenches upon the power of the national legislature and violates the statute" * * *.' By the restrictive By Laws each of the publishers in the combination has, in effect, 'surrendered himself completely to the control of the association,'"——

Those words are in quotations and they are a quotation from Anderson v. Ship Owners Assn., 272 U. S. 359, 362. Continuing:

> "in respect to the disposition of news in interstate commerce. Therefore this contractual restraint of interstate trade, 'designed in the interest of preventing competition' cannot be one of the 'normal and usual agreements in aid of trade and commerce which may [fol. 2098] be found not to be within the Act. * * * *'"

Again a quotation, quoting Eastern States Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, which, as far as I remember, is not cited by you in your brief. I do not know whether it is cited by the Government in the Government's brief.

Mr. Dixon: I think so, your Honor.

The Court: Which is a case that comes up repeatedly in the late cases.

So the question I am asking you is this: If you read the Yellow Cab case and the Associated Press case, are you not confronted there with the proposition that whether the court is dealing with a factual situation, admitted by the pleadings, which show exclusions from certain outlets, or whether the court is dealing with a factual situation developed at the trial in which findings were made by a lower court, it attempts to say that an agreement which closes a particular outlet to a supplier, if multiplied in sufficient numbers to come within the rule of substantiality or to affect an appreciable segment of the commerce within a particular area is unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act?

And isn't this conclusion also evidenced from the last sentence used on the page, where the court said:

> "It is further said that we reach our conclusion by application of the 'public utility' concept to the newspaper business. This is not correct. We merely hold [fol. 2099] that arrangements or combinations designed to stifle competition cannot be immunized by adopting a membership device accomplishing that purpose."

I assume the reference to a public utility is the reference to the dissents by Mr. Justice Roberts and Mr. Justice Murphy.

Mr. Hall: All right. Now, your Honor, I think that is a very pointed question. It ought to be answered very specifically.

In this Yellow Cab case, to adopt the parlance of the Government, it was a shutting out. See what the shutting out was, what the purchasers were who were preempted, let us say. They were the only purchasers in the entire Chicago area, the only possible purchasers in the entire Chicago area because of this license situation.

Let us look at the Associated Press case. There a newspaper trying to bring into a city and get this valuable service was barred. The franchises, as I recall, were exclusive for a city.

The Court: 50-mile radius.

Mr. Hall: Yes. There was a large area preempted and competition was barred.

Now, see what the Government wants to do in this case. [fol. 2100] The Court: Isn't that merely a question of degree? I warn you again I am asking pointed questions of you, just as I did yesterday of Mr. Dixon, to clarify my own thoughts. But doesn't your answer relate to a question of degree, ultimately, rather than——

Mr. Hall: No. I think it has to do with the element that is at the basis of all of this anti-trust legislation, and that is the preservation of competition.

Now, take our situation as illustrated by that Los Angeles survey. The figures show in the exhibit before your Honor that for every one Chevron station in the Los Angeles area there are 25 competitors. And there is no shutting out as there was in the cab case and in the Associated Press case, because in the cab case the municipal regulations limiting those licenses were such that you could not have any additional buyer spring up. In the Associated Press case you could not have an additional buyer spring up. But in our case the field for additional buyers is practically unlimited, as shown by our Long Beach survey, for example. Let me go one step further. Where are you going to draw the line, your Honor, without reaching an absurdity, if you adopt the Government's theory? Every contract restrains competition to a certain degree.

The Court: That is true.

Mr. Hall: I won't go into that argument, but that is the [fol. 2101] refutation in the final analysis of the Government's theory.

The Court: Well, but does not the Salt case, the Morton Salt case, postulate a situation where, in a quantitative basis, the effect upon a substantial outlet in that case, as Judge Rifkin's opinion shows 900 outlets and it did not aggregate $500,000, was considered both unreasonable and lessening of substantial competition, despite the fact that the buyer merely had the limit, and it was admitted and appears from the record that other competitors were in the same field. This is the language I refer to in Judge Rifkin's opinion, 6 F.R.D. 302.

> "In the light of these general principles the problem presented by the instant case must be decided. The defendant here urges the impropriety of summary judgment because of the presence of two triable issues, namely, (1) whether the Lixator and Saltomat leases do in fact substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in salt, and (2) whether the restraint of trade affected by these leases, if any, is an unreasonable restraint.
>
> "This contention is confronted by two possible answers. The first is that the conduct complained of is unlawful per se. (Citing Fashion Originators' Guild case.)
> [fol. 2102] "The other is that a restraint which affects 900 business units in a business aggregating $500,000 per annum is, without more, undue and unreasonable, and the lessening of competition, on its face, substantial."

[fol. 2103] Mr. Hall: Now, apply the reasonable concept to that decision, which I have tried to apply to the other two cases your Honor has cited. In that case you start with a patent monopoly. That patent monopoly excluded from the field all of the competitors by virtue of the patent. Nobody else could sell the machines put out by the Salt Company except the Salt Company. That created a complete monopoly, just as complete a monopoly as in the Yellow Cab case. That is with respect to the machines, and when you add to that monopoly a tie-in clause, tying in an unpatented material, you enlarge the scope of the monopoly. So that the matter of the substance does not play very much figure. You can come under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, which says where they tend to create a monopoly, and you can stop right there, and you do not need to talk about substantial lessening of competition because you have a monopoly, and whether there were 700 or 7,000 units does not make any difference whatever.

The Court: I want to interrupt you there. I want to get before you the first impression I got from a study of these cases and the references made, so that you will have an opportunity to present your views.

Mr. Hall: I want your Honor to do that.

The Court: That is why I have always said I prefer oral argument. I can't ask questions of a brief, but I can ask [fol. 2104] questions of the man who might write one. So with that interruption, you may continue with your argument, and if anything else occurs to me, I will state it. That is the only thing that occurred to me there. I might say that I stayed very late last night and did a lot of spade work for myself in going over some of the exhibits, and making notes, and checking some of the cases again.

Mr. Hall: I hope your Honor will also in your deliberations give thought to what I call the absurdity of the logical conclusion in the government's argument. If this theory of the government becomes a precedent, why, I don't know how many contracts all over the country it will affect,—definite supply contracts, your Honor.

The Court: I stand by what I said yesterday in the record, and that is if we were dealing with a single or even a multiple outlet situation, which is limited in scope, such as I illustrated by speaking of Sears, Roebuck & Company and Montgomery Ward, it would be carrying an argument to absurdity to contend that such an arrangement, limited in scope, would constitute a monopoly within it.

Mr. Dixon, in answer to that, practically conceded the proposition and said that the restraint of this character is only illegal if it affects a large number of outlets within an area and a large value in dollars of the business thereby controlled. I think I am stating correctly your position. [fol. 2105] Mr. Dixon: That is correct, your Honor.

The Court: I have not seen a transcript of your argument, but it is very clear in my mind, because I have been making notes all the time.

Certainly, gentlemen, I think you know me well enough to know that I have developed, as every judge must develop, the ability to jot down notes while I listen, so that if my head is lowered, do not think that I am not paying attention to what you are saying, because all of us have to do that. We can make notes and at the same time be fully aware of what you are saying, because the notes relate to what you say.

Mr. Hall: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Sometimes I notice, not you, but I was hearing a matter the other day and I just dropped my head; and counsel stopped because he wanted to be sure I was hearing what he was saying. I said, "I am listening to you. My ears are not hidden. My face may be directed to the paper which I am examining at the particular time, but I can hear you."

Mr. Hall: I also want to call attention to this situation: Suppose you have just one contract. Suppose you have a big corporation that is buying one item of its raw materials, and it makes a contract for a year for the delivery of large quantities of that material over the period of the [fol. 2106] year, and suppose that that material over a year amounts to $10,000,000. We have lots of contracts like that all over the country.

The Court: I think that has a different element. Let us assume, or, let us go back to the newspaper business, and this is a matter which you are all aware of. We know that there have been recent shortages in print paper and we know that while newspapers that have large resources and who had contracts over long periods of years, they have suffered from the shortage. We know that some of them have gone so far, as one of our local newspapers did, as buying an interest in a lumber mill so that they could have control over the pulp from which the paper is made.

Now, suppose that the "Los Angeles Times" has an agreement with a paper mill which it does not control, providing that they will buy within a certain period, not their requirements, but a specific amount which, in effect, would supply their needs.

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: There we have an agreement which only indirectly would exclude others, regardless of conditions.

Mr. Hall: Pardon me a moment there, your Honor.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hall: In that very case, your Honor, the "Times," is not going to buy a single pound of newsprint from another seller?

[fol. 2107] The Court: That is right. I am conceding that and I am postulating this point. You must bear in mind, however, that when I refer to a point like the one I made a minute ago, it was deliberately prepared in advance, but when I give you an illustration of this kind, I am thinking out loud and I am trying, within the limits of the situation, to state a case that embodies your argument within it, taking advantage of the situation and not eliminating any element. I am assuming that the result of this is to shut the market tight, and that Mr. Norman Chandler or the manager of the newspaper absolutely cannot be in the market for any paper from any other source, because under no circumstance will he need more.

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: That is a fair proposition.

Mr. Hall: A very fair proposition.

The Court: All right. Now, there you have what the old cases call an indirect effect on commerce, although writers and the Court itself has lately sought to get away from those terms, "direct" and "indirect," so far as their effect on commerce are concerned, and substitute other criteria.

Now, isn't there a difference between that and a situation where you do not buy in advance all you possibly need, and [fol. 2108] a situation like this, where, without fixing a definite amount, you give the supplier carte blanche and they say, "I agree to take all my requirements, and none others."

Isn't the second situation, where you agree to take all the requirements, a complete shut-out which leaves no possibility whatever of a supply from another source, while in the first situation, using the newspaper-print supply and using the "Los Angeles Times" as our guinea pig, there is a possibility that the source of supply through some reason might prove inadequate and the newspaper might buy either to supplement its supply or to lay in stock for future use,—a situation which actually developed in this case when, as we found, the supervising employees of Standard shut their eyes as to the fact that during the shortage tires, tubes and batteries from other sources were being sold through these exclusive outlets.

I don't know whether I have made myself clear. I have tried to indicate, or, rather, to question whether there isn't, I should say, a possibility in one case and a finality in the second, which excludes all possibility of trading with the particular individual?

Mr. Hall: I don't think there is any logical difference, your Honor, between the two situations. What Congress had in mind under the Clayton Act was a contract which substantially lessened competition or tended to create a mo[fol. 2109] nopoly, and unless the contract had that effect, then the contract was perfectly legal, whether it was a complete requirements contract, or whether it was a definite quantity contract.

Now, in citing the large type of definite quantity contracts that I did, I had in mind counsel's argument on that second part of the statute, the argument relating to the language of the statute "substantial quantity." And I say, adopting the parlance of counsel with reference to shutting out of the market, that with one contract and one buyer you may have an awful large quantity of goods shut out of the market.

The Court: The cases, not so much the antitrust cases, but the cases dealing with the other regulations of commerce, especially dealing with State regulations insofar as they affect the commerce clause, have evolved the concept that the effect there is indirect, while the other one is direct; and whether it is a theoretically correct distinction, it has been applied in many instances, and the courts have allowed restrictions where the effect be indirect and disallowed those where the effect is direct.

Mr. Hall: But I submit, your Honor, there the court was talking about the effect upon commerce, and not about the legality or non-legality of the thing which was said to affect commerce. That language "direct" and "indirect" has to do with the repercussions of the practice upon commerce.

[fol. 2110] The Court: But under the Sherman Act the effect, being an ingredient of the violation of the statute, we may consider in determining reasonableness or unreasonableness of the restraint, whether the consequence of an act is direct or indirect. Ultimately, the Supreme Court has said that they have not tried to lay down a definite rule under the Sherman Act as to what is or what is not unreasonable. To use a French expression, they practically say, "C'est selon,"—it is as the situation presents itself. And even before the Standard case, in the Dr. Pierce case, also decided in 1911, which as you remember was a suit between two pharmaceutical companies over a restriction of outlets or sale—I think Parke-Davis or Parke & Company were the defendants, and I don't have the case before me,—and that was even before the Standard case and they laid down the rule of reasonableness there, although it was in the same year, in determining whether a certain arrangement was or was not in violation of the Act.

I think I have it somewhere here. Yes, it is Dr. Miles Med. Co. v. Parke & Sons, and it is in 220 U. S. 73. It is a long opinion and the paragraph to which I refer is on page 406.

Go ahead with your argument.

Mr. Hall: Now, we come to the next inquiry, and that is the effect of the contract. We submit that the effect of [fol. 2111] these contracts was not to substantially lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly or to unreasonably restrain interstate commerce.

Now, that is a necessary inquiry because that is a necessary part of the statute, of both statutes. That, as your Honor has indicated, is a question of fact, and in the Carter Carburetor case in 112 Fed. (2d) it is said to be a question of fact for the court. I hope that in connection with that Carter Carburetor case your Honor will not overlook the footnote on pages 70 and 71 of my brief.

The Court: No, I haven't. I have your brief so marked up you wouldn't recognize it if you looked at it. I have been working on it. I began on that even long before the case began.

Now, which page are you talking about?

Mr. Hall: Page 70 and 71.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: Now, I come to this question of whether the government must show a probability that the contracts substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, or whether a mere possibility is enough. And I do not understand that the Morton Salt case changes the prior law which said that there must be a probability and not a mere possibility.

The Court: Well, the dissenting justices feel so.

[fol. 2112] Mr. Hall: The dissenting justices feel so, but with all deference to the dissenting justices, I would like to tell you the reason for my feeling, your Honor. The court says in that case:

> "* * * After a careful consideration of this provision of the Robinson-Patman Act, we have said that 'the statute does not require that the discriminations must in fact have harmed competition, but only that there is a reasonable possibility that they "may" have such an effect.'"

It cites then the Corn Products Co. case. Then it says this in a footnote:

> "This language"—the language I have just quoted—"is to be read also in the light of the following statement in the same case"—that is the Corn Products case—"discussing the meaning of section 2(a), as contained in the Robinson-Patman Act, in relation to Section 3 of the Clayton Act;"—

Then it quotes this language:

> "'It is to be observed that section 2(a) does not require a finding that the discriminations in price have in fact had an adverse effect on competition. The statute is designed to reach such discriminations "'in their incipiency,'" before the harm to competition is [fol. 2113] effected. It is enough that they "may" have the prescribed effect.'"

Citing the Standard Fashion Co. case:

> "'But as was held in the Standard Fashion case, supra, with respect to the like provisions of section 3 of the Clayton Act, prohibiting tying clause agreements, the effect of which "may be to substantially lessen competition," the use of the word "may" was not to prohibit discriminations having "the mere possibility" of these consequences, but to reach those which would probably have the defined effect on competition.'"

[fol. 2114] So, I take it, that that footnote at least reaffirms the previous rule of probability and not the rule of possibility with respect to Section 3 of the Clayton Act. But whether that be true or whether it be not true, we at least have this in the case at bar, and that is that we don't have to now sit down and take contracts which have not been tried out, which have not been in force, and speculate as to what their effect is going to be in the future, because we have in this case contracts that have been in use for a long, long time, and we can tell by experience what their effect is. We don't have to sit down at the outset and speculate about their possible effect or probable effect.

Now, next, let us consider the facts disclosed by the evidence to see whether plaintiff has satisfied this burden of proof. The burden of proof, as indicated in our brief, is that the plaintiff must show a definite showing of illegality. The language of the Supreme Court is "a definite factual showing of illegality." I said a moment ago that the contracts had been tried out; been in practice for a number of years. The testimony shows that prior to the year 1938 Standard had what, in general, is referred to as the agency, or, the lease and agency scheme. Then in 1938 these dealer agreements came into vogue with the company. In 1938 there were dealer agreements and there were authorized distributor agreements. Those authorized distributor agree-[fol. 2115] ments had gone back to 1934. Now, in 1944 those authorized distributor agreements were superseded by the dealer agreement TBA. That is conclusively shown by Government's Exhibit 6. So that after 1938 we have the dealer agreements—or, let me put it this way: between 1938 and 1944 we have the authorized distributor agreements and the dealer agreements. After 1944 we have the dealer agreements, and the dealer agreements TBA and the petroleum products and equipment agreements, the latter having come into the picture in 1944.

Now, a word as to the practice, as shown by the evidence, under those agreements and without agreements. It is shown by the evidence that Standard will sell gasoline to a dealer without any contract whatever, even though that dealer handles competitive oils, competitive greases, competitive tires, tubes and batteries, and that that practice has been going on for many years.

It is shown also by the evidence that without a contract

Standard will sell to a dealer its lubricating oil, even though that dealer handles a competitive brand of gasoline, or competitive tires, tubes and batteries, and that that practice has been going on for many years. Now, a dealer has his choice of a form of contract here. If a dealer wants to handle competitive tires, tubes and batteries, he can take a dealer agreement with Standard Oil Company, and he is [fol. 2116] then free to handle competitive tires, tubes and batteries; or, if he wants to handle the Atlas products or the accessories that Standard sells he can take a dealer agreement TBA. But he doesn't have to take a dealer agreement TBA. It is up to the dealer.

Let me mention in passing, and let me call your Honor's attention in passing to this fact, that those dealer agreements and those dealer agreements TBA are terminable—terminable by the dealer at the end of any six months period on 30 days notice.

The testimony shows that 25 per cent of Standard's outlets handle competitive lube oils, and the schedule which is Exhibit FFF, introduced in evidence yesterday, shows the competitive products handled by Chevron dealers who have a TBA agreement.

Now, I said a few minutes ago that these contracts are nothing new, and that they have been in force for a long period of time and used for a long period of time, so that we can determine what the effect of the contract is.

Now, your Honor, I am coming right back to that language of Section 3, the effect of contracts in actual practice. I am going to talk a little more about effect, but here is one effect illustrated by Defendants' Exhibit HH. It is a summary of other schedules, other schedules depicting graphs, which were put in evidence at the time Mr. Dern was on the stand.

[fol. 2117] Now, the gasoline graph showing Standard's quantities sold doesn't rise. If you take the period, 1931 to 1946, a period of 15 years, I say it doesn't rise. It is a wavy line, but the net result, as I read the graph, is that in the year 1947, because the graph was projected to 1947, what you may call Standard's proportion of available is less than it was in the year 1934, before the dealer agreement came into vogue.

Now, the same thing is true of these other graphs depicting Standard's position in the case of lubricating oils, tires and batteries.

Now, there hasn't been very much attack made upon these schedules. But before I come to that, let me call attention again to the Pearsall case.

[fol. 2118] In the opinion of the Pearsall case it is said:

> "It is interesting here to note that it was only five years previous that petitioner entered into this doubtless then well standardized business, in competition with many others, most of whom have arrangements with their jobbers more or less similar, and that in the face of this competition, in such brief time built up a business of about four million pounds for its last year. From this it may well appear that the similar practice by others in the same class did not result in stifling of competition and monopolizing the trade to the substantial or serious detriment of this recent entrant there. * * *"

There is an indication that the Courts of Appeals take the view that, in determining whether there has been substantial lessening of competition, you should look into the change in position of the company that is charged with stifling competition or monopolizing it.

The Court: May I interrupt here for a minute? I was going to mention this yesterday while Mr. Dixon was speaking. I think I will mention it now.

One difficulty is that in all of these matters, whether we are dealing with monopoly of patents or generally, there is to my mind a complete shifting of position with the high courts as to the effect of restrictive agreements.

[fol. 2119] To give you an illustration—Mr. Dixon will know that because he is appearing amicus curiae in a case of mine and has succeeded in convincing the Circuit Court of Appeals that I was wrong so far. There is a petition for rehearing in the Supreme Court and I trust it will be granted, because it will settle very important questions of law. I held, some years ago, that an exclusive licensing agreement which bound a licensee to manufacture and promote only the manufactured article was not against public policy as violating the Anti-Trust Acts. That question arose in a case I decided seven years ago, Kammerer v. McCullough. The case has been pending in the higher courts for that length of time and my decision upholding the patent is final. But new lawyers came in and got new ideas, so, for the first time, they raise the point that the contract was against public policy.

There was just one of those general allegations in the answer and in the cross-claim to that effect. However, no evidence was offered at the trial and I made no finding on the subject. In fact the findings were approved as to form by the losing side. Then things began to happen.

The question was raised in the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court first denied certiorio-ari and then granted it, and then having granted it they dismissed certiorio-ari on the ground that it should not have been granted in the first [fol. 2120] place, and sent the case back. The case went to the Circuit and the Circuit Court, instead of determining the matter on the basis of the record, sent it back to me to make findings. Then I made findings in which I held this was within the limit of the monopoly.

At that time the Trans-Wrap case had not come out, wherein the Trans-Wrap case held that the agreement of the licensee giving the licensor the full benefit of all the patent improvements was not a violation of the law, although the Supreme Court case in that case says it might be a violation of the Anti-Trust Act.

This is a preamble and I am doing it for your enlightenment because Mr. Dixon knows about it, because of his intervention in appearing as amicus curiae convinced the Supreme Court I was wrong. I want you to know the problem that confronts me and the average trial judge in a case in interpreting these laws and trying to formulate a decision on the basis of what I take to be a complete shifting of emphasis in the higher courts. Well, the case came back to me. The Circuit Court of Appeals, instead of determining the issue on the record, sent it back to me with the idea to hear evidence and make findings on this issue. I offered counsel an opportunity to introduce new evidence and he said he did not want to introduce new evidence; he relied upon the wording of the contract itself and upon the circum- [fol. 2121] stances they were in. I made very elaborate findings in which I held that this was not a restriction on commerce, was not against public policy as violating either of the Anti-Trust Acts; that, furthermore, it was a joint venture by the parties. The parties had pooled their patents with the idea of exploiting them and they were not excluding anybody else from the field, and that none of the cases relating to the use of the things patented applied because they were manufacturing this one only and they were giving their services only for this one. And I took the view that when two men enter into a joint venture of partnership they can agree that while this partnership is in existence, a man will promote only a certain tool. That was an oil tool.

So the case went to the Circuit and the Circuit Court of Appeals decided that the order I made was not an appealable order; that they ought to wait until the accounting, which had been held up for seven years, was completed, and then appeal from the final order.

Once more certiorari was asked of the Supreme Court and certiorari was granted. And then on certiorari the Supreme Court reversed the Circuit Court of Appeals and held that the order was an appealable order, but instead of deciding the case then upon the record which they had before them, they once more sent it back to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

[fol. 2122] With the beginning of the first petition, first, the main office and afterwards, Mr. Dixon—I am not criticizing him; I am just telling you the situation—Mr. Dixon, representing his department, the Anti-Trust division, appeared as amicus curiae in all these cases and filed briefs both before the Supreme Court and the Circuit Court. I do not know whether he participated in the oral argument but he participated in all these arguments, to contend that even a limited agreement between a patentee and a licensee which limits the licensee to the exploitation of that one tool is against public policy and in restraint of trade under this Act. And he succeeded in convincing two judges of the Court of Appeals that he was correct. But Judge Bone, former senator from Washington, wrote a very elaborate dissent, and the case is now before the Supreme Court on the petition for certiorari which has not yet been determined. I presume it will be determined before they recess.

I am pointing this incident out to show the trend in decisions which is brought about by the insistence of the Anti-Trust department, not only in their own cases in which they are concerned, but in other cases in which they are not concerned, in succeeding to establish before the courts a narrow concept which would exclude what we have been led to believe in the past were legitimate practices. And that is the problem which confronts us in every case that comes before us.

[fol. 2123] They intervened in that case as friends of the court. It was not an action brought under the Anti-Trust Laws. There were two actions tried: By law, first, on an action brought by the infringer—by the alleged infringer—I call him the infringer because I found he infringed the patent, and that decision is final but the losing parties in that case, the infringer, with the aid of the Government, has succeeded in convincing the Ninth Circuit, you see, that even in that kind of an action in which the public is not interested directly, where an admitted infringer was found by decree which has become final, can still deprive the patentee and his licensee of the benefits of their inventive genius upon the plea that the public policy was injuriously affected by that agreement, limited to two particular persons as to one tool, one particular tool.

Mr. Hall: I had noted, your Honor, in patent cases the trend that your Honor speaks of, but I had not noted it in other cases. It seemed to me that there was a disposition in patent cases to restrict more and more narrowly the statutory monopoly enjoyed by the patentee.

The Court: But it is not the restriction, it is the ground that they do it upon, because they refer to the concept of restriction of trade in the Anti-Trust cases in order to do it. And even in the Trans-Wrap case they say that while [fol. 2124] they are supporting the contract as being valid, it may be in violation of the anti-trust law, but they chose not to decide that but send it back. And constantly it pops up. Again the court raises the point, and I may illustrate it again by the Brown case. The Brown case is the raisin control case. I think I referred to it in the course of argument.

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: In the Brown case this situation arose: That was an action against a state officer to enjoin the raisin control under the California Marketing Act which was heard before a statutory court of three. Two of the judges held that the control interfered with interstate commerce; I held that it did not. The case went to the Supreme Court and during argument, there again the Anti-Trust division appears as friends of the court—no; they did not appear. The court asked the attorney general to appear in the case because the court raised this question: As to whether the control policy established by the State of California was not a violation of the Anti-Trust Law. Of course, there was a very perfect answer which neither the court nor the attorneys saw, that that was not the kind of case in which that question could arise. Because there are only three actions that can be instituted under the Anti-Trust Laws, two by the Government and one by a person—an action in equity [fol. 2125] like the present one, a criminal prosecution by the Government, and an action for treble damages by a person who is injured. That was none of those cases, therefore, the question of the validity or invalidity of the contract did not arise. It was a state affair and we were merely asked to stop the enforcement of a state statute, and the only ground upon which we could stop its enforcement is—not that it violated the Anti-Trust Law, but that it was unconstitutional. And nobody raised the question of the effect of the Anti-Trust Act. But at the hearing the Chief Justice raised the point and nobody was ready to answer it. Mr. Walter Bowers, representing the State of California, and the others did the best thing they could; they asked for time to prepare in the matter and the matter was set for the argument and the court requested the Anti-Trust division to appear and cover that phase of the case.

Personally, I think that question was not before the court and the mere fact that the court brought it in did not make it so. Nevertheless it was there and the court proceeded in the opinion to determine, first, that a state may be guilty of Anti-Trust violations if it sanctions the type of arrangement which resulted in restriction; and second, that in a particular case it did not matter.

Ultimately, my position was sustained so I ought not to [fol. 2126] complain. But what I am doing is to point out what to me is the fact, that the courts have become monopoly conscious and bring up the question of all sorts of cases whether the question is directly involved or whether the litigation is purely between private parties or not.

Mr. Hall: Would you entertain a motion to adjourn?

The Court: Yes; I was going to. You are at a stopping point and I just wanted to bring that out for whatever comment you desire.

Mr. Hall: I will try to think up a comment during the noon hour, your Honor.

The Court: Because these are the trends which you have to take into consideration where you consider a large body of law and decisions, which, unless you find a threat present, not to the community, but a dissonance, if I may use a musical term, just like in the realm of administrative law. Unless you start with the idea that there is no general body of administrative law, what administrative power be exercised depends upon the particular control and the particular administrative process established, you cannot find head or tail to these decisions. But once you start with the idea that the courts have said one thing when they are dealing with an administrative body, for instance, which controls the entry of aliens to the United States, and another one when you are dealing with what the Interior Depart- [fol: 2127] ment or the Commerce Department does in their own field, you see, then you can strike a body of decisions that throw law on the particular subject.

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: All right; 2:00 o'clock.

(Whereupon, a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock p.m. of the same day, Thursday, May 27, 1948.)

[fol. 2128] LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1948. 2:00 P. M.

The Court: Proceed.

Mr. Hall: If the court please, I mentioned this morning the graphs prepared by Mr. Dern. These graphs show a line which is called the Standard Supply Line. The graph is scaled or the line is scaled against what we have referred to as an industry total.

Now, in the case of gasoline, that industry total is based upon tax figures, and those tax figures include petroleum products other than those sold through service stations. In other words, the total, our industry total, includes within that total not only the retail total, but other products that do not go through a service station. However, Mr. Dern in his testimony, and it is uncontradicted, not once, but on three occasions pointed out that that industry total rose and fell in the same proportion as the total passing through the service stations. His testimony in that respect may be found at pages 1253, 1254 and 1278 of the transcript.

Some criticism seemed to be expressed in the cross-examination of Mr. Dern concerning his Oregon figures, and the government produced and marked in evidence Government's Exhibit 104, which shows this to be a fact, that considering the period expressed by Mr. Dern in his graph, the [fol. 2129] tax figures of Oregon prior to July 1, 1943 included not only gasoline, but distillate butane, propane, diesel and fuel oil; that after July 1, 1943 they did not include that.

I suppose the purpose of the government's showing was to indicate that our base figures had varied as relates to the period prior to July, 1943 and after July, 1943. But unfortunately for the government's contention, it proves just the opposite of what we would expect the government to wish to prove by that exhibit, for if your distillate butane, and what-not, had been included after July, 1943, the total base figure would have been that much larger and Standard Oil's retail sales would have been that much smaller in proportion, and your supply line would have come down that much more instead of going out.

Now, Standard's outlets have decreased in number over the years. Mr. McClanahan, the first witness called, the vice-president of Standard, testified that in 1938 or 1939 Standard had around 8500 retail outlets. He said there might be a margin of error there of 10 per cent, because he was speaking from recollection. The margin of error would bring it down to 7,650.

Now, then, at the present time the retail outlets, including the open accounts, come to about 6,000, so that there has been a loss—a loss—in accounts by Standard during a 10-year period of 2500 outlets, according to Mr. McClanahan, [fol. 2130] and that testimony is undisputed.

Your Honor will recall the testimony of Mr. Thompson that the company seeks as few outlets as is consistent with service to its customers, with service to its marketing area, —as few outlets as is possible in accordance with their balanced distribution scheme. That is perfectly reasonable and logical because nobody wants to multiply unnecessary outlets in an industry of this character.

Let us go a step further. Mr. Thompson testified, and it is undisputed in the record, that between 1931 and 1941 a ten-year period, Standard constructed only 8 per cent of the newly constructed service stations upon vacant sites, and that during the period 1942 to 1947 Standard's proportion of the new construction was only 8.7 per cent.

This I submit, your Honor, is very far from being evidence of a lessening in competition as a result of monopoly implemented by the contracts.

Now, the government called to the stand——

The Court: Let me ask you this question.

Mr. Hall: Yes, sir.

The Court: Do you concede that notwithstanding the decrease in the number of outlets that the dollar value of the sales has risen.

Mr. Hall: I am going to come to that right now, your Honor.

[fol. 2131] The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: I was just coming to that now.

The Court: Then I will give you credit for the thought, and I just anticipated your thought.

Mr. Hall: I was about to mention Mr. Daley. You will recall Mr. Daley, the F.B.I. witness, who was put on the stand, and he was put on the stand for the purpose of showing there had been a tremendous growth in Standard Oil sales.

Let me give you some figures, your Honor, that are really very interesting in that connection. Between 1936 and 1946, according to Mr. Daley, Standard's sales of gasoline increased 58.8 per cent—58.8 per cent. Your Honor, as shown by the figures produced by Mr. Dern, and his testimony appears at pages 1263 and 1264 of the transcript, according to the figures produced by Mr. Dern the increase in gasoline sales over the entire industry was 64.7 per cent. Standard Oil, 58.8 per cent; the industry figure, 64.7 per cent.

Now, Mr. Daley said that between——

The Court: Standard was what? Will you give me the figures again?

Mr. Hall: Standard's increase, 58.8 per cent; the industry increase, 64.7 per cent.

The Court: In what period was that?

[fol. 2132] Mr. Hall: 1936 to 1946.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: Now, Mr. Daley also drew a comparison between 1936 and 1947, and he said that Standard's gasoline sales increased during that period 89.4 per cent. The industry total increased during that same period 87 per cent.

Now, let's get down to lubricating oil. According to Mr. Daley, the government's witness, the increase there between 1936 and 1946 for Standard Oil Company was 62.9 per cent—62.9 per cent. The industry figures,—the industry volume of lube oil over that period, according to Mr. Dern's testimony at page 1264 of the transcript, increased 104.8 per cent—104.8 per cent. That is the industry increase.

Now, coming to batteries, the government's witness, Mr. Daley, testified that in one year, 1946 to 1947,—that in that one year period Standard's dollar volume of sales of batteries increased 90 per cent. That is dollar volume. But let us look at the number of units sold in that period, because the price of batteries may have increased, so dollar volume is misleading. Let us look at the actual number of articles sold during that period, 1946 to 1947, and Standard's increase was 46.5 per cent of units, and the industry sales increased 41.8 per cent of units.

Those are the only comparisons I can give your Honor because of the inability of Mr. Dern to obtain the industry [fol. 2133] total figures for 1947. But I think those comparisons show this, that it is very unfair to say that Standard Oil Company sold more goods over a period, unless you compare it with all its competitors, that is, compare it with the industry and see whether the entire industry wasn't selling more products in the same period.

Here is a point that I would like to emphasize particularly, and that is this: the government has not shown that Standard Oil's gasoline service stations preempted any area whatever. I think that is important in this case, your Honor. The government has shown the location of stations by states only. The government has not shown, and it is certainly not a fact, that Standard has preempted with its service stations any area whatever in the seven western states. In Chicago the defendants in the conspiracy case preempted an entire area, and there were no buyers in that area after they got done with the conspiracy that could buy from anybody else. But can the government in this case pick out Los Angeles County or Multnomah County in Oregon, or any other county or any other area in the seven western states, and say that we preempted that area? The fact of the matter is that our stations are surrounded in every area—in every area—by competitors, and by a multitude of competitors. That was the whole purport of Mr. Thompson's testimony with respect to balanced distribu-[fol. 2134] tion. We want to cover the area with as few stations as possible, for obvious reasons of economy.

Now, yesterday your Honor made a very significant statement—it was significant to me—and it had to do with the questioning of Mr. Thompson concerning Standard's dealer stations and the merit of sites, the merit of locations occupied by those dealer stations. Your Honor pointed out what is very clear in this case, that there is no evidence—here, again, there is a place where there is no evidence on the part of the government—there is no evidence that Standard preempted good station sites. There is no evidence that it is monopolizing the choice sites anywhere. In fact, the indications from Mr. Thompson's testimony is that the sites of some of the Chevron dealers are perhaps less favorably located than the company-operated stations.

But at any rate that point is a gap in the government's evidence. Standard does not monopolize given sites, the best sites, the most favorably-located sites, or anything of the sort.

How, then, can it be argued that the contracts lessened competition? Other stations freely compete with the stations of Standard Oil Company. If a motorist cannot find what he wants at one, he goes to another, and is that an unusual practice in the retail trade of the United States? Don't grocery stores and drug stores handle particular [fol. 2135] lines of products, and when the housewife goes to the drug store and she doesn't find the product for which she has a brand preference, doesn't she go to another drug store? And isn't that a universal practice on the part of the buying public?

[fol. 2136] Furthermore, the gasoline service station is a unique type of retail outlet in this respect, for the motorist is a mobile customer. He does not have to go to a parking area and park his car under the difficulties now that we all know prevail in Los Angeles city; he does not have to pick out a location near his home or his office. The things that he buys at a gasoline service station are bought in such manner that he can roll into the station and put them in or on the car and then roll out again. And that produces a mobile customer clientele for service stations which is unique in the retail trade of the country.

Standard finds itself in this western area confronted by powerful and aggressive competition. Let us see what that competition is and see what the record shows. Exhibit II—we are starting with gasoline, your Honor—Exhibit II: 80 companies listed here that marketed over 1,000,000 taxable gallons of gasoline in the seven western states. There are a lot more in the tax records that marketed less, but we pick only those out that marketed over a million gallons a year and there are 80 of those companies.

Turning to lubricating oil, Exhibit GGG, there we have 69 companies marketing their own brand of lubricating oil either manufactured or purchased; 69 companies competing with Standard for the sale to the public of lubricating oil.

We turn to tires and batteries. We have Mr. Thompson's [fol. 2137] testimony of yesterday, and I am reading from page 1484 of the transcript:

> "Q. BY MR. HALL: Is it generally true that competitive companies selling brands of gasoline in competition with the Standard promote the sale of tires, tubes, and batteries through their dealers?
>
> "A. They do. In fact a recent check we made of competitive practices indicated that there were 27 lines of tires and 28 lines of batteries promoted by our competitors to retail outlets.
>
> "Q. BY MR. HALL: That was, as I understood you, 27 separate brands of tires?
> "A. 27 separate brands of tires and 28 separate brands of batteries."

And of course that is confirmed, your Honor, by the Government's own witnesses. I asked witness after witness who and what his competition was, and we had innumerable brands of lubricating oil, tires and batteries referred to in the Government's own testimony. That is the competitive picture in which Standard finds itself.

Now, let us see a little about Standard's position in that picture. Mr. McClanahan testified that Standard's position, taking the seven western states overall, was as respects gasoline 12 to 14 per cent.

Let us take the most populous area of the whole seven [fol. 2138] states. That, if the court please, is shown in Exhibit V, the Los Angeles survey made by Mr. Travis. Well, Mr. Travis testified that Los Angeles was the biggest retail gasoline market in the country, if not in the world. If it is in the country, it probably is the biggest in the world. That they have more cars registered there than in four of these western states. And in that market, your Honor, the dealer stations of the Standard were 3.68 per cent of the total—an appalling monopoly, 3.68 per cent. And that is stations, your Honor; that is stations. And those stations were picked up by personal observation and counted. There can be no doubt about that figure.

The gallonage sold by Standard dealer stations in Los Angeles County was 2.45 per cent—an appalling monopoly position to occupy.

In San Francisco the percentage of dealer stations, according to Exhibit Y, Standard dealer stations, was 6.98 per cent; and those dealer stations in the San Francisco area handling Standard gasoline sold 5.52 per cent. That is not monopoly in anybody's language, if the court please.

As stated in the Boro Hall case which your Honor cited—yes; your Honor cited it in the San Francisco case—taking the plaintiff's affidavits on its motion at their face value, there can be no doubt that there was ample competition in the low-priced car field in Brooklyn. That is a factor; that [fol. 2139] is a factor in determining whether there has been a lessening of competition.

Ample competition. And those Los Angeles and San Francisco survey schedules are as informative as any piece of evidence in this case. In the Los Angeles area the minor and secondary companies had 47.15 per cent—47.15 per cent of the gasoline service stations and 43.60 per cent of the gallonage.

Counsel made a comment upon Mr. Travis' gallonage figures, and I think it was the Los Angeles survey, yesterday, that I think is wholly unjustified. Those figures are annual figures. Mr. Travis in referring to a monthly figure was referring to a monthly figure which was multiplied by 12 in order to arrive at an annual figure and, as I understand it, that was the purpose of counsel's cross examination, to try to show that the one month he had taken and multiplied by 12 was not a fair month; and we supplied counsel on the record, with the figures yesterday which show that that month was the fairest possible or average month and he never offers them in evidence.

Let us go a step farther, your Honor. These competitors of Standard Oil Company of California have been growing over a period of years. Let us see whether they grew faster than Standard Oil in their retail sales or whether they lagged behind the Standard. Just a few figures there I think are interesting.

[fol. 2140] According to Exhibit Z the gasoline sold by Standard through dealers during the period 1941 to 1946, the increase in the gasoline sold during that period was 26.8 per cent—26.8 per cent, the increase of Standard Oil Company.

Now, let us compare that with the figures of some of these other companies, and I am talking now about gasoline and I am talking about the period 1941 to 1946. Union Oil Company's increase during that period was 90 per cent; General Petroleum's increase during that period was 165 per cent; Associated Oil Company's increase during that period was 34 per cent. And I cannot give you, because the companies themselves did not furnish the information, the comparable figures for Richfield, Shell or Texas.

Now let us turn to lubricating oil. The increase in Standard's sales during that period 1941 to 1946 in lubricating oil, according to Exhibit AA, was 43.8 per cent—43.8 per cent. Let us carry that figure in mind and see what the increases of some of these other companies were. Union Oil, 98.2 per cent; General Petroleum, 174.9 per cent; Associated Oil, the Tide Water Associated, 54.8 per cent.

But, we do not need to stop there to show a growth in competition. Let us look at some of the Government's testimony. Mr. Ackerberg, he was a man interested in MacMillan lubricating oil, his testimony is at pages 221–223 of the transcript. In 1947, he says, MacMillan dispensed their—[fol. 2141] lube oil through 9,000 to 10,000 accounts in the seven western states. He says in 1946 it was not that high. A growth for MacMillan in the output of lubricating oil in a period of one year.

Let us look at the testimony of Mr. Beman, the president and general manager of the Pennzoil Company, pages 306–307 and 308 of the transcript. In 1916, Mr. Beman testified, Pennzoil was handled in this western area through 2,000 retail outlets. In 1946 10 (30) years later, according to Mr. Beman's testimony, Pennzoil was handled in the western area through 12,000 outlets—12,000 outlets for Pennzoil in the western area.

And Standard Oil Company of California, which is a far bigger company than Pennzoil, in the same area has 3,000 outlets.

Oh, these lubricating oil people testified to a lot of outlets, but let us see about one of the increases here. Here we have the Arthur Haven Company, wholesale dealers in auto supplies, selling tires, tubes, batteries, and miscellaneous accessories. Mr. Haven's testimony is at page 657-658 of the transcript. He says that in 1946 he sold to 3,500 service stations. A small distributor, handling about 10 per cent, handling his product through about 70 per cent as many outlets as Standard Oil Company has in the seven western states.

[fol. 2142] But that was 346, 3500 in '46. In 1947 the same outfit sold to approximately 7,000 separate stations in the western area.

I might go on, but I won't, your Honor, along this line to show volume and a tremendous number of outlets for all these people who sell lubricating oil, tires, tubes, and batteries.

I want to read just a very little bit from the opinion of the lower court in the Pick case because the opinion in the Supreme Court is very brief, as your Honor will recall. In the Pick case the court said, in the lower court—it is 80 Fed. (2d) 641, reading from page 644:

> "Furthermore, the record shows that competition in the sale of replacement parts for automobiles instead of growing less has substantially increased through the period during which the provisions complained of have been in force and, while it may be that competition would have increased more rapidly in the absence of such provisions, the trial court rightfully concluded that such was not the 'substantial lessening of competition' which the Clayton Act was designed to prevent. * * *"

Standard's competitors have pursued substantially the same practices to get hold of dealers as Standard itself has pursued. There are in evidence the contracts of certain [fol. 2143] of our principal competitors, and I am not going into that subject.

But here is a fact that indicates that this method of single-pump, single-line handling at a station is not unique with Standard. It is found in this fact: That out of a survey of the gasoline retail service stations in the seven western states 36,000 in number, only 577 or 1.6 per cent were found to have split pumps; in other words, found to be handling the products of more than one supplier.

The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and there is the proof. That is the system prevailing in the seven western states today. These schedules which principal competitors brought in show, as far as I can find out from those schedules, the total number of split-pump accounts that they serve, all six of them, was only 149 out of thousands of gasoline service station accounts.

Our principal competitors in their campaign to sell a dealer or get a dealer to contract with them certainly carry on business just as Standard Oil Company of California carries on business. Government's Exhibits 16 and 17 show that. In the one case, in the case of Exhibit 16, there was competition with respect to a dealer at Kanns, Utah, and there the exhibit itself shows that the Utah Oil and Refining Company was competing with Standard by the same means to try and get the dealer to sign a contract with it. And in [fol. 2144] Exhibit 17, The Texas Company was competing with Standard Oil Company of California for the patronage of a certain dealer.

Mr. Thompson on the witness stand, two days ago, testified that Standard's competitors in endeavoring to obtain the patronage of a dealer, make improvements for the dealer, offer additional equipment, and absorb rentals and make loans.

And here is an interesting bit from one of the Government's own witnesses. Mr. Winchester, the field representative of the Cezan Company, distributors for Dayton tires, testified that it was unusual for a dealer to have a Dayton tire franchise and still handle competing tires; that he knew of no companies in his territory in Southern California where the dealer got a Neon sign put up for him by Dayton where the dealer was handling competitive tires. Mr. Thompson on the witness stand was asked if from his observation and experience it was generally true that the dealer stations which handled the gasoline of Standard's principal competitors handled the lubricating oil put out by the company whose gasoline is sold at the station; and Mr. Thompson said that that was the uniform practice.

So Standard is confronted by powerful, by aggressive competition, and by numerous competitors. That building schedule that I referred to this morning in the Long Beach area is very informative. 40 new gasoline service stations [fol. 2145] being put up by Standard's competitors in an area where Standard was not at the time constructing a single Chevron station, and that is Exhibit UU.

Mr. McCall, who was a representative of Tide Water Associated Oil Company, was under cross examination by Mr. Dixon. Question to Mr. McCall:

> "Now, Mr. McCall, does your company ever endeavor to sell any gasoline to any Chevron dealer operated stations? Does your company solicit business of selling gasoline to any dealer operating a Chevron station?
>
> "A. Yes.
>
> "Q. Does it endeavor to sell it gasoline, is that correct?
>
> "A. We endeavor to take the whole station."

That is just what they endeavor to do. That is a part of the competition which, according to the Government's theory, has been lessened.

I submit, your Honor, that no case can be found at all comparable to this in which an injunction has been upheld under similar conditions or under comparable conditions. I submit that the principles which govern a court of equity must be applied in this case, and I know from your Honor's remarks that you are mindful of those principles.

Let me refer to one case on the equity feature, an anti- [fol. 2146] trust case which is not referred to in the brief, I believe, and that is DeBeers Consolidated Mines v. United States, 325 U. S. 212, at 218, where a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act was charged. The court in that case remarked that if it had jurisdiction, such jurisdiction must be exercised, and I quote: "according to the general principles which govern the granting of equitable relief."

And the court added that it had no different power than those traditionally exercised by courts of equity.

We have pleaded an equitable defense here. It is the fifth defense in our answer. We allude therein to the competitive situation, and I think it should appeal to a court of equity.

What happens? What happens if an injunction is granted against Standard Oil Company?

Overnight, overnight the competitors move in and by the time you can turn around the investment of years and the labor of years is dissipated.

I have pointed out already that the Government has the burden——

The Court: As long as you mention that, you know we have a way of avoiding that situation when it arises, in order not to deprive a defendant of the benefit of an appeal where the injunction is of such a character that, if allowed, the injury would be so great that regardless of the ultimate [fol. 2147] outcome of the case the damage could never be repaired, and that we sometimes do on our own motion.

I did that in a case, a very interesting and important case, involving a trademark, where I was asked to enjoin the Brooks Clothing Company from using the name "Brooks" in their name as a suit of Brooks Brothers Clothes, an old established firm.

Without any request on the part of counsel, having reached the conclusion that the use of the name "Brooks" was a violation, not only of the trademark rights of the plaintiff, but unfair competition, I provided that mandatory injunction should not issue pending the final determination of the case, and three months later, which I later extended to six months, with the result that when ultimately the case was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals and certiorari was denied by the Supreme Court, the company was placed in a position of readjusting its affairs by acquiring the name of another firm, very well established, Harris & Frank, and thus transition from one to the other was made without any harm to the company.

Mr. Hall: I think the difficulty goes deeper than that, your Honor.

The Court: I beg pardon?

Mr. Hall: I think the difficulty goes deeper than that.

The Court: Well, so long as you have mentioned that, I [fol. 2148] am showing that there are ways, if I should reach that conclusion, of forestalling any immediate harm until such a judgment becomes final. I am not anticipating it but so long as you are mentioning the harm that would flow incidentally from the effect of any such restriction, I have referred to the chancery powers which we have of avoiding them insofar as they can be avoided.

Mr. Hall: I have been talking only incidentally about the Government's failure of proof in this case—a failure of proof which becomes all the more conspicuous in view of the requirement of the law that the Government must make a factual showing of illegality. And I have already mentioned that the Government has not shown that Standard preempted through its dealer stations any specific area whatever; and I have already pointed out, in the second place, that Standard is not shown to have the favorable locations, the base locations, the most easily accessible locations. I have pointed out that there is no showing at all as to what Standard's locations are. They might be the worst of the lot, and I am sure from the gasoline picture, they are probably worse than the Union Oil Company locations and maybe one of the other companies.

But now let us take a little closer view of the Government's case and see what they have shown. Well, they have shown the nature of the contracts; they have shown the [fol. 2149] number of contracts outstanding, our contracts; they have shown the number of our service stations involved; and they have shown the quantities of products sold through Standard Oil dealers.

All right. On the lubricating oil and the tire, tube, and battery phase of the case the Government called quite a parade of witnesses. Distributors and salesmen in these commodities came in who said they had difficulty in selling to Standard dealers in certain cases, and the dealers found no fault with their competing products, and in a limited number of cases the dealer was interested in the competing products. Now, that is what they told the witness on the stand. It is not natural, it is just not common sense that a dealer is going to criticize a product of a salesman. That just starts a fight. So these dealers probably did not criticize products of others.

The dealer said that a few customers asked for competing products and, in a very few instances, the dealer intimated that he was interesting in handling competing products. Now, those were the dealers that were called.

The fact that customers asked for competing products proves nothing when you consider the market situation and the mobility of the customers. As I pointed out previously, in any retail store you may encounter the same failure to provide a brand conscious customer with the particular [fol. 2150] brand that he likes. The matter was brought to a sharp focus by the testimony of dealer Bryan, who testified that customers asked for 50 different brands of lubricating oils; and then in response to my question he said that it was quite true that if he filled up the yard of his station and the office and the lubricating room, he would still have people coming to his station, asking for brands that he did not have in stock.

Now, are these dealers supposed to be a cross-section of the dealers?

[fol. 2151] If they are, it is a cross-section that is no cross-section at all, because, of course, they are the hand-picked skimmings by the F.B.I. Four of the thirteen dealers called—or, only thirteen dealers out of the 5,000 were called; 13 out of 5,000. Four of them were ex-dealers, and of the remaining dealers three of them obviously gave testimony in favor of the defendant instead of in favor of the plaintiff. They were selected: four from San Francisco, five from the Los Angeles area, two from Nevada; one from Portola, California, and one from San Diego, California.

Now, in addition to the dealers there were 34 lubricating oil, tire, tube, battery and accessory executives and salesmen called, and those people in their testimony referred to 62 dealers. But three of those 62 dealers appeared in person. So all of the dealers heard from either in person from the witness stand or by hearsay from the mouth of a salesman were 72 out of a total of 5,939.

Is that substantial restraint, the kind of substantial restraint the statute talks about?

But let us get away from fractions and look at the overall picture. Has there been any showing of loss to a competitor of Standard's?

Your Honor knows that in most of these antitrust cases they bring in somebody who claims that the monopoly or conspiracy hurt him financially. Well, we haven't had any [fol. 2152] thing of that sort in this case. And I might quote the language of Chief Justice White in the Steel Corporation case, as applicable here. He said:

> "A situation is indeed singular, and we may wonder at it,—wonder that the despotism of the corporation, so baneful to the world in the representation of the government, did not produce protesting victims."

Let's see who the protesting victims might supposedly have been here. I am not going to talk about the salesmen who didn't make sales, but I am going to talk about their superior officers, the executives of the companies that might supposedly have come in and said, "We suffered financial loss."

That is Mr. Shidemantle, vice-president and general manager of Quaker—no, Mr. Beman, president and general manager of Pennzoil; Mr. Shearer, the head of Buck-Shearer Company, the Kendall distributor; Mr. Akerberg, the sales manager for MacMillan; Mr. Peck of Peck Brothers of Portland, a TBA distributor; Mr. Haven of Arthur A. Haven Company, wholesale auto supply company; Mr. Katzev, manager of the tire division of Ceazan Company, distributors of TBA; and Mr. Turner, the division manager of Dunlop Tire & Rubber Company at Los Angeles. None of them complained of being shut out of a market, and Mr. Beman testified that his market had [fol. 2153] jumped from 2,000 to 12,000 outlets. Not one of those people has told the court of financial losses suffered because of these nefarious practices of Standard and the other companies, followed without criticism from the government or any government official for over 18 years.

Now, the government contends that there has been a shutting out of the market, and that this is a substantial lessening of competition and an unreasonable restraint. But how can it be said that any restraint is unreasonable, or any lessening of competition is substantial, without knowing something about the market from which the competitor is said to have been excluded? There is no evidence whatever in our case showing the total number of outlets in the seven western states through which lubricating oil, tires, tubes and batteries and other accessories are sold, and I point that out, because the government has emphasized in this case lubricating oil, tires, tubes and batteries and accessories to the exclusion of gasoline.

Now, all we can infer from the evidence, your Honor, is that the outlets for those products are simply legion in number.

I have referred to the testimony of some of these lubricating oil companies: MacMillan, 10,000 accounts; Pennzoil, 8,000 to 12,000 accounts; Shidemantle testified that Quaker State sold between four and five thousand retail outlets [fol. 2154] in Los Angeles County and fourteen counties surrounding Sacramento; the Arthur Haven Company, which is not a large company, sold to approximately 7,000 accounts.

In other words, when you come to tires, tubes and batteries and accessories, the outlets for those are not only gasoline service stations, but they are people like, as your Honor can take judicial notice, the Western Auto Supply Company, who are tire houses, and people like Sears, Roebuck and Montgomery Ward with all their far-flung, widespread organization.

As Mr. Thompson testified, and he wasn't speaking about Standard Oil Company, but speaking about the industry generally, only 23 per cent of the people buy their tires at the same station where they buy their gasoline. That is just common practice.

Now, there is another element in this case which I want to emphasize because it is emphasized in the Pick case. In the Pick case, and again I am reading from the decision of the lower court because it is more complete than the decision by the Supreme Court, in 80 Fed. (2d) 641, reading from page 643, the court said:

> "* * * Defective parts,"—this is a part of the rationale of the Pick case, and I think it is important—"defective parts, preventing efficient operation of cars, bring dissatisfaction with the automobiles themselves. [fol. 2155] The natural result is blame of the manufacturer and consequent loss of sales.
> "The automobile is a complicated mechanism, the refined product of scientific engineering after long investigation, close competition, experiment, and practical experience. Replacement and repair parts must be of accurate measurement, appropriate, satisfactory material, and proper mechanical construction. Otherwise, disaster may result. Appellees insist with their dealers, therefore, that the latter shall not repair appellees' product with used or secondhand parts or with parts other than those manufactured by appellees, or for them under their specifications, for the express purpose of replacing parts in or repairing their product."

Now, thus, we have as one of the reasons at least for upholding the restriction in the Pick case this fact, that there should be protection to the good will and reputation of the products supplied to the dealer.

Now, apply this to our case. Standard's requirements contracts are a necessary part of a practice of long years standing, to protect the good will and reputation of Standard's products. And I think that everybody in the indus- [fol. 2156] try is going to say the same thing.

As pointed out in the Pick case, the automobile is a complicated mechanism. Damage to a person's automobile at a station operated by a Standard dealer inevitably impairs the good will and reputation of all Standard dealers and Standard products, just as they did in the Pick case.

Why, then, should Standard look with favor upon one of its dealers using for a customer's automobile lubricating oil which is not Standard's product, which Standard knows nothing about, and the selection and use of which is not explained in the Lubriguide which Standard furnishes to its dealers. And that "Lubriguide" if the court will recall the testimony, was geared not with reference to any lubricating oil, but with particular reference to the products of Standard Oil, as used in various makes of cars. If the oil or grease isn't what the car ought to have, then the car is injured and the customer isn't inclined to go back to a Standard dealer or to purchase Standard gasoline.

Now, isn't this exactly the point emphasized in the Pick case? It was held that to preserve good will of General Motors automobile, it was proper for the motor manufacturer to require dealers to not use in the repair of Chevrolet cars parts not manufactured by Chevrolet. Here it should be held that to preserve the good will of Standard's line of petroleum products, it is proper for Standard to require [fol. 2157] its dealers to use, in the servicing of automobiles, only petroleum products manufactured by Standard.

There has been no affirmative showing in this case that the contracts complained of lessened competition. A picture has been clearly shown of a company with many customers. These customers must be and are being provided for. To provide for them the company trains and aids its dealers, and spends for this purpose over a quarter of a million dollars annually. To provide for these customers, the company has made a capital investment of $16,500,000 in land and depreciable equipment alone, and spends over $1,000,000 a year in station painting.

The company does not seek more and more stations. Rather, it seeks as few stations as possible to serve its customers.

It would be strange if the company, called upon, as it is, to make these expenditures to meet competition and in the face of widespread and aggressive competition, did not seek the measure of security and stability afforded by these contracts. Only by the security and stability afforded by these contracts is it possible for the company to meet this competition and serve its customers.

The result is not a lessening of competition, but the natural result of honest and legitimate enterprise. No one is shut out of a market any more than would be true in [fol. 2158] the case of hundreds of thousands of contracts in force today all over the country by which the seller agrees to sell and the buyer agrees to buy commodities over a future period.

Dealers—dealers are not going to thank the government for its efforts in this case, if the government is successful. What does the dealer want particularly? Summed up in the testimony of the government's first witness, Mr. McClanahan, he testified, and I am reading the substance of his testimony only: Dealers themselves are not favorable to dividing their interests with suppliers for two reasons: they haven't the same merchandising opportunity from the supplier, and they haven't an assurance of supply. It is because there is no obligation on the part of the supplier to continue supplying a split pump account that such accounts have to a great extent ceased to exist.

Bear in mind that they used to have split pumps, and that they ceased to exist, not by reason of the contracts made by Standard Oil Company, but by a natural economic development, under which the dealers sought security, and that security is all the more vital to the dealer at the present time, with the prospect of a shortage of gasoline. The dealer in petroleum products has peculiar need for a requirements contract. It isn't a one-way street. He has no capacity to store, and even if he could store, he is a small [fol. 2159] operator who cannot ordinarily shoulder the burden of a large inventory. Yet he must have the assurance of a future supply and deliveries at frequent intervals over a period of time.

I wonder, your Honor, what socialistic scheme was hatched in the departments at Washington to foist upon the West Coast, and I think that the whole oil industry on the Coast would agree with that statement, that the government's plan here is nothing but pure, unadulterated socialism.

Let me read you from the opinion of Judge Leahy in the Cornfield Manufacturing Company case at 70 Fed. Supp. 477. It is an antitrust case, and this is 79 Fed. Supp. 477, reading from page 481:

> "* * * Looking at the reality of our economy, I have never seen a distributor of Ford automobiles, for example, also distribute a car of another competitor within the same price range, such as the Chevrolet; nor does McKesson & Robbins distribute the drug supplies of Parke-Davis; . . ."

This system of requirements contracts, the system that prevails on the West Coast today, is not anything new.

In the Standard Oil of New Jersey case, 47 Fed (2d) 288, I will read from page 300. That was the consolidation case in which the question of competition or lack of competition between two large units of the oil industry was a very [fol. 2160] important question. The judge says:

> "* * * In the initial stages, both of these products."—and he is talking about gasoline and lubricating oil. This is Judge Kimbrough Stone, and he goes into the history of the thing. —"In the initial stages, both of these products were furnished almost entirely by independent retailers, and such dealer might have either or both to offer the automobile customer. It was not unusual for such customer to get gasoline at one place and oil at another. The struggle for this trade made the pleasure of that customer worthwhile, and such pleasure and convenience soon directed that he be able to procure oil at the same place and time that he bought gasoline, and that distances be not too great between the places where he could procure them. A factor which aided this development was that, for the most part, the companies which made gasoline also made automobile lubricants, and the natural thing was to press the entire automobile line upon the retailer. The final step in this matter is that the refining companies have widely, rapidly, and increasingly established their own retail stations . . . at which they handle only gasoline and oils of their own manufac- [fol. 2161] ture. At present, this retail distribution is in the hands of independent retailers (such as garages and filling stations) and of company owned or controlled stations, with a pronounced tendency to carry a unified line by the independents, and with a decided tendency toward expansion of the company owned or controlled stations where only the products of the particular company are offered . . ."

The Court: I want to make this observation, and then I will take a recess to give you a breathing spell, and that is this: The position of the government, if sustained, would not necessarily result in a return to the practices which these cases say were unsatisfactory, and which were succeeded by these arrangements which aimed to limit the goods to be handled at a certain station.

Mr. Hall: We were not able to contradict that, your Honor, because that evidence was shut out. That is what we tried to show.

The Court: Because I do not think it is a question of proof or that it is a subject of proof. But if you are using these cases to show the origin of the rule, and to argue its salutary character, which is legitimate argument and which I have said was the proper subject of argument, despite the fact that specific evidence to show that effect I considered outside of the main proof, and much more so, as it was attempted to be shown by opinion testimony. [fol. 2162] Even the large group of cases which you cite in your brief beginning on page 45 with the "Restatement of Contracts," state that the right to deal with a person exclusively is limited, so far as the federal law is concerned, by the possible effect on commerce.

For instance, to illustrate that, on page 48 you cite the Excelsior Motor Manufacturing & Supply Co. v. Sound Equipment case, and where the court, while sustaining the exclusive dealer contract, said this:

> "It is difficult to believe that appellants are serious in arguing that the contract in suit violates the Clayton Act because it fixes a resale price and provides that Sound Equipment shall not deal in the products of any competitors. Such contracts violate the Clayton Act only if their effect is 'to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.'"

What the government seeks is the prevention of the mandatory effect of the clause. It does not seek and cannot by an injunction prevent a particular dealer from voluntarily continuing to get its products, and just as exclusively shutting out somebody else as before.

The position of the government is this, and I may be drawing conclusions—— [fol. 2163] Mr. Hall: Your Honor is drawing conclusions which would have been, I think, disproved if you had permitted us to pursue the line of inquiry I embarked upon yesterday.

The Court: I understand that. I merely am saying that we are speculating on the effect. What the government contends is this, that what they seek, and you will remember they stated that at the beginning when I for a moment, overlooked the particular prayer of the complaint and suggested that they sought to have me end the contractual relations, and Mr. Dixon then said that all they were seeking there was the elimination of these restrictive clauses.

Now, the question I am raising is this, that even the full position of the government does not necessarily stand in the way of the continuance of practices by all these stations, the practice of actually operating single pumps instead of split pumps, and the like.

Mr. Hall: Well, if we had been permitted to introduce that testimony, I believe we could have convinced your Honor that is not the correct point of view; that what the government seeks is this, is the socialism that they want to come right in on the Coast. That is the way the industry feels about it anyway.

The Court: I do not want to start an argument on that subject, and to characterize a thing in a certain way does not help us. As a fact, I think if one understands socialism [fol. 2164] right, they are in favor of concentration and not in favor of competition. Socialism aims at control and not at keeping competition alive. It aims at the concentration of the means of production, so that the State could take them over, and socialists, as I understand them, condemn anti-trust acts, the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, as unrealistic because, as they conceive it, the trend of modern industrialism is towards concentration rather than toward a maintenance of competition.

With that we will take a recess, and then we will go on from there.

(A short recess was taken.)

[fol. 2165] The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: At an earlier stage of the argument I said that the contracts were not a one-way-street. The Government apparently envisages a situation where the requirements clauses can be eliminated, leaving the contracts in full force and effect for the benefit of the dealer. Obviously, in a contract to buy and sell, if the obligation to buy is removed the consideration for the contract fails and that contract becomes a nullity. So that the net result of what the Government seeks is the nullification of the contract and, from the contract law, there can be no escape from that conclusion.

Your Honor has said that the doctrine of laches does not bar the Government, and while some doubt was expressed in the Southern Pacific case concerning that, I shall assume for the sake of my argument that that be true. But I just want to very briefly call attention to the situation which should appeal to any court of equity and which, in a civil case, would certainly constitute laches.

Here is a system of distribution which has not been criticized or attacked by the Department of Justice until the present time, or attacked by any other governmental body up to the present time. During that period Standard has spent in capital investment on its dealer outlets, land, and appreciable improvements $16,500,000. If the scheme which the Government seeks to foist upon the industry be-[fol. 2166] comes the prevalent scheme, you can see what will happen to a number of situations that have been shown in the testimony.

Let me give an illustration. We have a land owner who leases to Standard a site or a service station and in the lease Standard agrees to pay the landowner a rental computed upon the through-put of the station, all the gasoline sold at the station. Along comes the Government scheme and in go the split pumps, the pumps of other dealers. Many of Standard's contracts or subleases with the service station dealers provide for a gallonage rental. So that the dealer, instead of selling exclusively Standard gasoline, sells gasoline of A, B, and C and he pays Standard his rent, only a percentage upon the gasoline that goes through the Standard pump, not that goes through the whole station, whereas Standard has to pay its landlord a percentage based upon the entire through-put of the station, the gasoline going through every pump at the station.

That was brought out in the testimony of Mr. Thompson.

Now, a word as to accessories, and in using that term I am not talking about tires, tubes, or batteries.

The Court: We have accepted that differentiation now that your witnesses have produced. Those come outside of accessories. I do not know what you have called them, automobile supplies, I presume, automobile supplies.

Mr. Hall: There is nothing in any of our contracts, as [fol. 2167] pointed out at page 3 of our printed brief, which requires the dealer to buy accessories from Standard or which requires Standard to sell accessories to the dealer. I will take that back. I think the clause does require the company to sell to the dealer what the dealer requires, but there is certainly no obligation on the part of the dealer. That is all set out on page 3 of our printed brief.

I merely at this stage want to call attention to the fact that the testimony now supports that conclusion, that Standard never forced as a matter of practice, never required or forced its accessories upon a dealer; that it adopted a practical construction of that clause entirely in accordance with the argument that is made in my brief at page 3.

I am not going to speak about interstate commerce——

The Court: I think someone made that statement from the stand, because on one of the copies of the exhibits which I marked up I found the statement of a witness to the effect that, while as to the requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries Standard determined, especially when there were shortages, the quantity of the supplies, that as to accessories or the things which your witnesses called accessories, which include hub caps, fanbelts and the like, the choice of amounts, numbers, was up to the dealer to buy or not to buy it.

[fol. 2168] Mr. Hall: That is right.

The Court: Except, of course, as one of the men said, that he might try to point out to the dealer the desirability of buying the entire line from them instead of elsewhere.

Mr. Hall: And I mention that in view of the fact that, of course, your Honor will examine the effect of the contracts with respect to the various commodities that have been referred to in the evidence. First, with respect to gasoline; second, with respect to lube oil and grease; third, with respect to tires, tubes, and batteries; and fourth, with respect to accessories.

The evidence has got to be tested as to each of those commodities separately because of the language of the Statute.

The Court: In a case involving multiple commodities I do not think you have to split them up and assay each of them against the standard of criteria, especially where the sales are by the same concern.

Mr. Hall: That is quite contrary to the theory, I think, on which the case has been tried, your Honor.

The Court: The theory of the case is not determinative of the manner of assaying the evidence.

Mr. Hall: Well, let me put it——

The Court: The Government has at no time split it up and tried to show any particular restraint in a particular line. It has been the Government's contention that the en[fol. 2169] tire effect of the contract is to shut out any access of competitors to the particular outlets, without particularly segregating them. And, of course, in proving the case the Government resorted to individual witnesses merely because the Government did not have or could not find in the field a concern which furnished all these things in competition with them. That is the only splitting up that I see in the record.

Mr. Hall: Well, I make this point, that under the Statute we have got to look to the effect, the effect of the contract. The contract might have had one effect as to gasoline, it might have had an entirely different effect as to lubricating oil or as to batteries. The effect is the whole meat of the charge of illegality.

The Court: Well, the effect, however, is not upon a particular commodity; it is upon the line of commerce under the Clayton Act, and under the Sherman Act it is the effect in restraining trade.

The Sherman Act speaks of:

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared illegal: * * *"

And the Clayton Act says:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make [fol. 2170] a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise," and so forth and so on,

> "where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

And when you are dealing with one article, of course, the article is the commerce. Where you are dealing with a multiplicity of articles you have to consider the overall picture rather than split it up separately as to various commodities.

Mr. Hall: Yes, your Honor. But there might very well be a lessening of competition with respect to one of the articles and no lessening of competition with respect to another article.

The Court: That is true, but you cannot split the contract because the contract is inseparable. It is either the whole contract or it is a part only.

Mr. Hall: Oh, no.

The Court: I left my group of exhibits. Will you get them from the envelope?

Mr. Hall: What your Honor has just said is to say that there is no effect given to the statute which uses the word "effect."

[fol. 2171] The Court: The effect is of the contract.

Mr. Hall: Now, a contract can't be split, but what is forbidden here is the effect of the contract.

The Court: Well, but the effect of the contract is upon the restraint of commerce in a number of articles, not in the restraint of commerce upon one. You are saying I will have to split it and determine the effect as to each commodity. Your contract is a whole. The Statute speaks of it as a whole and the undertaking relates to more than one commodity.

Let us take Government's Exhibit 1, the dealer agreement.

> "Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called 'Company,' agrees to sell to (blank) hereinafter called 'Dealer,' and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at (blank). The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity."

In other words, the contract is a unit and provides for multiple articles.

Mr. Hall: Yes, your Honor; but the illegal thing is the effect of the contract.

[fol. 2172] The Court: Upon the commerce.

Mr. Hall: Upon the commodities. And while——

The Court: You are reading something into the wording of the Statute which is not there, I fear. It may be your interpretation, but the effect is upon the commerce, the commerce in the articles covered by the contract.

Mr. Hall: But it is a commerce in separate articles, your Honor. The commerce is in separate articles and it is perfectly conceivable that under the evidence there might be regarded to be a restraint, the effect might be a restraint with respect to one article and no restraint as to the commerce in the other article. As a matter of fact, there is a splitting up under the contracts. No one has to take one contract. There are several contracts there. The tires, tubes, and batteries, for example, do not appear in any contract except the TBA contract.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: On the question of interstate I shall be very brief because that is gone into at considerable length in our brief. But there is one feature that I do not want to neglect and that is this: It is a point suggested in that portion of your Honor's opinion in the Food and Grocery case which is reprinted at page 13 of our brief. The point is this: Your Honor cites Anderson v. United States. In Anderson [fol. 2173] v. United States the court said, 171 U. S. 604, at 615:

> "* * * 'Where the subject-matter of the agreement does not directly relate to and act upon and embrace interstate commerce, and where the undisputed facts clearly show that the purpose of the agreement was not to regulate, obstruct, or restrain that commerce, but that it was entered into with the object of properly and fairly regulating the transaction of the business in which the parties to the agreement were engaged, such agreement will be upheld as not within the Statute, where it can be seen that the character and terms of the agreement are well calculated to attain the purpose for which it was formed, and where the effect of its formation and enforcement upon interstate trade or commerce is, in any event, but indirect and incidental, and not its purpose or object.'"

The rule of evidence that I deduce from that case and other cases is this: That where the effect upon commerce is direct, the purpose or intent makes no difference; but that where the effect upon commerce is not direct, then a purpose and intent to burden the commerce must be shown.

That same thought is expressed as late as 1940 in the Apex Hosiery Co. case. The court there said, 310 U. S. 469, at 501:

> [fol. 2174] "Here it is plain that the combination or conspiracy did not have as its purpose restraint upon competition in the market for petitioner's product."

And again, reading at page 511——

The Court: Go ahead and I will ask you a question.

Mr. Hall:

> "And in speaking of intent as a prerequisite to liability under the Act where the restraint to interstate commerce is 'indirect' it meant no more than that the conspiracy or combination must be aimed at or directed at the kind of restraint which the Act prohibits or that such restraint is the natural and probable consequences of the conspiracy."

And there is considerably more authority to that effect. I might cite Industrial Association v. United States, 268 U. S. 64.

The Court: But aren't those all conspiracy cases, especially criminal conspiracy, where intent is an element of the offense. The Leader case is a private case, but there is also charged conspiracy between the Apex and others. Where a restraint is not the result of conspiracy, then the intent is not material. If in effect these practices do have that effect——

Mr. Hall: No, your Honor.

[fol. 2175] The Court: —because we are dealing, to illustrate, for instance, in the Food and Grocery case we were dealing with a group of persons who claimed that they had engaged in certain practices and under the Fair Trade Act of California and that their sole object was to secure fair dealings and prevent cutthroat competition. Nevertheless I was called upon at the trial to receive evidence which went behind that asserted object, which showed that the real object was to control prices, not by furnishing lists, but by giving or sending very pointed bulletins every day as to what should be done with a particular commodity which originated in interstate commerce and which constantly flowed to the shelves, so that their understandings affected goods at the end of the destination.

So the language which I have quoted there was relevant to the particular situation here. In a case under Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3, it is the effect, regardless of intent, that is the criterion.

Mr. Hall: I am talking now, your Honor, about interstate commerce, whether interstate commerce is affected by this case at all. You have to cross that bridge before the court has jurisdiction.

Now, this rule that I speak of is not confined to criminal cases. This Industrial Association v. United States which I cited to your Honor a moment ago was a civil case for [fol. 2176] an injunction. The rule announced in these cases is that where you have indirect effect upon interstate commerce, then intent becomes immaterial; but that where the impingement upon interstate commerce is indirect, then there must be a purpose and intent to burden the commerce.

No proof of intent to burden commerce has been shown in this case. We are dealing with local transactions. And furthermore, under Section 3 of the Clayton Act, there must not only be an effect upon interstate commerce, but, as pointed out in my brief, the contracts themselves by the very language of the Act must be in the course of interstate commerce, in the course of interstate commerce. That language appears at the beginning of Section 3.

And in Lewis v. Shell Oil Co., referred to on page 17 of our printed brief, the court draws attention to that particular language of the section. That is 50 Fed. Supp. 547. I do not think that I quote in the brief that portion of the opinion which points to the difference between "effect upon commerce" and a contract "in the course of commerce" but both are requisite under Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

In the United Shoe Machinery v. United States, 258 U. S. 451, where Section 3 of the Clayton Act was particularly involved—and I think that this was perhaps the first case before the United States Supreme Court involving Section 3, —the court, at page 465, says this:

> [fol. 2177] "It is insisted that the leases in controversy were not made in the course of interstate commerce and, therefore, cannot be embraced within the terms of the Clayton Act. It is provided in the decree that it shall apply to all leases covering shoe machinery shipped from one State to the user or factory for use in another State in the course of or as a part of the transaction between the lessor and the lessee, resulting in the making of the lease."

You see how particular and meticulous that court was in framing the decree. They exempted from the decree contracts dealing with goods bought and sold within one state.

Now, those opinions point to what I have said in the brief, that by no stretch of the imagination can you say that contracts with a California dealer are covered by either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act. I cite in my brief Addystone Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, where the court makes that very clear, that the decree may not affect local contracts.

In the Carter Carburetor case which the Government cites—and that was a Section 3 case—it is apparent from the opinion that contracts with dealers in Missouri, which was the home office of the Carter Carburetor Company were not included in the decree. And the court says in that case—that is 112 Fed. (2d) 722, reading from page 730:

> "We think that in making such sales and shipments to [fol. 2178] distributors and service stations located in other states than Missouri petitioner is engaged in interstate commerce."

[fol. 2179] So that under no conceivable theory could any decree of this court affect California contracts. According to Mr. McClanahan's testimony, only three refineries are located in California. The petroleum products come from those refineries. They go to service stations in California, and are sold at service stations in California. There is no interstate commerce anywhere in that picture.

The same is true of the tires, tubes and batteries. They are purchased from manufacturers in California, and so far as California dealers are concerned, they go from the accessory warehouses of the company located in California to those dealers. There is no interstate transit there at all, except in the case of the service of the small area at Needles, which Mr. Travis testified was infinitesimal. That is served by a warehouse in Phoenix.

The Court: Those things, by the way, appear also in the three depositions.

Mr. Hall: Yes. This point that I have been discussing, your Honor, is discussed at page 34 of our printed brief.

The Court: Of course, that was anticipatory of the proof. I am talking about the place in the record where the testimony relating to the contracts appears.

Mr. Hall: Yes. Those three depositions, of Mr. Olaine, Mr. Bussert and Mr. Hays, show the flow of goods, all goods, involved in this case very clearly.

[fol. 2180] Forty-five per cent of Standard's stations that have any sort of sublease or contract are located in California. That is shown by Exhibit 6.

Now, just a word before I close about subleases. Of the 5,197 stations that have subleases or contracts of some kind there are 1,798 with subleases. The provisions in the subleases do not come within section 3 of the Clayton Act. The language of the Clayton Act relates solely to leases of goods, not real estate leases.

Counsel argued that a lease has both a contract and a lease aspect, and that a provision in a lease of real estate can be treated as a contract. If that was the purpose and intent of Congress, why didn't they put it into the Act, because in section 3 they mention leases, and yet they confine it to leases of goods.

Now, obviously, in the case of those stations that are under subleases, and so far as petroleum products are concerned, if any of those stations have in addition a dealer contract or a dealer agreement TBA, the provisions in those contracts with respect to the petroleum products are simply surplusage because the subleases themselves contain the requirements clause with respect to petroleum products, and the contracts in that respect add nothing to the subleases. And if the subleases be valid, as I contend they are, then there is no lessening of competition caused by the contracts [fol. 2181] written in addition to a sublease.

The Court: May not the contract or the undertaking, which is the wording in the statute, occur in any kind of an instrument, and if a lease of real estate also regulated the kind of goods that are to be sold, can you disregard it merely because it is a lease, and wouldn't that lend itself to the possibility of merely taking a provision which relates to a practice within a statute which aims to reach it, and by putting it into the lease, avoid the consequences of the Act?

Mr. Hall: That would be good argument, your Honor.

The Court: I am merely asking the question. After all, I am interpreting a statute which represents the policy of the government of the United States, and which has been on the statute books for over fifty years. I think, to be exact, fifty-eight years. It was enacted in 1890.

Mr. Hall: And has never yet been applied to leases of real estate, whether they contain contractual provisions, or otherwise.

The Court: It is the instrument by which you are governed. But it says "contract and undertaking." A lease deals ordinarily not with the type or the source of goods to be sold. Leases usually deal with the tenure of land, with the kind of business to be conducted thereon.

Mr. Hall: That is it exactly, with the use of the property.

[fol. 2182] The Court: What was that?

Mr. Hall: With the use of the property.

The Court: With the use of the property, but if it also contains an undertaking relating to the source of goods which are to be stored there and handled there, then it is a contract or undertaking despite the fact that it is put into a lease. In other words, the duty of statutory interpretation and the duty of interpretation of documents calls upon us to determine its character from what it contains, not from what people call it. That is the rule in California, and elsewhere. That is why we can turn a deed into a mortgage. We can hold what purports to be a sale, an outright sale, when it was intended merely as security, and the like, because we go, not by the name which you give to an instrument, but what is in it.

Mr. Hall: But here Section 3 refers to a lease of goods.

The Court: That is right.

Mr. Hall: If they had intended a clause in a real estate lease to be within the Act, why didn't they add to the words "of goods" "or real estate." They have expressly mentioned what kind of lease, a lease of personal property.

The Court: I had here a copy of that statute. What did I do with it?

[fol. 2183] Mr. Hall: They have expressly excluded from the term "lease" anything with respect to a lease of real property.

The Court: I saw the point you are making in the brief. I have my copy of it, but I don't know where I placed it for the moment. I keep sending books back and forth.

Mr. Hall: In conclusion, your Honor, I would like to read a very brief passage from the opinion by Judge Learned Hand in the Associated Press case in the lower court, the three-judge court. It is reported in 52 Fed. Supp. 362, at 368, and this was the opinion which was affirmed by the Supreme Court in the decision that your Honor referred to this morning. Judge Hand says,——

The Court: From what page are you reading?

Mr. Hall: Page 368.

> "* * * However, as everyone now agrees, since the decisions of the Supreme Court in Standard Oil Co. v. U. S. . . . and American Tobacco Co. v. U. S. . . ., restriction alone is not enough to stamp a combination as illegal; it must be 'unreasonable' in the sense that the common law understood that word: and that never has been, and indeed in the nature of things never can be, defined in general terms. Courts must proceed step by step, applying retroactively the standard proper for each situation as it comes up, just as [fol. 2184] they do in the case of negligence, reasonable notice, and the like. As good a statement as any of the common law upon the subject is that in the Restatement of Torts . . .: 'Decision in each case depends upon a comparative appraisal of the values of the object sought to be accomplished by the actors' conduct, the effects of such conduct and of the object on competition and on business enterprise, and the opposing interests of the actors in freedom of action and of the person harmed in freedom of opportunity to do business.' Again 'self-interest particularly a purpose to advance the business interest of the actors, may be a justification even though the harm caused by the refusal' (to deal) 'is intended to be the means of advancing that interest.'"

The Court: All right, Mr. Dixon.

Closing Argument on Behalf of Plaintiff

Mr. Dixon: May it please the court: We have now come to the end of this law suit, and I will endeavor to make my remarks rather brief because I believe that the issues in this case are now clearly in focus, and that the Court, as a result of the argument of counsel, clearly has the contentions and the positions of both the government and the defendants before it for its consideration. As a Sherman Act case, I think I should say, although your Honor is, of [fol. 2185] course, thoroughly familiar with it, the fact is that our country is the only country in the world that has an Act of this character.

The Court: I think I referred to that fact myself.

Mr. Dixon: Yes, your Honor did.

The Court: And I said the others have allowed combinations and sought to control them.

Mr. Dixon: The purpose of it, of course, is to maintain and to protect our system of a free economy which, if it is to continue to stand, must have any unreasonable restraints on competition removed, where they are found to exist by the court.

Now, the purpose of this law suit, as was indicated in the complaint, is to free what we feel, that is, the government feels, is a substantial, an appreciable segment of a substantial market in the seven western states in petroleum products and automotive accessories; by that latter term meaning tires, tubes and batteries, and miscellaneous automotive accessories.

The record here shows that the commerce involved here amounts in dollar volume to approximately $68,000,000 for the last year, namely, the year 1947.

The purpose in this law suit is not, as counsel for the defendants has suggested, to tie up or to socialize any segment of the great petroleum industry, which is one of the basic [fol. 2186] industries of our country. The purpose of this suit is not to necessarily have each dealer carry the fifty brands of competing oils that counsel has suggested are sold in the western area. That is not the purpose of this suit at all. The relationship here between the dealer and the defendants is not that of employer and employee. If it were, we would not be here; at least, not on this theory of a case of a violation of the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

The relationship involved here between the dealers and the defendants is that of a buyer and seller of the products that the government contends are subject to the restraints under the Sherman and the Clayton Acts, and all the government is asking this court to do under the complaint is to remove those restraints which tie up $68,000,000 worth of commerce in the seven western states, which, in effect,—and I say that these facts are not in dispute—which, in effect, give the Standard Oil Company a monopoly upon that commerce at those outlets.

We are not charging the defendants here with a monopoly of any part of the petroleum or automotive accessory business in the western area at all, as is suggested by counsel. We charge that by these contracts, which they have entered into with these some 6,000 dealers, all competition has been removed from a substantial interstate market, and that the [fol. 2187] result of that has been to give to Standard a monopoly of that particular market, but not a monopoly, in any sense of the term, of all of the petroleum business or all of the automotive accessory business in the Western Area.

Now, what we are, therefore, asking of this court is to remove these restraints on the 6,000 dealers, to permit them to buy and to permit the manufacturers of products competitive to Standard to sell, if they can, in a free and competitive market their products to these 6,000 dealers. In other words, if any one of these dealers wants to handle 50 brands of oil, then they should have the privilege to do so. The government is not concerned with whether he does or does not. The public interest is only concerned with the question of whether he has that right to do so in a competitive market, if he cares to do so, and that is the only thing that the government says is involved in this suit. That is not socialism. That is merely maintaining our system of free enterprise, which is based, and if it is to stand, must have competition within an industry, unless it is to become a monopolized industry. Now, the restraint here is direct. It is not indirect. It operates directly on every one of the dealers that are subject to these contracts, and it also operates directly to prevent all of the manufacturers of the competing products to sell their products, or, at least, to have an opportunity to sell them in a competitive market [fol. 2188] to the dealers so restricted.

The question has been raised that the government is perhaps guilty of laches here. I think your Honor is familiar with the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Cement case. For years the Cement companies in the country have been using the basing point system of determining prices, which had, in effect, completely eliminated competition. The decision the other day declared that practice, which the cement companies have been engaged in for years, is illegal in violation of the Federal Trade Commission Acts.

Now, the government has no scheme here. There is no design in this law suit other than to accomplish the purpose that I have suggested, which we submit is in line with the purposes and objects of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, which are the basis of our free, competitive economy and is the backbone of our whole industrial growth on a sound basis in this country today.

I just want to deal briefly with a few of the other comments made by counsel. They say that open accounts are not involved in this case. We submit and suggest that they are. The negative restraints operating on these open accounts are such that, according to the undisputed evidence, they will not sell those stations on a split pump basis. In other words, once they begin to buy, that operator cannot [fol. 2189] buy any other competitive products and still get the Standard Oil gasoline, a clear restriction and a tie-in provision; and the testimony shows that they start from the open account, and the purpose is to move them into the dealer category, and ultimately into the TBA setup, which is a 100 per cent tie-up with all the Standard products.

Reference has been made here to the Yellow Cab case. I think your Honor undoubtedly by this time is thoroughly familiar with that case, but I want to just point out one thing that I believe counsel has overlooked in referring to that case. He says that that was a case of a monopoly of a market. Now, we suggest that that was not a case of a monopoly at all. No monopoly was charged in the Yellow Cab case. It was an action under section 1 and section 2 of the Sherman Act, under section 1 the charge being that they had engaged in a conspiracy to unreasonably restrain the interstate trade and commerce in the purchase and sale of taxicabs in the cities of Chicago, New York, Pittsburgh and Minneapolis, and the opinion shows that in those cities this business involved 86 per cent of the Chicago market, 15 per cent of the New York market, 100 per cent of the Pittsburgh market and 58 per cent of the Minneapolis market. I think that where counsel is confused is on the third part of the opinion in that case, where the petitioner had charged the defendants with having engaged in a conspiracy to mo- [fol. 2190] nopolize the taxicab business as such, that is, the business of transporting for hire in the city of Chicago, and the court said that insofar as the complaints in the Yellow Cab case was concerned, on that phase of the complaint it was improper. So we suggest that there wasn't any monopoly involved at all in the Yellow Cab case, and that the record and opinion in the case shows there was no such charge even made, certainly not under section 1 of the Act, which involves only a charge of an unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce.

When this case was filed, your Honor, the only case directly on the point of exclusion of business from a substantial market was the Fashion Guild case. After this case was filed, the two decisions that have been so much discussed in this case were handed down by the Supreme Court, namely, the decision in the Yellow Cab case, and the decision in the International Salt case. In both of those cases, if we follow them through, particularly the latter, the Salt case, we find particularly in the decision of the lower court that Judge Rifkind refers to many of the cases referred to by the defendants, particularly, the Pick case and the Sinclair case, and those cases are described and the limitations that have been put upon them by the subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court are referred to in Judge Rifkind's opinion in the District Court.

[fol. 2191] But he didn't disregard them, he didn't put his decision in the District Court on that basis; that is, that they were illegal per se solely because of those decisions. He preferred, as the opinion indicates, to put them on the other ground, that they were an unreasonable restraint and not per se, and were violations of the Clayton Act as such. But when the case went to the Supreme Court, where the same and substantially similar arguments were made, the Supreme Court in the Salt case clearly held that on the undisputed facts and the motion for summary judgment, that there was a violation per se on those facts. That case, we submit, is directly applicable here. In fact, our case is, as we have suggested an a fortiori case, because here, instead of having only a half a million dollars worth of commerce involving an appreciable segment of the market, under the new doctrine announced by the Supreme Court, or at least as clarified, we have here involved $68,000,000 worth of commerce, and if that does not constitute a substantial interstate market, then I say the decision in the Salt case, and the decision in the Yellow Cab case holding that the sale and purchase of 5,000 cabs in four cities constituted an appreciable segment of an interstate market has no meaning and that the language of the Supreme Court just does not mean what it says in those two cases.

The defendants further argue and say: Does the govern-[fol. 2192] ment want to control the dealers in this case? Of course not. By that, they say, can't Standard turn around and require or sell the dealers on a requirements basis of 2,000 gallons a month? Will that be illegal, they ask us. In reply to that, I say it might be, if the facts show that the Standard Oil Company without taking any requirements of the dealer into effect, went out and required every dealer to purchase a minimum of 2,000 gallons of gasoline per month, and said nothing more, and that that was the standard type of contract they used in selling or in tying up their stations. Then I say that type of contract, too, might be illegal.

I think your Honor has put his finger directly upon the answer to that question in the discussion that you had concerning the matter, as to whether it is a complete foreclosure of the market or whether it is merely, in and of itself a requirements contract which does nothing more than that and which does not have the effect—and that is the thing we are concerned with under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act—of completely foreclosing all competition for that particular business.

The undisputed facts here, as I have suggested, clearly show the amount of commerce here in the seven states to be substantial, and those facts are unchallenged. The various cases relied upon and referred to by counsel in the argu- [fol. 2193] ment are, practically all of them, referred to in our reply brief, so I am not going to take time to discuss them here, except that I do want again to refer to the Bausch & Lomb case, which was mentioned by counsel. That is another of Judge Rifkind's opinions, the same judge who wrote the opinion in the International Salt case, and the same judge who wrote the opinions in many other antitrust cases. The footnote in the Bausch & Lomb case in the Supreme Court shows the exclusive dealing type of contract among dealers and wholesalers had been declared illegal by the Federal Trade Commission. That is footnote 2 on page 717 of the opinion, in 322 U. S.

Now, the restraint involved here, as we have suggested, your Honor, is not only a restraint on a dealer. They said and argued the restraint cannot be a violation of the Clayton Act because it only operates at a given spot, that is, a given outlet.

Well, you have some, or, at least 6,000 outlets that are involved in this case, and when you total them all up you have some 68 millions of dollars worth of business that we contend is restrained by the restraint, and which I again suggest is not alone on the dealer. It is on the competitor of Standard Oil Company, who wants to sell that dealer products that Standard Oil sells him exclusively. The restraint operates in two ways.

[fol. 2194] The Sinclair case, which is also referred to in their argument, and which is referred to in Judge Rifkind's opinion, and which, on its facts, is clearly distinguishable from the facts involved in this case, was a case where the dealer could handle other products, if he wanted to, at his station. So, clearly, it is not authority for the proposition that we are urging is applicable in this case.

Now, they seem to constantly confuse the market we are talking about here. They say there is no substantial lessening of competition here, because Standard has only 10 or 12, or whatever per cent it is they have, of the total petroleum or gasoline business in the Western Area, and they say other companies are in competition with Standard. Again, we say that that is not the market we are talking about, your Honor. The market that is restrained here is the dealer market. It is this $68,000,000 market. It is not the billion-dollar oil market in the seven western states that is directly involved in this case at all.

They say that in the Salt case the defendant had a monopoly, and, therefore, since Standard doesn't have a monopoly of the petroleum business, the International Salt case is not applicable. It is true that there was a patent involved in the Salt case, and a patent, of course, once it is valid, gives the holder thereof a monopoly of the use of the patent within the limits of the grant given under the patent.

[fol. 2195] But in the Salt case there was not any monopoly of that kind involved. The thing that was involved in the Salt case—and we come back to that again, and it was only because the defendants have mentioned it in this capacity so many different ways—is that the restraint was on the commodity of salt, your Honor. That was the commodity that was restrained in the International Salt case, and they had endeavored to restrain it by making the patentees or licensees of one of their patented devices buy all of their salt, if International could supply it, from International itself. The restraint therefore was on the salt market and that was the commodity restrained, and the patent was wholly immaterial.

And, as we have previously suggested, the patent cases illustrate one type of an effort to restrain a market by an illegal tie-in of it with the purchase of unpatented commodities. When you give persons a license or a patent, of course that is illegal, there isn't any dispute about it.

But that is not our situation here, and I again point that it is the restraint we are dealing with, and the restraint in the Salt case was restraint on the salt market, and the restraint here is the restraint on this $68,000,000 market in petroleum products and automotive accessories in the seven western areas.

And they say in the conclusion that Government's position here is absurd. They say if the court does what the [fol. 2196] Government asks in this case that many contracts will be declared void and illegal.

We are dealing only with this case, your Honor, and in its context. It might well be that there may be other violations of law, too, but we will come to those in due course. We are dealing here in this case with violations, at least which the Government contends are violations, of some 6,000 contracts in the seven western states, involving, as I have suggested many times before, $68,000,000 worth of commerce.

The effect of the contracts was gone into. They said that is a question of fact. Of course, it might well be, but the facts here as to the effects of this contract, we submit, are not in dispute. The facts are here clear and on the test of those facts, as coming clearly within the facts of the International Salt case, we submit that there is a violation per se in the use of all of these contracts on the basis and to the extent to which they have been put to use in this case, because in their effect they have operated to exclude all competition from this substantial market.

They say Standard has competition. I believe I have mentioned that they say there are a lot of other companies engaged in this business. That is undoubtedly true, your Honor. We do not know how many of them there are. There are numerous companies. We do not know, also, how [fol. 2197] many of them have endeavored to get into this business and may have fallen by the wayside. Those are not facts before this court and they cannot be material if they were before the court.

But the important thing here under the Clayton Act is to show the extent to which this business of Standard has been increased. I mean the business which we contend is subject to the restraint charged here. The record shows that in 11 years the business has been practically doubled. In other words, from 169,000,000 gallons in 1936 to 320,000,000 gallons of gasoline in 1947.

Now, if that does not show an appreciable increase in this market which has come, we contend, as a result of the use of these contracts, and which, if continued, may very well tend, and even does now tend, to create a monopoly, if not restraint.

We submit that the undisputed evidence in this case shows that already in the period of 11 years in the petroleum business, alone, the defendants have in this market—I am not talking about any other market; I am talking about this dealer market—have practically doubled their business.

They have referred to some charts that are in evidence. Again, I want to point out the fact to your Honor that the fallacy of those charts is that they do not show—I think the record clearly shows this—how much gasoline was sold [fol. 2198] by other companies through retail outlets. We contended at the time they were submitted that they were not material and we still so contend; and if they are, if your Honor feels that they may be of any assistance in any way to your Honor at arriving at a conclusion in this case, we merely wanted to point out, as we have previously done, that there are many factors involved in those charts and the making of them up themselves that, in our judgment, at least, they can be of little aid to the court in determining the ultimate issues in the lawsuit.

Another argument that we heard quite frequently was that the Government has not shown that the Standard Oil has preempted any area or any part of the area in the seven western states.

We submit again, that that argument is based upon a fallacy and completely ignores the issue that is really the issue in this lawsuit; for there, again, we contend the burden is not on the Government to show the Standard Oil has a monopoly in any part of this area of all of the petroleum products business.

There, again, I emphasize it perhaps to the point of reiterating it unduly, but nevertheless, since that seems to be the position of the defense—and I say that it is a fallacious one—I again suggest to your Honor that that is immaterial, too, because what we are dealing with here is the dealer [fol. 2199] market and not the relative position of Standard Oil with reference to the entire market in petroleum products or any other type of commodities that are involved here. Such comparisons were not made and were not even referred to as being necessary or vital in either the Yellow Cab or the International Salt cases.

There, again, it came back to the point Standard has competition. But I want to point out that they have no competition to this dealer market. That is what we are talking about in this case. In other words, the 69 competitors, for example, for oil that they mention—and then, again, even at the risk of repeating the point—I say that those 69 competitors are the ones that are excluded from the privilege of competing for business here of the $69,000,000 or $68,000,000 volume in 1947 that is involved with the 6,000 dealers in the seven western states.

There was a lot said here, too, what their competitors do: that they use this same type of contract. Well, I do not need to suggest to your Honor that we believe that is no defense in any sense of the term. The fact that the other majors, so-called, as listed in the exhibits may be doing the same thing does not in any sense of the term justify, if true, the conduct here, if that conduct in and of itself is illegal per se, as we contend it is under the decisions of the Supreme Court.

[fol. 2200] However, the testimony of the defendants—I mean of the other majors—is, your Honor will recall, that they did not compete for this business at all. In other words, they restated again the objects. How can anyone compete for the business when the dealer is prevented from buying from any other source than through the defendants?

They say that we fail to show the total number of outlets through which the tires, tubes, and batteries were sold in the western area. Well, that is not a requirement on the Government in this type of case. The only requirement that we have, as we view it under the decisions, the recent decisions, certainly, in the Salt and Yellow Cab cases, is to show that an appreciable segment of the market is involved, and that is shown by showing a large number of outlets in interstate commerce and a substantial dollar volume of business.

On this interstate commerce question, there, again, we have, I believe, fully covered it in our brief, our reply brief. But there is one case that I would like to direct your Honor's attention to that we do not cite: that is the case of McComb v. Herlihy, 161 Fed. (2d) 568.

The Court: What was that?

Mr. Dixon: 161 Fed. (2d) 568. That was a decision from the Fourth Circuit, decided late last year, and it is comparable in many respects to the situation which you may [fol. 2201] have if it is involved here. It was under the Fair Labor Standards Act, and employees of a warehouse that was engaged in purchasing and wholesale distribution of gasoline, oil, tires, batteries, and automobile supplies were contending that they were not engaged in interstate commerce under the Fair Labor Standards Act. And the court held in that case, basing its ruling on the Jacksonville Paper case—and I am going to mention some of those cases briefly in a moment because they do indicate, as your Honor has expressed in the opinions that you have written in previous anti-trust cases, the trend in intgrstate commerce cases and distinctions that have arisen due to the constantly developing of new methods of doing busines, as exemplified, for instance, by the decision in the Insurance case. That is National Underwriters case, decided by the Supreme Court a short time ago.

But this commerce question, they have argued that the California business can't possibly be involved in this case. Well, the fallacy of their contention, there, again, your Honor, is this: That they fail to meet our contention that by excluding all of the outlets in California from competition, that is, from manufacturers of competitive products in other states—and the testimony here shows that there are plenty of them that come in here and want to try to sell these California dealers, as well as the Washington dealers, [fol. 2202] as well as the Utah dealers and the dealers in every one of these seven states—they can't buy. And the effect—that is what we are talking about, as your Honor pointed out in the Grocery case—the effect of the local restraint, assuming for the purpose of argument that it is solely intra-state, is such here that all interstate competition for that market is excluded.

The principle that we are saying and urging be applied to this case is the same whether it is in intra-state only or whether it is interstate, because the market here sold is one that is completely closed to all competition.

The effect of their argument is referred to on page 4 of our brief, and many other cases are referred to in our brief, and I am sure your Honor perhaps is already familiar with them.

The last point they made was about this lease proposition. I believe your Honor has clearly indicated what the answer to that position is. It is not what you call the document; it is what it contemplates or what it does that the law is concerned with. And Government's Exhibit 5 clearly excludes the party that has that situation from acquiring any petroleum products, by the terms of that agreement, whether you call it a lease or whatever it is. Of course, it gives a right to the land. To that extent it is a lease. But it is also a contract, and the contract contemplates a sale or provides for a sale on the conditions that [fol. 2203] they not engage in buying or competing with their competitors and is, under the Clayton Act, clearly illegal.

The last case they cited was the Anderson case, I believe, on interstate commerce. That decision was decided in 1898. We have progressed 50 years since that decision. Our methods of doing business interstate-wise and in every other manner have changed substantially since that decision. Ours is a progressive economy.

The Sherman law, to repeat, must keep up with changing industrial conditions. The purpose of the Sherman law is clear, and when you have commerce today on an integrated basis involving, as it does in this case, the purchase and sale of millions of dollars worth of commodities from and through the seven states in the western area, we submit that that clearly constitutes commerce, in commerce, and is not the effect on commerce theory clearly applied.

So what may be called the indirect restraint of yesterday may become and may be the direct restraint of today, depending upon the changing conditions in our whole industrial and competitive systems. That which was legal yesterday, by growth, in and of itself may be illegal today under the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

As I suggested at the very beginning of this argument and, I believe, of the case, if three or four or two of these [fol. 2204] contracts were in effect, it might very well be that they would not be a violation of the Sherman Act or of the Clayton Act, either. But when you put them in their context, as you must view them in this case, involving over 6,000 outlets in seven western states for a total amount of over $68,000,000 worth of commerce, I say to your Honor that under any concept of commerce or of the law today, when you attempt to and in fact do exclude all competition from that kind of a market, that you have, under the decisions of our Supreme Court as recently announced in the Salt case and the Yellow Cab case, clearly violated both the Sherman and the Clayton Acts.

And on that basis we ask your Honor to find for the Government in this case and to issue the restraining orders asked for enjoining the defendants from enforcing these restrictive provisions on the dealers, and to in fact open up this tremendous market to free competition, the kind of competition contemplated when the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act were passed by our Congress.

The Court: Gentlemen, in a case like this I do not usually rule immediately. It has been a long case. I do not think Mr. Dixon has departed from the rules which we follow, namely, that the reply should not bring in any new matters. But, Mr. Hall, if you feel that there is anything Mr. Dixon has said that requires further comment, I will be glad to have you either point it out to me or point to any portion [fol. 2205] of your brief which you think answer any such point.

I have indicated I will study the case. I have studied many more cases which have not been cited which we have discussed during the course of this argument.

Mr. Hall: No, your Honor. There is plenty I disagree with, but I do not care to make any further argument.

STATEMENT BY THE COURT

The Court: All right. Gentlemen, before I submit the matter, I want to express to you the joy I have had in trying this case. Contrary to the ordinary assumption of the layman and some of the lawyers, a case that really interests judges is a case which challenges his experience and what knowledge he may have accumulated over the course of years. There are cases which make the life of a trial judge, which might at times not be bearable easily, worth while. In the course of years, especially after a long period on the bench, we are inclined to become weary of the average routine which the work may mean, just as the average lawyer at times gets weary of the routine which the practice of law may arouse in many instances.

But it is the important cases like these which brighten the path of a judge. Because of their importance they invite a great responsibility. That responsibility cannot be fulfilled except with the cooperation of the attorneys who represent the litigants in the case. The thoroughness with which they prepare the case, the aid which they are in in placing before [fol. 2206] the court their theories of the law or of the facts are invaluable in arriving at the proper decision in any case, and much more in a case of this importance.

At times in a case which involves issues of this importance there is a tendency to become emotional and to indulge in personalities. Counsel sometimes do it consciously and unconsciously, carried away by their advocacy. I am happy to say that there has been no such incident in this case. Whenever these incidents happen, the judge, of necessity, feels affected, because you cannot sit in trial of a case in which a lot of emotionalism is brought in and a lot of feeling is expressed without consciously or unconsciously making yourself a vehicle of that, and it is not a pleasant task to try to arbitrate in a case with incidents of that character. I repeat that there have been no such incidents here.

Both sides have tried the case in accordance with the highest ideals of ethics that should prevail in the trial of these cases, and I am grateful to you for it.

I realize that we have kept very long hours, and the hours were made longer by the fact, of which I am conscious, that all of you had to spend additional hours in preparation. But that was brought about by the exigencies of the work, by the desire to complete it within the time we allotted our- [fol. 2207] selves, by the fact that my work is such that unless I try to put in a lot of time, with slight variations of a particular case, large litigants are discommoded.

You were present in court and were made aware of the fact that the case which is to follow is a case involving a lawsuit by an Argentine corporation; that members of that corporation and others who are to be witnesses have arrived from that country and have been here waiting for the trial. Had I not insisted on longer hours than is good for any of us so far as our health is concerned, because most of us—I do not know Mr. Dixon's age, but I know Mr. Hall's age—most of us are reaching an age where these long hours begin to tell. Had I not insisted, I think we would have disorganized the balance of the other litigants whose cases I must hear between now and vacation time.

I assure you that I have worked alongside, although not in your presence. I was working in chambers on many of these matters. I would hate to admit how late I was in in chambers this morning. I have become about as well acquainted with all our night watchmen and all the janitors in the last four weeks as I have, with one or two exceptions, during the entire period that I have been on this bench.

I wish to thank you all for the spirit in which you conducted the case and the masterly manner in which you placed before the court the facts and the law as you interpret it.

[fol. 2208] Of necessity, whatever I do in the case is going to disappoint one side or another. A judge can never win a case. Lawyers only can win a case. And I try the case in a manner which is only 50 per cent right, because, for a while at least, the losing side fear the decision is wrong. Fortunately that is forgotten easily, although some members of the bar continue to harbor that feeling long after the case has reached finality and has run the gamut of the entire course of review. Fortunately our judicial system is based upon the proposition that there should be no finality to the judgment of any trial court, and that is one of the beauties of our system. For that reason there are probably more methods provided to review the decision of a trial judge or of a trier of facts, an administrative trier of facts, in this country than in any country in the world, not excluding England from whom the basic ideas of our system of jurisprudence stem.

I shall try to decide the matter as quickly as I can. Fortunately many of the cases which deal with the subject are familiar to me, having been in the fortunate position of having tried a large number of these cases and heard matters in many of them which I did not try outside of the district.

[fol. 2209] I even heard two antitrust matters in the State of Oregon, although I did not try the cases. But the problems involved in them were before me in 1942, when I sat there. And I also tried unfair trade practice cases, so that makes my task easy, because when it comes to formulating my thoughts I can start from where the opinions I wrote in those cases left off, and deal only with such law as was not involved there or such new principles as the particular facts call for or which may have been promulgated in more recent cases.

You will receive due notice of the decision. I cannot tell at the present time what form the decision is going to take. I may call you all in and announce it in open court, or if I decide to handle it in the form of a written decision or opinion, which is my present inclination, I may notify you at the time it will be filed or may call you to be present when I file it.

Our custom here in this respect differs from the custom which is followed in some of the districts, including Nevada and Oregon, where the custom has grown up of announcing the decision in open court always, in the presence of the attorneys, even though the decision is written. I do not know how the practice grew up because it is not the practice in the State Courts. I think it developed merely out of the requirements under the old rules that requests for findings should be made at the conclusion of each case and that [fol. 2210] the decision of the court was the first indication that counsel had as to which set of findings had been approved.

In cases of importance I have at times notified counsel, and even when I had a written opinion, that I had filed it at a certain time, and at times I have even amplified it, when the matter was of such nature that either time did not permit a full exposition of the principles I covered, or I felt that counsel should have additional information to guide them in the preparation of findings. I did that in an oil case which arose last summer, in which, because of the pendency of an injunction in another district, it was necessary that the decision be made at a certain time, and while the decision was oral, I called in the attorneys and amplified what I had said.

At any rate, due notice will be given to you in advance, if that is my intention, and if, of course, the entire opinion and the decision are both written, you will be notified immediately by the clerk when it has been filed, and copies will be made available to you all. That includes the members of the press, some of whom are not regularly in the court but are here merely because they represent publications which are especially interested in the principle involved in this litigation, which is so important to the oil industry and to the government and to the buying public.

[fol. 2211] While I am at it, I want to express my thanks to Mrs. Zellner and Mr. Bargion. Mrs. Zellner came in to pinch-hit, as it were, when our own reporter, Mr. Dewing, was taken ill. I know that with the requirements which a daily transcript imposes upon a reporter the task has not been an easy one, and I may say that such portions of the transcript as I have read show that all three, Mr. Dewing, Mr. Bargion, and Mrs. Zellner have done a very, very beautiful job of reporting, considering the variety of matters which have been brought before us in the testimony and the many spontaneous, but long arguments which have occurred during the trial.

With that the cause will stand submitted and the court will be adjourned.

[fol. 2211A-2212] Reporter's Certificate to foregoing transcript omitted in printing.

[fol. 2214] Los Angeles, California, Monday, June 28, 1948, 3:00 P. M.

The Court: All right, gentlemen.

The Clerk: Case No. 6159-Y, United States versus Standard Oil Company of California and Standard Stations, Inc.

COLLOQUY RE OBJECTIONS AND AMENDMENTS TO DECREE

The Court: All right, gentlemen. I think the best way is to take up the findings as to which there are any objections, and I will hear what you have to say all along the line.

Mr. Hall: May we start with the decree, your Honor? I have handed to the clerk certain objections and amendments to the decree and served copies on counsel. During the last half hour or more Mr. Dixon, I think, has been looking over those. Are those before your Honor?

The Court: Yes, I have them.

Mr. Hall: No. 1 Mr. Dixon says is not objectionable to him.

Is that correct, Mr. Dixon?

Mr. Dixon: That's right.

Mr. Hall: No. 2, Mr. Dixon says is not objectionable to him.

Mr. Dixon: That is correct.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: No. 3 is not objectionable to Mr. Dixon if after [fol. 2215] the word "existing" in the third line are inserted the words "written or oral".

The Court: "with whom a defendant then has existing written or oral contractual relations"?

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: Coming to No. 4, Mr. Dixon says that he has no objection to that amendment down to line 25, beginning with the words "provided however". That is on page 2, your Honor.

Mr. Dixon: May I interrupt just a moment and say that that is on the understanding, your Honor, that that is what your Honor intended in your opinion.

The Court: That is all right.

Mr. Hall: Inviting attention to the last six lines on page 2, beginning with the words "provided however," and the balance of that amendment, that is inserted to take care of a situation that was exhibited in the testimony, your Honor, a situation of aggressive and strong competition.

There is precedent for that kind of a provision in the decree.

In the decree which was made in United States against Chrysler Corporation in 1938, there your Honor will recall there was a criminal and civil suit against the General Motors involving the Acceptance Corporation, which was a [fol. 2216] subsidiary of General Motors. I am sure that Mr. Dixon will correct me if my facts are in error, but as I understand the situation the other large competitors of General Motors also had finance companies, and in the case of Chrysler a decree was made against Chrysler which contained this provision:

"If an effective final order or decree not subject to further review shall not have been entered on or before January 1, 1943 requiring General Motors Corporation permanently to divest itself of all ownership and control of General Motors Acceptance Corporation, and of all interest therein, then and in that event nothing in this decree shall preclude the manufacturer from acquiring and retaining ownership of and/or control over or interest in any finance company, or from dealing with such finance company, and with the dealers in the manner provided in the decree, or in any order of modification."

That was put in for this purpose—a purpose which we find an exact counterpart or analogy in our case—to prevent irreparable injustice from competitors carrying on the same practices that we are enjoined from pursuing.

If that were not done, of course, the result would be inequitable and our competitors would step in and by prac- [fol. 2317] tices which have already been exhibited in the testimony would take over our distribution outlets and our dealers, and that is the purpose of this further provision in Paragraph IX.

The Court: Let me ask you this: Were there similar actions pending against the others at the time?

Mr. Hall: Yes.

The Court: There are no similar actions pending here.

Mr. Hall: I am reading you from the Chrysler opinion, the Chrysler decree.

The Court: I understand that. But was that decree predicated upon the proposition that similar action was actually pending against the competitors?

Mr. Hall: Yes. The part that I read you made the relief against Chrysler dependent upon a decree being entered against the General Motors, and there was a pending action against General Motors.

The Court: But there is no showing that actions are pending against these defendants.

Furthermore, as you will notice from the letter, correspondence between Mr. Avery and me, copies of which you have received, while they appeared as witnesses they are now contending, at least the Texas Company is, that their contracts are not similar, and that they don't come within it. They wanted me to modify the statement. I received [fol. 2218] the letter.

I will hear from Mr. Dixon.

Unless there were actual proceedings pending against the others, I do not think we should tie this proceeding to a similar proceeding which has not yet been commenced, and which may not be necessary to commence.

Mr. Hall: The inequities are just as great whether the other proceedings are pending or not.

The Court: If this judgment becomes final those people are put on notice that at any time similar proceedings may be instituted against them, and I do not think we should tie a decree to something that the government might do. The government might change its policy and not do anything, and I should not control the future policy of the government by this case.

Mr. Hall: That is just the inequity of the situation. If the government changes its policy and does nothing——

The Court: I am not responsible for the policy of the government. I merely decide cases that the government brings before me.

In other words, you are asking me to say that this decree should not have effect unless the government does to all others what it does to you.

Mr. Hall: That is right, in the major portion of the order.

[fol. 2219] The Court: Even if the government agreed, I would not agree to that.

If there were other cases pending and there was danger that they were not pursued to judgment, then I might be inclined to do it. But as there are no other cases pending against others, I do not think we should tie this to any decree, because I have no authority to tell the government here, "Unless you bring all of them in I won't do it."

Mr. Hall: All right, your Honor. There is one other case pending, and that is against the Richfield Corporation.

Perhaps you have the number of that, Mr. Dixon. Will you, at least, confirm that statement?

Mr. Dixon: If we are going to discuss the other case, I am perfectly happy to do so. It is a comparable case. The factual situation is somewhat different, in substance, from the facts presented to your Honor in this case, and we feel, as your Honor has indicated, that the hands of the government should not be tied by a provision of this character.

In other words, the first portion of the suggested substitution gives to the defendants in this case, at least, assuming this case is appealed, a period from a year to a year and a half before this decree shall, in effect, become final. [fol. 2220] Certainly I think that is sufficient protection to the defendants in this case.

In the cases mentioned, the Chrysler case, and the Ford case, the facts were exactly the same. In other words, both companies were using finance companies exclusively for financing their cars. Which is not the substance of the case we have here with reference to Richfield.

Although there are many similarities between the facts of the Richfield case and the facts in this case, no court has as yet passed upon them or the evidence in the Richfield case.

The Court: All right. Let's go to the next one. I will not tie in that provision. I have provided in the decree ample time.

I did it in another case and it worked out. I think that is a fair provision, and we should not tie it to a judgment in any other case.

Mr. Hall: Then the proposed amendment will be allowed down to the words "provided however," is that correct, your Honor? I have already stated, your Honor, down to there it was agreeable to the government.

The Court: I intended that to go in. I didn't notice that he didn't put that in. I made that a separate order. Yes, that should go in.

Mr. Hall: Then coming to Amendment No. 5, that has [fol. 2221] reference to Paragraph X of the Judgment and is a provision for enforcement that has its counterpart, or nearly its counterpart in some other decrees. I have provided in the alternative, your Honor.

The first provision in my proposed amendment is a provision which we believe entirely sufficient for the protection of the government, and at the same time for the protection of the defendants against unreasonable——

The Court: What change are you introducing into the paragraph?

Mr. Hall: Are you looking at the first part of my amendment, your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hall: The first part, in substance, provides that if the government wants specific information they ask for that information, and if the information is not forthcoming then the government can go to the court and upon a specific showing of the facts obtain an order to that effect.

The Court: Doesn't that say on reasonable notice to either of those defendants?

Mr. Hall: Yes, but——

The Court: Just a minute. Let me read this. Doesn't it follow, as a matter of course, Mr. Hall, that if those requests are not granted, that the application would have to be made to the court either by citation for contempt or [fol. 2222] some other manner to compel performance?

Mr. Hall: We don't want to be in contempt of the decree, your Honor.

The Court: Pardon me?

Mr. Hall: We don't want to be in contempt of the decree.

The Court: This provides for a written notice. Why decide in advance what should be the effect? The government should have the right to pursue whatever legal remedy they want to if you do not comply. Leave it up in the air without deciding what they are going to do.

Mr. Hall: Here is the difference between what the government proposes and what we propose: the government proposes upon reasonable access to simply step in and have access to these books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, and memoranda, or interview corporate officers. If we say, "No, we don't think you are entitled to look at these particular books or memoranda, no we don't think you are entitled to talk to these particular corporate employees," then the government steps in and seeks to cite us for contempt of the decree.

Under the provision that we have proposed, the government makes a request, specific request as to what it wants to examine, as to the information that it wants. It comes to us and makes that request, and it is only if we refuse [fol. 2223] the request that they then go to the court and ask for further instructions.

The Court: I think your second alternative, which modifies the words, appeals to me more than the other. It places a reasonableness there without determining in advance what the government is to do.

What do you say, Mr. Dixon?

Mr. Dixon: We have no objections to a modification of Point 3 of line 25 of Paragraph X to include the words "concerning matters directly related to compliance with this judgment" as a proposed insertion.

With reference to 1 and 2, we might say that those provisions—as is also 3, incidentally—are standard provisions in antitrust decrees. 1 and 2 were sustained as to form by the Supreme Court in the Bausch and Lomb case where they were attacked by the defendants in that case as being unreasonable and in violation of their constitutional rights, unreasonable search and seizure, and so forth. The court did say that the third form was too indefinite to be enforced. In other words, by making it specific it would be enforceable, clearly holding in the Bausch and Lomb opinion that the government was entitled to these things in order to determine whether or not the provisions of the decree were being lived up to, and the defendants were protected under this provision by making certain that any [fol. 2224] information thus secured would not be, of course, available to the public generally, and would be only used in legal proceedings by the government.

So that subject to that addition we feel that Paragraph X should stand as is with the insertion or suggested insertion which would meet the objection, or the possible objection to this form, although we feel it is adequate even in its present form as outlined in the Bausch and Lomb decree.

Mr. Hall: Before your Honor rules on that, I would like to be heard.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Hall: This first insertion that we ask is on page 5, line 17.

The Court: I am inclined to grant you that entire alternative, Mr. Hall. There is no use to argue it.

What is the change that you are making? Let me see.

Mr. Hall: That was the thing that was disapproved in the Bausch and Lomb case.

Mr. Dixon: What is that?

Mr. Hall: The elimination of 3. That is required by the rule in the Bausch and Lomb case.

Mr. Dixon: Yes. As I said, your Honor, the objection to Paragraph 3 is to its not being specific enough, and we [fol. 2225] have no objection——

The Court: Then leave it out. That works both ways. You can leave noncompliance under 1 and 2 open to proof on their part that the request is not reasonable. All right. The alternative will be granted as to that one.

Mr. Hall: Do you mean the entire 5-A will be granted?

The Court: Yes, 5-A will be granted.

Just a minute until I make a note of this. All right.

Mr. Hall: I don't know that Mr. Dixon had any objection to XI. I simply want to add at the end of Paragraph XI, your Honor: "or for other or further relief."

The Court: Where is that?

Mr. Hall: End of Paragraph XI of the proposed Judgment.

The Court: That in a complaint is all right, before the court has limited the decree, but it seems to me in a decree it is nebulous. The court has no power after a Judgment has become final to do anything but make modifications of form. The court could not change the substance of that decree after it had become final.

Mr. Hall: That is what the court had in the Paramount case."

The Court: What meaning does it have?

Mr. Hall: It broadens the rather restrictive language that goes before.

Certainly if the court retains jurisdiction it retains juris- [fol. 2226] diction for all purposes, and that is simply the purpose of the words.

The Court: The Paramount decree had so many alternatives arising out of ownership. There was divestiture, and things like that.

This was eliminated from the case right at the beginning. When we started, I thought perhaps the government was seeking that here.

You can see what the court did if you read that entire series of cases. In some instances they held that the court hadn't gone far enough and sent the case back for the purpose of considering whether they ought not to be compelled to divest themselves of the theaters they already owned. The court had merely stated they should not buy any more.

But here the government is not seeking, and I have not granted anything except to declare that these provisions in the contract are invalid. So the retention of a power like this is meaningless, because the scope of the decree is narrow.

Mr. Hall: Very well, your Honor.

The Court: That will be denied.

Mr. Hall: Coming to No. 7, I would like to call your Honor's attention to the evidence which is a predicate for this request.

[fol. 2227] The Court: Let me read it again before you start.

Mr. Hall: Yes, sir. And 8 might be read with it, too.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Hall: These provisions are requested, your Honor, because of the breadth of the decree, the generality of the decree, the generality of the enjoining paragraphs of the decree, which are 6 and 7. I call your Honor's attention to the Federal Statute which governs the framing of a decree of this kind, 28 USCA 383:

> "Every order of injunction or restraining order shall set forth the reasons for the issuance of the same, shall be specific in terms, and shall describe in reasonable detail, and not by reference to the bill of complaint or other document, the act or acts sought to be restrained."

The company, as far as this decree is concerned, must plan ahead. It must have definite specifications to rely upon, not general language, and it is no answer, your Honor, to say that we can apply to the court under its retained jurisdiction power for permission to do this or that. The company has to know in advance what it is permitted to do before it incurs large expenditure.

Now, coming to Paragraph 8 of the proposed amendments.

[fol. 2228] Paragraph 7, rather, and Paragraph 8. Those are framed with the idea of protecting the company against imposition and fraud, and it has a basis in the testimony in this case.

Your Honor will recall that the first witness, Mr. McClanahan, testified in this way— am reading from page 126 of the record:

> "Experience has proven that they tend to misrepresent the products to the trade."

He is speaking of service station dealers.

> "Oftentimes they sell a gasoline out of one pump that the customer may think he is buying from another, creating what we call substitution. We have known of many instances where they have transferred the products from an underground tank to another tank, where it is sold under another brand, because of some temporary compensation that they might get from that particular supplier."

Again at page 138 of the record Mr. McClanahan said:

> "Mr. Dixon, we have had accounts, where we have had the trademark and the color in the pump, and the account has sold gasoline from that pump for six months, and we haven't delivered a gallon of gasoline to the dealer in six months, but the meters of that pump showed a tremendous output."

[fol. 2229] Testimony to like effect was brought out by Mr. Thompson when he was called as a part of our case.

The Court: Mr. Hall, I can see how a portion of 7 could be granted, but 8 is arranging your future relationship as to what you can do. How can we do anything that can bind or determine the rights that you have in the future? You are trying to establish certain rules and regulations which are beyond the scope of this court, because it affects the rights of others. The Chevron operators are not before this court.

Mr. Hall: No, your Honor; we are simply asking in 8, for example, that we have permission to do this under the decree. We want to say to a dealer that we don't want him to paint his station or sign-post his station in such a way as to mislead the public that Standard gasoline is being sold there when it isn't being sold there.

The Court: Paragraph A of 7 is all that you are entitled to. The rest of it is a question of legal rights for you to enforce.

Mr. Hall: I don't think so.

The Court: I can't tell in advance in this decree whether it should be at a certain distance and whether you have certain rights. These people are supposed to be independent operators.

Mr. Hall: We are not asking your Honor to adjudicate [fol. 2230] the rights of these dealers.

The Court: In this case I am declaring merely your rights, between the government and yourself. I cannot declare the rights between you and the others.

Mr. Hall: I understand that, and I understand the injunction runs against us.

The Court: These are all with relation to your future conduct here. I am inclined to allow that Paragraph 1, which is:

> "That any pump or tank or other container or receptacle furnished by defendant to an operator shall be used solely for the storing, handling or dispensing of defendant's petroleum products," and then add to that "and to make such reasonable regulations relating to the condition of such operation."

That is sufficient because it tells you that you have certain rights. But in advance to tell them that they can't paint and they can't do something else is to declare the rights you have against them, and they are not before the court.

Mr. Hall: I would like to take these one at a time. Your Honor spoke of 1. Do you mean A under 7?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Hall: Certainly we have a right to B and C on this same theory. We are simply saying to your Honor we [fol. 2231] want the privilege of selling our products under these conditions, and they are fair conditions, and they are conditions that are necessary for us if we are not to be defrauded by practices which the evidence shows without contradiction have prevailed in the past. There is danger shown to the court that this will happen, and they are entirely fair provisions, and they are entirely within the statute, in that they permit us specifically to do certain things, as many of these decrees do.

Many of these decrees are framed with a heading "Acts permitted." And when a company is forced to change its entire distribution system, it wants to know. It doesn't want to be in contempt. It wants to know definitely and specifically and in detail what it may do, and these are things that no honest person could object to.

The Court: The difficulty is that these persons are not before the court.

Mr. Hall: Your Honor, will you look at the first part of 7?

> "Nothing contained in this judgment shall enjoin or restrain either defendant from selling or contracting to sell any products to service station or garage operators on any one or more of the following conditions:"

We simply want permission from the court that we may [fol. 2232] sell our products under these eminently fair conditions, that these conditions which will prevent substitution, fraud on us, and fraud on the public.

The Court: I don't think I can take it and fix it as to distance. That is a question of agreement.

I will grant you A.

Mr. Hall: We would like the privilege of going to the dealers and making the agreement if we can. If your Honor will look at the breadth of this decree we may be prevented from doing that without a contempt of this court.

The Court: I think you can say, "can be used solely for the purpose of dispensing defendant's gasoline," and put in there "and to prescribe by agreement regulations for such storing, handling and dispensing not inconsistent with this decree."

There you are. Then this is an exception that allows you to regulate the manner without my in advance fixing the distance at which it shall be, whether you should lock it, or something else.

Mr. Hall: Will your Honor read what you have? I was unable to follow it.

The Court: This will give you a flexible clause. Wait a minute now. Put a comma after the word "products" at the end of line 17, "and to prescribe by agreement regulations for such storing, handling and dispensing not incon- [fol. 2233] sistent with this decree."

Then you can make your agreement as to paint and everything else, which this decree doesn't control, or distances, so long as they don't have the exclusive features.

Mr. Hall: May I have that again?

The Court: Let me read the entire paragraph.

"Nothing contained in this judgment shall enjoin or restrain either defendant from selling or contracting to sell any products to service station or garage operators on the following condition:

"A. That any pump or tank or other container or receptacle furnished by defendant to an operator shall be used solely for the storing, handling or dispensing of defendant's petroleum products, and to prescribe by agreement regulations for such storing, handling and dispensing not inconsistent with this decree."

That is a statement that you insist that your tanks shall be used only for your gasoline, and you can bind the man by any reasonable precautions to observe that right, without in advance laying down any rules for distance, or the like.

What did you have to say? I am talking out loud, gentlemen. [fol. 2234] I am trying to find a common ground of agreement.

Mr. Hall: That covers the defendant's tanks, but C, of course, covers the installation of competing tanks so near defendant's tanks as to give opportunity for this substitution.

The Court: You can arrange that by agreement.

Mr. Hall: We can't under the clause your Honor has dictated.

The Court: You can do it under the clause. You will have a flexible clause, while here you bind yourself to a distance. I don't want to establish distance, in advance. I have not heard any evidence to enable me to know what distance would prevent fraud.

Mr. Hall: It doesn't look to me as if 16 feet would be a great distance.

The Court: I will hear from the government.

Mr. Dixon: The government objects to 7 and 8 and the succeeding suggested additions to this decree. As your Honor studies them, I believe your Honor will agree that they are an attempt to set up a code of regulations here, in a sense, whereby the defendants might sell their products, which have no application at all, in our opinion, in any sense of the term, to the provisions of this decree.

The government feels that not only this type of suggested [fol. 2235] addition, but the others, as well, have no place whatever in this decree, because, for example, take the suggested C, which your Honor has already indicated he is not receptive to, that provision in and of itself would operate to completely exclude any other competitive tanks or facilities for storing competitive gasoline at any service station.

Your Honor knows, as a matter of judicial knowledge, when you go into a gasoline station that the pumps are frequently less than two feet apart. Now, this provision is an attempt to limit them within 40 feet of each other.

This whole thing, in our judgment—this talk about fraud on the public we do not concede is supported in any sense of the term by the record. As a matter of fact, our evidence, the evidence of the only operator testifying concerning the operation of a split pump, was to the contrary.

This type of an addition to the decree, which we submit is an attempt to set up a code here of commercial practices, telling what may be done and what may not be done, has no place in this type of a decree where the general purpose of the provision is merely to prevent the defendants from imposing conditions on dealers, present or future dealers, whereby they cannot deal in competitive products.

This provision, for instance, A, that they suggest, refers [fol. 2236] to receptacles furnished, to use the term there in quotation marks, by the defendant.

What is meant by "furnished"? Take a situation where the tanks are furnished and the pumps are furnished to a dealer, and he subsequently buys them, what is to happen? They are still furnished to the dealer, and yet they are the dealer's product through purchase. Are those pumps to still be used only for Standard Oil products?

The point, your Honor, I am making is this: That by inserting any one of these proposed provisions from 7 on your Honor will be attempting to pass in advance, we submit, on any question that may arise between the defendants and any proposed or present dealer concerning the legality of what the defendants are endeavoring to do by way of merchandising their product.

We say as to that: sufficient is the evil until the day thereof.

If it becomes that under this decree certain practices are resorted to, or are being resorted to by the defendants, which in effect have the same effect as that which the evidence shows to have been the result of the conditions here, then the government wants to be able to come in here and say that on that showing the defendants are in contempt of the provisions of this decree, and it is not the policy, of course, of the government to summarily haul any defend- [fol. 2237] ant in these cases into court until the government is satisfied that there has been a violation of the decree and the defendants given an opportunity, after having it directed to their attention, to correct that, unless it is a deliberate and intentional violation of the decree.

The Court: Let me ask you this. In A if we have the words "by defendant and marked as such," then I see no objection to saying that a man who has a Standard gasoline pump and has it marked as such shall use it only for Standard gasoline, which means if he buys it and he wants to change it would be all right.

I think to that extent there can be no harm in giving them that right, without setting down details.

I have already stated that I don't believe the other should be granted, nor do I believe that I should pass at the present time on the question whether an agreement to buy the maximum that they need is or is not without the decree.

I put that in the opinion merely as a question of argument, and I said even then there would be an opportunity of a man dealing. But I do not think that I ought to in advance determine that.

Another reason is that it is already apparent from the correspondence which I have filed in the case that other companies are practicing that, and they are beginning to [fol. 2238] maintain that they are or are not within the decree. I told them so far as the opinion is concerned, both of you have the letters, I merely drew the inference that was warranted, that they were here to assist Standard, and it was offered to show similarity, not dissimilarity.

I don't want to say in advance where there would be a violation. That is not the object of the decree.

By adding the word "and marked as such" means so long as it is marked Standard gasoline he is not to use it to palm off somebody else's gasoline.

I think that is legitimate, and the rest of them can be covered by any agreements to be determined later on.

Mr. Hall: If your Honor please, may I say just one more word on that? That, as your Honor points out, may protect the pumps of Standard Oil Company, but contrary to what counsel has just stated, let me read the undisputed evidence in this case of Mr. Thompson (Page 1547):

"Q. Now, tell us just what it is that, in your experience, you have found that a dealer would do in the way of substituting one gasoline for another at a service station, how he would accomplish it?

"A. Well, the pumps generally would be on a single pump block, and the customer attracted to the station—if our colors and signs were displayed, a customer desiring our products would be attracted to the station, and in pulling up to the pump block would nat- [fol. 2239] urally expect to receive the product that was generally identified in that unit, and it was very easy for the dealer to take the hose from some other pump, and without being observed by the motorist put the gasoline in the tank.

"Q. Was there a practice in that connection that is known in the parlance of the trade as 'long-hosing'?

"A. Long-hosing is——"

The Court: I remember that.

Mr. Hall: That is all we are trying to do is to prevent long-hosing.

The Court: There is a limit as to what the decree should do. In other words, if I put that in, then it merely says that you have a right to regulate it.

This does not say you haven't the right to cease dealing with a man except upon terms that are agreeable to you. This is not a mandatory injunction ordering you to do anything. This is an order to cease and desist from certain practices, that is all this is.

Gentlemen, I have had a very long day. I will give you all the time you need. I think Mr. Goldstein is pretty tired out, as I have been on the bench with very few interruptions since 10:00 o'clock this morning. Also, I have to try another case tomorrow. I want to save time. I have given [fol. 2240] you an opportunity to express yourself.

Mr. Hall: May I pass on to No. 9, then, your Honor?

The Court: I will grant that first part of 7, as I have changed it.

Mr. Dixon: May we have the language, your Honor?

The Court: I merely strike out the words "anyone or more of" on lines 13 and 14, and then strike the "s" and make it so it will read "on the following condition:" you don't even have to put in "A." It is only 1.

It will read "furnished by defendant and marked as such," and then continue with the phrase. And then at the end where it says "products" there will be a comma, and then say "and to prescribe by agreement regulations for such storing, handling and disposing of such products not inconsistent with this decree."

I don't think 9, either directly or in the alternative has any place in the decree. This, again, is telling you what you can do about the credits and about painting, and all sorts of things which are regulatory of your agreement with others.

There is nothing to prevent you from saying here, "I am going to do it upon this basis, otherwise I will not deal with you."

This man isn't before me to compel you to deal with him. I don't want to establish in advance the conditions under [fol. 2241] which you can deal. These are just as foreign to the decree as the ones I rejected in a portion of 7 and 8.

Mr. Hall: May we have a general paragraph stating that we may refuse to deal with a customer for any reason we think best?

The Court: You have that right. I don't need to give it to you.

Mr. Hall: I am not certain whether we have it under the decree, or not. I don't want to advise the company to proceed in a way that will be in contempt of court.

The Court: This says: * * * from inducing or compelling, or attempting to induce or compel, by any means whatever any independent dealer to enter into any contract which requires (a) and (b).

All it does is prevent you from doing that.

I think those that I have granted are all I care to grant, without making the decree complex.

Mr. Hall: Without arguing, your Honor, may I direct your attention to page 7, No. C? That is just about what your Honor stated we are permitted to do. May we not have that included?

The Court: Which is that?

Mr. Hall: "From freely selecting the service station or garage operators to whom it will sell or contract to sell any of its petroleum products or sponsored products, or from [fol. 2242] declining or refusing to * * *" that is C on page 7.

The Court: That can go in provided you put in an exception. "providing such failure to refuse is not grounded upon refusal to condition such dealing upon the contracts prohibited by this decree."

If you want it that way, I have no objection to it.

Mr. Hall: Will your Honor read that again?

The Court: "providing such refusal to deal on the part of the defendants is not based upon the refusal of the dealers to accept conditions prohibited by this decree."

With that modification you may have subdivision C of 9.

Mr. Hall: That looks as if it threw it right back into the broad ambiguity which now appears in the decree.

The Court: No. The decree is a simple decree. We have just certain specific contracts, and the decree must be understood in the light of the findings, and the contracts are referred to in the findings.

All right.

Mr. Hall: I would like your Honor to give some attention to Paragraph 10. That is as to preservation of normal landlord and tenant relationship. In cases where the company owns the fee title, where the company is the lessee from a lessor other than the operator, certainly there is nothing in the law or nothing in your Honor's ruling which [fol. 2243] should prevent protective provisions in leases with reference to alterations, additions or changes with respect to improvements.

The Court: There is nothing that is in the way. I am not interfering with the rights you have as a landlord, or the holder of what we used to call in war contracts the prime lease.

Mr. Hall: I am glad to hear your Honor say that, because when your Honor signs this decree that perhaps will enlighten us, but as the decree stands, its breadth and generality is not such as to give us any assurance that we can do those things.

The Court: We are not depriving you of a property right or any contractual right that you have.

Mr. Hall: Then what is the possible objection to including it in the decree?

Mr. Dixon: We have the same objection, your Honor, to this as we had to the other provisions. We feel that it may be misconstrued by the dealers here who are subject to these contracts, and we don't think it is in any sense necessary to the carrying out of the provisions of this decree.

On the other hand, it is possible, although we are frank to say we know of no situations at this time, where provisions in the lease might be used for purposes of violation of the decree.

[fol. 2244] The government feels if such evidence does develop, or such conditions do appear, that the government would want to feel free to come in to court under this decree and submit the facts to your Honor for consideration as to whether or not it was in violation of the provisions of this decree, after directing them to the attention of the defendants.

The Court: This clause would have to be tied to the decree, too. The difficulty in these decrees is the moment you sign them the question arises as to what they mean, and the object of the statute and of the rules requiring them to be set forth is to incorporate in the injunction what is known as the Amidon decree. Judge Amidon, who for many years was a judge of the District Court in North Dakota, I believe it was, began forty years ago to agitate against injunctive decrees that were couched in general language that carried little meaning, and he tried to get around it by making decrees in simple language, and that has been the subject of a lot of discussion in all sorts of treatises, including Justice Frankfurter's in Mr. Green's famous book on the injunction, especially as it relates to labor disputes. So the new rules require two things. You would be surprised, Mr. Hall, how many decrees I have sent back because they failed to set forth the reasons for the decree. I have pointed out even an interlocutory decree [fol. 2245] has to set forth the reasons. So the object is to put it in simple language.

Here the scope of the decree is very narrow. The government is attacking just certain restrictive clauses in a contract. The moment you put in the things that you don't do, you are giving rise to the question as to why that was necessary, why exceptions are necessary.

It says nothing here about the ownership. There is merely a clause here which says in those stations which are operated by independent dealers, which are defined, you cannot do certain things. And we do not intend to interfere with any of the rights that you may have under the law of California as a landlord or as a lessee where you are bound by agreement with your prime lessor to do certain things, whether it is operating the stations and keeping them in repair, and things like that, or even regulating the hours during which you will conduct the business or those things.

Mr. Hall: These paragraphs——

The Court: If we modify it that this decree does not relate to any other agreements between the Standard and landlord and tenant, either it is innocuous or it is confusing. I don't think we should have that in there. I will deny that.

Mr. Hall: Let me ask your Honor this: under the decree [fol. 2246] as framed, and I assume will become your Honor's decree, can we contract to supply part of the requirements of a dealer?

The Court: There is nothing to prevent you from fixing an amount. But I don't want, at the same time, to tell the government that they may not contend that in actuality it is a method of avoiding the decree.

I will rule on that when I get to it. I cannot anticipate what is going to arise.

Mr. Hall: I am not trying to avoid the decree.

The Court: It is the same situation that Texaco raised.

Mr. Hall: The whole purpose of this, this afternoon, your Honor, is so we may not be in contempt of a general decree.

The Court: This is a very simple decree. I remember one of the dissenting Justices in one of the cases pointed to the fact that the three judges, including Judge Hand, listened to six days of arguments as to the terms of the decree and the terms of the findings, and he said that they ought to take their word for it and not tell them to consider further matter.

This is a simple decree and the issues were delimited purposely.

The government stated right from the beginning that [fol. 2247] they are not seeking to divest you of any ownership in any stations; that all they are seeking is to eliminate certain clauses. And that is what it ought to be. Merely because some argument was made and certain evils were pointed out doesn't make it necessary to cover them by the decree, because I don't cover them positively.

Mr. Hall: We are simply asking your Honor as a court of equity to do an equitable thing, to tell us in these specific instances that I have suggested whether or not we can do it.

The Court: I should not be asked in advance to anticipate all the matters that might arise in the future. Supposing something happens to me, gentlemen? Younger men than I have died or become disabled. Why should I bind in advance any other judge who might be called upon to determine this by postulating a situation that is not before me?

Furthermore, we have this custom here: it is our custom that if a contempt citation is brought before one of us, at times we choose not to hear it, especially when you feel you might have to punish somebody. You heard some of the arguments in this Cole case. I had another case involving Loews, Inc., where I issued an injunction preventing a person from using the word "Metro" as a trade name for phonograph records, because the company is also in the business of selling phonographs of their own, and because [fol. 2248] the name had become associated in the trade with that firm. Everybody refers to "Metro" instead of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. And I issued a decree. Then when affidavits were filed asking me to punish the man for contempt, I decided that I was so close to the situation that I had better give some other judge a chance to investigate whether there was a violation. And I am glad I did, because the particular judge sent the man to jail for violating the decree, and I would rather that he did it than I did it.

I mention that merely to point out that there are so many reasons why I should not give an advance opinion as to possible violations and tie my hands or tie the hands of a future judge who might pass on any attempted violation.

There is no limit to a decree of this character. You know decrees like this have gone on for as many as twenty years. I only have ten years to go before I am eligible for retirement.

Mr. Hall: We are not asking your Honor to tie the hands of a future judge; we are asking you to put into this decree simple paragraphs, and there are not many of them, which will permit the company to incur the large expense necessary in revising its distribution system without fear of contempt before this court.

The Court: After the judgment has become final, if the judgment becomes final, then I would be open under this [fol. 2249] general clause to a friendly discussion that may be brought up ultimately to clarify various matters. It isn't only a receiver who has a right to come to a court of equity and ask for clarification. I can conceive that you might come into court and ask, under this general decree, that certain practices that you intend to put into effect might be considered so that you could be advised about the matter, or that the decree be amplified in that respect.

Mr. Hall: That is what we are asking for now.

The Court: I wouldn't do it now. I am merely saying that I might do it.

This Judgment is not final. The Supreme Court might hold that I was absolutely wrong. They might disagree with me. I think I am right in the interpretation. They might disagree. You may be right that this is a modification of the rule in the Yellow Cab case and the other cases which called for a different judgment, and the court might agree with you.

They disagreed with you and me on the question of venue, on the question of forum non conveniens. Although, as I have said to others with whom I have discussed the matter, Mr. Justice Jackson was consistent. I would rather they based their ruling upon that case, as far as I as a trial judge am concerned, and say in no case does the doctrine apply to special venue statutes, rather than merely tell me [fol. 2250] that it does not apply to antitrust, as the other cases told me that they don't apply to the Federal Employers Liability Act. So you may be right on this.

I trust you will find me reasonable after the Judgment becomes final and you are about to engage in the practices, that you will feel free to have the United States representative come before me and discuss these matters, either formally or informally, with a view of determining, before you incur any such liability, as to whether certain practices you propose could be very well included in the decree, or there be sort of a tacit agreement that they are not objectionable, before you embark upon a new policy which somebody else might question.

All right.

Colloquy re Objections to Findings

How about the Findings?

Mr. Hall: I have nothing to say about the Findings.

The Court: All right, gentlemen.

Mr. Hall: Except I would like for the record to show that I object specifically to each and every paragraph and sentence in the proposed Findings.

The Court: That is no longer necessary. That used to be necessary under the old rule and you had to propose counter-findings, otherwise you couldn't question the sufficiency of the evidence. But that was abolished by the new rules, so it is no longer necessary. However, the record will [fol. 2251] show your usual objection, which I overruled.

Gentlemen, it is not our custom to sign a decree on a different date than findings, so I will keep the findings until you make the changes, and I will return the original to you so that you can use such pages as are not modified, and merely make the amendments that I have allowed, and then you can present it. Then without waiving objection you can make a legend that they conform to the changes allowed without waiving any right.

Mr. Dixon: Approve this as to form only, then, is that agreeable?

Mr. Hall: I will adopt his Honor's formula rather than yours, Mr. Dixon.

The Court: Put it down approved as conforming to the Court's order dated today.

Mr. Hall: How long will your Honor be in town?

The Court: I will be here until Friday, Friday morning. I will keep this copy of mine on which I have made the notations, so as to check. If you gentlemen put that notation on it, I will know as written it conforms to the order made.

We will adjourn until tomorrow morning.

Dealer Agreement

Dated ; 19

1. STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," agrees to sell to hereinafter called "Dealer," and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at

The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity.

2. Deliveries shall be made in Company's cutomary manner. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products hereunder shall be Company's posted price to its dealers generally at time and place of delivery hereunder for the particular product and type of delivery involved. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option.

3. The products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trade-marks or brands for such products, and shall not be sold, or offered for sale, at prices lower than Company's authorized retail prices therefor at time and place of sale. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging the trade for gasoline or lubricating oil sold to Dealer hereunder, it is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval. Company shall be excused from making deliveries hereunder while prevented from or hindered in doing so in its customary manner due to causes beyond its control. Whenever such causes require that deliveries of any product hereunder be restricted, Company reserves the right to restrict deliveries of such product to Dealer proportionately with restrictions on deliveries of such products to other comparable dealers in Dealer's vicinity.

4. Dealer shall pay to Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, as follows:

5. This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing , 19 , and ending , 19 , and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first 6 months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year, by giving to the other at least 30 days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agreement shall terminate forthwith upon the termination of any [fol. 2253] lease which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement, or upon the termination of any sublease between Dealer and Company covering said premises.

6. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, fankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property (including Dealer's property), or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the handling therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

7. In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

8. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as a result of the transaction herein provided for, or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

9. This agreement shall not be assignable without the prior written consent of the Company. The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of the default of any other provision hereof. This agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof, terminate all prior Dealer Agreements and Agency Agreements between Dealer and Company respecting the premises covered by this agreement.

10. Company shall have the right at any time to remove from said premises any equipment or improvements placed thereunder or thereon which are now or hereafter owned by Company.

11. Execution of this agreement by Dealer constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Company until Company has executed this agreement and delivered a duplicate original to the Dealer.

Any and all consigned goods in Distributor's possession upon any termination of this contract shall be returned to Company.

PAYMENT

Distributor agrees to pay to Company, for the use of service station facilities and advertising material furnished Distributor hereunder, the sum of.....dollars ($.....) a month, payable in advance on the.....day of each and every month during the life of this contract, commencing....., 19.....

TERMS ON PRODUCTS PURCHASED BY DISTRIBUTOR

Net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option. If at any time Distributor shall fail to make any payment due hereunder, such failure shall, at Company's option, be deemed by Company to be a breach of the entire contract, and Company may suspend deliveries until such payment has been made or may terminate this contract. No such suspension or termination shall, however, affect any obligation of Distributor hereunder.

CHARGE OR TAX

Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to or as a result of the transaction herein provided for or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Distributor on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

PREVENTION OF PERFORMANCE

If Company is prevented from or hindered in making deliveries hereunder due to fire, riot, labor disturbances, earthquakes, war, acts of any government (whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal), accident, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities or supplies, shortage of products deliverable under this contract due to a shortage in the supply of crude oil produced in the State of California, or any cause beyond its control whether similar to the foregoing causes or not, the obligation of Company to make deliveries during the period of such disability shall be suspended.

CONDUCT OF DISTRIBUTOR'S BUSINESS

Distributor agrees to conduct all operations hereunder in strict compliance with all the laws, ordinances and regulations of governmental authorities. Distributor further agrees to conduct said operations in a manner best suited for the preservation of Company's property of whatever kind and nature, the furtherance of the sale of Company's products and the promotion of public good will towards the Company and its products. It is understood and agreed that Distributor in the performance of this agreement is engaged in an independent business, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Distributor with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of this agreement. It is further understood and agreed that Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Distributor's employees and that all employees of the Distributor shall be entirely under the control and direction of Distributor. Distributor undertakes and agrees that he will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with [illegible] Distributor accepts exclusive liability for all com-

Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreement

Dated , 19

1. Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," agrees to sell to hereinafter called "Dealer," and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at

The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity.

2. Deliveries shall be made in Company's customary manner. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products hereunder shall be Company's posted price to its dealers generally at time and place of delivery hereunder for the particular product and type of delivery involved. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option.

3. The products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trade-marks or brands for such products and shall not be sold, or offered for sale, at prices lower than Company's authorized retail prices therefor at time and place of sale. Company shall be excused from making deliveries hereunder while prevented from or hindered in doing so in its customary manner due to causes beyond its control. Whenever such causes require that deliveries of any product hereunder be restricted, Company reserves the right to restrict deliveries of such product to Dealer proportionately with restrictions on deliveries of such products to other comparable dealers in Dealer's vicinity.

4. As additional consideration for Dealer's execution of this agreement, Company agrees to install the equipment and facilities listed below, title to such equipment and facilities to remain in Company:

Company agrees to purchase the following facilities and equipment from Dealer:

5. Dealer shall pay to Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, as follows:

[fol. 2257] 6. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property (including Dealer's property); or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises; either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

7. In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

8. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as a result of the transaction herein provided for or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

9. This agreement shall not be assignable without the prior written consent of the Company. The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of the default of any other provision hereof. This agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof, terminate all prior Dealer Agreements between Dealer and Company or Subleases from Company to Dealer respecting the premises covered by this agreement.

10. Company shall have the right at any time to remove from said premises any equipment or improvements placed thereunder or thereon which are now or hereafter owned by Company.

N. The term of this agreement shall be from to .

12. Execution of this agreement by Dealer constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Company until Company has executed this agreement and delivered a duplicate original to the Dealer.

Dated , 194

1. STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, hereinafter called "Company" agrees to sell to hereinafter called "Dealer," and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used, sold, or bought to be used or sold, by Dealer at herein after called "said premises". The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of such products generally sold by Company to its Dealers.

Deliveries shall be made in Company's customary manner. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products hereunder shall be Company's posted price to its dealers generally at time and place of delivery hereunder for the particular product and type of delivery involved. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option.

2. Company agrees to sell or consign to Dealer and Dealer agrees to purchase or receive from Company, and stock and offer for sale, all Dealer's requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer on said premises. The tires, tubes and batteries to be supplied Dealer hereunder shall be those lines supplied by Company from time to time to its dealers generally. Company will deliver to Dealer such other merchandise currently sold by Company that Dealer wishes to handle hereunder, in quantities necessary in opinion of Company to meet Dealer's requirements at said premises. Whether tires, tubes, batteries and other non-petroleum merchandise which Dealer handles hereunder shall be consigned or sold to Dealer shall depend on Company's current policies but Company will allow Dealer the commissions, or the equivalent thereof in differentials below Company's selling price therefor, as set forth in the attached Schedule "A". Company may modify this schedule from time to time. All tires, tubes, and batteries sold or consigned to Dealer hereunder shall be sold by Dealer at not less than Company's authorized retail prices therefor. The proceeds of the sale of consigned merchandise shall be held by Dealer as trustee for Company and paid over to Company upon demand. Dealer shall be responsible for all loss of, or damage to, consigned goods belonging to Company in Dealer's possession.

3. All expenses of the storage, handling, sale and distribution at said premises of products and merchandise consigned or sold to Dealer under this agreement shall be paid by Dealer.

4. The petroleum products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trade-marks or brands for such products and shall not be sold, or offered for sale, at prices lower than Company's authorized retail prices therefor at time and place of sale. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging for gasoline or lubricating oils, it is agreed that the design, size and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval.

5. Company shall be excused from making deliveries hereunder while prevented from or hindered in doing so in its customary manner due to causes beyond its control. Whenever such causes require that deliveries of any product or merchandise hereunder be restricted, Company reserves the right to restrict deliveries of such product or merchandise to Dealer proportionately with restrictions on deliveries of such product or merchandise to other comparable dealers in Dealer's vicinity.

6. Dealer shall pay Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, as follows:

7. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on said premises and that they are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep them at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its descretion, maintain and repair said facilities.

8. Company may at any time remove from said premises any equipment or improvements placed thereunder or thereon which are now or hereafter owned by Company.

9. This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing , 19 , and ending , 19 , and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first six months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year, by giving to the other at least thirty days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agree- [fol. 2259] ment shall terminate forthwith upon the termination of any lease which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement, or upon the termination of any sublease between Dealer and Company covering said premises. Consigned goods in Dealer's possession upon any termination of this contract shall be returned to Company.

10. Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer's conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to control Dealer's employees, all of whom shall be entirely under Dealer's control and direction and he shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer shall, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under applicable Workmen's Compensation Laws covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer shall pay and bear all contributions and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

11. Dealer shall protect, defend, and hold Company harmless from and against all liability for damage to property (including Dealer's property) or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees on, or in connection with the operation of, said premises.

12. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as a result of the transaction herein provided for, or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

13. This agreement shall not be assigned without the prior written consent of Company. The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of any other default hereunder. This agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof, terminate all prior Dealer Agreements, Distributor Agreements, and Agency Agreements between Dealer and Company respecting said premises.

14. Execution of this agreement by Dealer constitutes an offer which Company may accept by executing this agreement and delivering a duplicate original to Dealer.

DELIVERY

Deliveries of gasoline shall be made at the station, on orders of Distributor, by tank truck, in fairly even monthly quantities.

PRICE

The price Distributor shall pay Company for petroleum products purchased by Distributor shall be Company's posted price for the same or similar products to its dealers generally in Distributor's vicinity at time and place of delivery.

SELLING PRICE

Any and all petroleum products sold to Distributor hereunder and sold by Distributor shall be sold at not less than Company's authorized retail price therefor at time and place of sale and said products shall not be advertised, offered for sale, or sold at a lower price.

PRICE SIGNS

If Distributor posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Distributor is charging the trade for gasoline or lubricating oil sold to Distributor hereunder, it is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval.

OTHER MERCHANDISE

Company agrees to sell or consign to Distributor and Distributor agrees to purchase or receive from Company, and stock and offer for sale, all of Distributor's requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor on the premises above described. The tires, tubes and batteries to be supplied Distributor hereunder shall be Company's regular line of Atlas Tires, Atlas Tubes, and Atlas Batteries currently sold at service stations operated by Company in Distributor's vicinity. Company will deliver to Distributor such other Atlas merchandise currently sold by Company at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc. that Distributor wishes to handle hereunder, in quantities necessary in opinion of Company to meet the station's trade requirements. Whether tires, tubes, batteries and other non-petroleum merchandise which Distributor handles hereunder shall be consigned or sold to Distributor shall depend on Company's current policies, but Company will allow Distributor the commissions or the equivalent thereof in differentials below Company's selling price therefor, as set forth in the attached schedule marked Schedule "A" and hereby made a part hereof. This schedule may be modified from time to time by Company. All tires, tubes, and batteries sold or consigned to Distributor hereunder shall be sold by Distributor at not less than Company's authorized retail prices therefor. All expenses of the storage, handling, sale and distribution at or from the station of products and merchandise consigned or sold to Distributor under the terms of this or any other paragraph hereof shall be paid by Distributor. The proceeds of the sale of consigned merchandise shall be held by Distributor as Trustee for Company and paid over to Company on demand.

ADVERTISING

Upon any termination of this agreement, Company shall have the right to remove any and all signs and advertising matter and any other property placed on the premises by Company. Upon such termination, Distributor agrees to paint out any signs or colors at the station which may indicate in any way that Company's products are sold thereon.

OPERATION OF STATION

Distributor agrees to promote diligently the sale of products and merchandise delivered to Distributor hereunder, and to use Distributor's best efforts to increase the sale thereof, while and to the extent that Distributor is handling Company's products hereunder.

MEMORANDUM

San Francisco, California
June 13, 1945

LEASE SITE AND LESSOR BUILT STATION
LOAN $4,000.00
KAMAS, UTAH

MR. E. J. McCLANAHAN:

It is recommended Company lease site and lessor built service station and garage at First South and Main Street, Kamas, Utah for a period of 10 years. Company to loan Lessor $4,000.00 to assist Lessor in the construction of facilities, securing a return of $2,500.00 without interest in 120 equal monthly payments, lease and sublease at offset rentals. The loan is to be secured by a first mortgage and Lessor's promissory note.

The proposed transaction exceeds Dealer Sales authority inasmuch as 100% of the loan principal is not to be repaid and the amount to be repaid covers a period of 120 months rather than 60 months.

Estimated Normal Sales:	4,000 gallons a month
Loan:	$4,000.00
Repayment:	$2,500.00 at no interest in 120 equal monthly payments.
Security:	First mortgage on property. No Appraisal has been secured but the estimated value of the vacant site is estimated at $500.00 and our Lease with Lessor will provide that improvements to be made will not be less than $6,000.00.
Proposed Lease:	10 year period from date construction is completed. Lease provides for a gallonage carry-over clause extending tenure until 484,000 gallons have been sold.
Proposed Ground Rental:	$40.00 a month
Rental:	Offset under sublease.
Maximum Lease Commitment:	30 days
Maximum Assured Tenure:	120 months
Deficit under Operating Agreements:	None
Deficit under Loan:	$1,500.00
Deficit per Month:	$12.50

MR. E. J. McCLANAHAN: June 13, 1945

Ordinarily we do not like to consider making a loan where full return of the principal is not received. However, the Salt Lake District has advised that the Utah Oil and Refining Company, who at present do not have any representation at Kamas, offered our proposed Lessor a week after our deal was tentatively concluded, $5,000.00 towards construction of his service station and garage with 100% absorption with no note or mortgage as security.

Proposed Lessor, Harold W. Butler, has been a resident of Kamas for 31 years, is an experienced mechanic, well known and liked in the Community. Dun and Bradstreet's report says record good and local bank advises his net worth is $12,000.00. Mr. Butler will have $2,000.00 of his own funds in the proposed construction. A projected income and expense statement shows a monthly return of $379.00 to Dealer, based on 4,000 gallons of gasoline per month, after all expenses have been met.

We have one other account in the City of Kamas at the present time, however, it is felt that proposed service station and garage will not detrimentally affect our existing account.

It is recommended favorable consideration be given to this proposal.

LEASE

Dated April 10, 194 5

1. HAROLD W. BUTLER and TESSA T. BUTLER, his wife,

hereby leases to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, Lessee, for the term commencing on the 1st day of June, 19 45, and ending on the 31st day of May, 19 55, the following described premises in the City of Kamas, County of Summit, State of Utah:

Commencing at the northeast corner of Lot Three, Block Sixteen, Kamas Townsite Survey, and running thence West One-hundred and Twenty-three and three-quarters feet, thence South One-hundred feet, thence East One-hundred and Twenty-three and three-quarters feet, thence North One-hundred feet to the place of beginning, together with all improvements and fixtures now or hereafter placed on said premises by Lessor.

2. Lessee agrees to pay Lessor rental for the use and occupancy of the leased premises as follows:

In advance on the first day of each and every calendar month during the term hereof, the sum of Forty and no/100 Dollars ($40.00), provided, however, that no rentals shall be due and payable hereunder until the date on which possession of the leased premises is delivered over to Lessee with the service station completely constructed thereon and all fixtures and equipment installed by Lessor in accordance with Paragraph 3 hereof. Lessee shall have the right to set off against rental [illegible] any rentals owing Lessee by Lessor under the terms of any other agreement in effect between

3. Lessor agrees forthwith to construct a service station and garage satisfactory to Lessee, on the leased premises, at Lessor's own expense, in strict accordance with the ground plan, plan of elevations, and list of improvements and fixtures and Exhibit "B" marked Exhibit "A", all of which are hereto attached, and made a part hereof, title to all such property to remain in Lessor. Should any of the improvements or fixtures become obsolete or unfit for the purposes intended, Lessee shall have the right at Lessee's option to return any such improvements or fixtures to Lessor at .....

..... Kemas, Utah ....., and to replace the same with such improvements, fixtures or equipment as Lessee may deem necessary; title, however, to such new improvements, fixtures or equipment to remain in Lessee.

4. Lessor agrees to maintain in good condition and repair all service station equipment, facilities, yards, driveways, and other improvements installed or made by Lessor on the leased premises. Should Lessor fail to so maintain and repair, Lessee shall, at Lessee's option, have the right either to make such repairs, and deduct the cost thereof from rents accruing hereunder, with reasonable interest allowance for monies advanced, or to terminate this lease.

5. Lessor agrees to insure the leased premises and all property placed thereon by Lessor against loss by fire. In the event said premises or property are destroyed wholly or in part by any cause during the term hereof, then Lessor shall forthwith re-enter said leased premises and shall with diligence repair the destroyed portion or portions of said premises or property. If, however, the leased premises or the destroyed portion thereof become untenantable in the opinion of Lessee, then the rent shall cease until such time as they are again, in the opinion of Lessee, tenantable. Should Lessor neglect forthwith to restore said premises to the same condition as they were prior to their destruction, Lessee shall, at Lessee's option:

(a) Repair said premises, deducting the cost thereof from rents accruing, with reasonable interest allowance for monies advanced, or

(b) Terminate this lease.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, Lessor shall not be obligated to restore or repair any improvements, fixtures or equipment placed on the leased premises by Lessee.

6. Lessee shall have the right at any time during Lessee's occupancy of the lease premises, or within a reasonable time thereafter to remove any and all buildings, improvements, fixtures, or equipment placed by Lessee or by Lessee's predecessor in interest, in, under, or upon the leased premises or acquired by Lessee whether before or during the term hereof, but Lessee shall not be obliged to do so.

(b) Terminate this lease.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, Lessor shall not be obligated to restore or repair any improvements, fixtures or equipment placed on the leased premises by Lessee.

6. Lessee shall have the right at any time during Lessee's occupancy of the lease premises, or within a reasonable time thereafter to remove any and all buildings, improvements, fixtures, or equipment placed by Lessee or by Lessee's predecessor in interest, in, under, or upon the leased premises or acquired by Lessee whether before or during the term hereof, but Lessee shall not be obliged to do so.

7. Lessee shall pay all taxes levied or assessed during the term of this lease on any facilities located on the leased premises while such facilities are owned by Lessee. All other real or personal property taxes or assessments, including all street improvements or other special taxes or assessments, shall be paid by Lessor.

8. Lessee shall have the right during its occupancy of the leased premises to use such premises for any lawful purposes whatsoever, including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the use of such premises for service station purposes. Lessee shall further have the right during its occupancy, to rearrange or remodel any improvements, trade or other fixtures, structures, buildings, or equipment on said leased premises; to construct and maintain on the leased premises such other buildings, structures, improvements or equipment as Lessee may desire, and to remove the same or any part thereof at will; and to cut curbs, construct roadways and use sidewalks for vehicles to pass to and from the leased premises. If it is or becomes unlawful for any reason to conduct any operation or to erect or maintain any structure on the leased premises, or if any part of the leased premises or the approaches thereto are condemned or changed by public authority, so that it becomes impossible or impracticable in Lessee's opinion to use the leased premises for any purpose for which such premises are being used at the time such use is declared unlawful or such condemnation or change is effected, then Lessee shall have the right to terminate this lease by giving Lessor ten (10) days notice in writing of such termination.

9. Every provision hereof imposing an obligation on Lessor is a material inducement and consideration for the execution of this lease by Lessee, and any breach, violation, or failure with respect thereto shall entitle Lessee to terminate this lease forthwith by giving Lessor written notice of such termination, and no waiver by Lessee of any such breach, violation, or failure, shall waive any continuing, subsequent, or other breach, violation, or failure.

10. If any tax or charge is hereafter imposed upon Lessee, pursuant to any so-called Chain Store Tax Law hereinafter enacted by any governmental authority, for or on account of the operation of a service station on the leased premises, Lessee may terminate this lease at any time on ninety (90) days' notice to Lessor served after the enactment of such law.

11. If Lessee shall hold over after the expiration of the term of this lease, or any extension thereof, such tenancy shall be from month to month only and upon all the terms, covenants, and conditions hereof.

~~notice in writing of Lessee's intention so to do at any time prior to the expiration of the term hereof.~~

12. The term of this lease is hereby extended from the first day of June, 1955 for a period equal to the period from June 1, 1945 until the service station and garage referred to in Paragraph #3 hereof is completed as provided therein, subject however to the right of termination hereinafter provided for.

12a. If, during the term of this lease as hereinabove extended, the Lessor has not purchased from the Lessee a total of Four-hundred and Eighty-four Thousand (484,000) gallons of gasoline for delivery on the demised premises, the term of this lease shall be automatically extended until such time as Four-hundred and Eighty-four Thousand (484,000) gallons of gasoline have been purchased and delivered.

13. Lessee, while in possession, shall have the prior right, to be exercised by it or by its nominee, to buy the whole or any part of the leased premises or any larger parcel of which the leased premises are a part. If Lessor receives from a third party an acceptable bona fide offer to buy such property, Lessor shall forthwith give Lessee written notice of such offer. Lessee or its nominee shall have thirty (30) days from the receipt of such notice to buy such property at the terms of such offer relating to such property, or at such lesser terms as Lessor and Lessee or its nominee may agree upon. If Lessee or its nominee fails to exercise this option and Lessor sells such property to a third person, such sale shall be made subject to this lease. Lessee agrees to notify Lessor in writing of any nominee designated for the purpose of this paragraph, and warrants that such nominee will be financially responsible; Lessor agrees to recognize and accept any such designation of nominee for the purpose of this paragraph.

14. Lessee shall have the right to terminate this lease at any time during the term hereof, or any extension thereof, by giving Lessor thirty (30) days written notice of Lessee's intention so to do.

15. All rentals payable hereunder shall be paid to Harold W. Butler less and until Lessor designates some other party to receive rentals.

16. Written notices to Lessor hereunder shall be addressed to Lessor at Kamas, Utah

17. Written notices to Lessee hereunder shall be given to Lessee at

P. O. Box 719, Salt Lake City 9, Utah All notices shall be deposited in the United States Post Office properly addressed as aforesaid, postage fully prepaid, for delivery by registered mail

18. Execution of this lease by Lessor constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Lessee until Lessee has executed this lease and delivered a duplicate original thereof to Lessor.

19. This lease shall bind and inure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of Lessee, and shall bind and inure to the benefit of the heirs, administrators, executors, successors and assigns of Lessor.

18. Execution of this lease by Lessor constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Lessee until Lessee has executed this lease and delivered a duplicate original thereof to Lessor.

19. This lease shall bind and inure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of Lessee, and shall bind and inure to the benefit of the heirs, administrators, executors, successors and assigns of Lessor.

DEALER AGREEMENT

Dated April 10, , 19 45

1. STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," agrees to sell to HAROLD W. BUTLER hereinafter called "Dealer," and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at N.E. corner of First South and Main Street, Lemas, Utah

The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity.

2. Deliveries shall be made in Company's customary manner. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products hereunder shall be Company's posted price to its dealers generally at time and place of delivery hereunder for the particular product and type of delivery involved. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option.

3. The products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trade-marks or brands for such products. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging the trade for gasoline or lubricating oil sold to Dealer hereunder, it is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval. Company shall be excused from making deliveries hereunder while prevented from or hindered in doing so in its customary manner due to causes beyond its control. Whenever such causes require that deliveries of any product hereunder be restricted, Company reserves the right to restrict deliveries of such product to Dealer proportionately with restrictions on deliveries of such products to other comparable dealers in Dealer's vicinity.

4. Dealer shall pay to Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, as follows:

None.

of any lease which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement, or upon the termination of any sublease between Dealer and Company covering said premises.

6. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property (including Dealer's property), or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

7. In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

8. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as a result of the transaction herein provided for, or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

9. This agreement shall not be assignable without the prior written consent of the Company. The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of the default of any other provision hereof. This agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof, terminate all prior Dealer Agreements and Agency Agreements between Dealer and Company respecting the premises covered by this agreement.

10. Company shall have the right at any time to remove from said premises any equipment or improvements placed thereunder or thereon which are now or hereafter owned by Company.

11. Execution of this agreement by Dealer constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Company until Company has executed this agreement and delivered a duplicate original to the Dealer.

Harold W. Butler and Tessa T. Butler, his wife, mortgagors, in consideration of the sum of Four Thousand Dollars, ($4,000.00), to them in hand paid by Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, mortgagee, do hereby convey and warrant unto the mortgagee the following described real property located in Kamas, Summit County, State of Utah, to wit:

> Commencing at the northeast corner of Lot Three, Block Sixteen, Kamas Townsite Survey, and running thence West One-hundred and Twenty-three and three-quarters feet; thence South One-hundred feet; thence East One-Hundred and Twenty-three and three-quarters feet; thence North One-hundred feet to the place of beginning.

This conveyance is intended to be a mortgage securing the payment of a promissory note in the principal sum of $4000.00 and interest dated April 10, 1945, and payable in monthly installments of $20.83 each.

Mortgagors covenant and agree to pay all taxes and special assessments levied or assessed against said property and to keep all buildings and improvements thereon insured against loss or damage by fire and other casualty in the amount of the insurable value thereof and to pay all premiums required for such insurance promptly when the same become due. Such insurance shall provide for the loss to be payable to the mortgagee and the mortgagors as their interests in the mortgaged property may appear at the time of such loss or damage. Such insurance shall be procured in insurance companies acceptable to the mortgagee and the policy or policies delivered to it.

The mortgagors agree to procure promptly and maintain in force insurance covering all buildings and improvements hereafter placed upon the mortgaged premises insuring such buildings and improvements against loss by fire and other casualty in the amount of the insurable value thereof. Such insurance shall provide for the loss to be payable to the mortgagee and the mortgagors as [fol. 2289] their interests in the mortgaged property may together with improvements and fixtures located thereon.

Lessor shall have the right to terminate this lease at the end of any leasehold year during the term hereof, or at the end of the first six (6) months of any such year, by giving to Lessee, at least thirty (30) days prior thereto, written notice of its intention so to terminate this lease.

2. This sublease is subject to all the terms and conditions of the lease dated the 10th day of April, 19 45, from Harold W. Butler and Tessa T. Butler, his wife, to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA.

3. Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor as rental for the use and occupancy of the leased premises as follows:

In advance on the first day of each and every month during the term hereof the sum of Forty and no/100 Dollars ($40.00).

~~In addition thereto the sum of Twenty and 83/100 Dollars ($20.83) on the first~~ day of each and every month during the term hereof, provided however, that this additional rental shall not become due ~~or~~ payable hereunder until the combination service station ~~and garage~~ referred to in Paragraph #3 of the Lease above mentioned ~~has been completed as provided therein.~~

If any rental shall be due and unpaid, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for Lessor to re-enter the leased premises and remove all persons therefrom, and Lessee agrees to quit and deliver up the premises to the Lessor peaceably and quietly at the end of said term in as good order and condition as the same are now or may be put into.

4. Lessee shall handle and sell on the leased premises only such petroleum products as are sold Lessee by Lessor, and Lessee agrees not to store, handle, sell, or distribute on or from said premises any petroleum products of any description other than those petroleum products sold to Lessee by Lessor. The price payable by Lessee to Lessor for said petroleum products shall be Lessor's posted price for the same or similar products to its Dealers generally in

If any rental shall be due and unpaid, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for Lessor to re-enter the leased premises and remove all persons therefrom, and Lessee agrees to quit and deliver up the premises to the Lessor peaceably and quietly at the end of said term in as good order and condition as the same are now or may be put into.

4. Lessee shall handle and sell on the leased premises only such petroleum products as are sold Lessee by Lessor, and Lessee agrees not to store, handle, sell, or distribute on or from said premises any petroleum products of any description other than those petroleum products sold to Lessee by Lessor. The price payable by Lessee to Lessor for said petroleum products shall be Lessor's posted price for the same or similar products to its Dealers generally in Lessee's vicinity at time and place of delivery.

5. Lessee shall not sell or assign this sublease, or sublet the leased premises without written consent of Lessor first had and obtained.

6. Lessor shall pay all taxes levied or assessed during the term of this lease on any facilities while owned by Lessor and located on the leased premises. Lessee shall pay any taxes levied or assessed as the result of improvements owned by Lessee and located on said premises.

7. Execution of this lease by Lessee constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Lessor until Lessor has executed this sublease and delivered a duplicate original thereof to Lessee.

None.

Dealer's attention is called to the fact that as of the date of this agreement there is a shortage of gasoline and other petroleum products on the Pacific Coast due to the needs of the Armed Forces and the war effort. Therefore, Company will not be able to, nor shall it be obligated to deliver all the gasoline or other petroleum products required by Dealer as specified in Paragraph 1 of this agreement during the period of such shortage. It is Company's present intention to prorate its available supply of products equitably among its customers (contract or otherwise) during this and other periods of product shortage or whenever due to any of the other causes enumerated in the prevention of performance paragraph of this agreement Company is unable to make deliveries to all such customers. However, Company shall in no way be obligated to thus prorate its available supply and its failure, partial or otherwise, to make deliveries to Dealer shall not be a breach of this agreement, notwithstanding that Company is making deliveries to others. Upon termination of the cause or causes for suspension of deliveries, performance hereunder shall be resumed, but nothing herein shall be construed as extending the term of this agreement.

5. This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing June 1, 1948, and ending May 31st, 1955, and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first 6 months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year, by giving to the other at least 30 days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agreement shall terminate forthwith upon the termination appear and the policy or policies shall be delivered to the mortgagee.

Should the mortgagors fail to pay any taxes or insurance premiums when the same become due the mortgagee at its option may pay the same and the amount so advanced by it shall be secured by this mortgage and shall be due and payable on demand and shall bear interest from the date of such payment at the rate of eight per cent per annum until repaid.

Mortgagors covenant and agree to keep and maintain all buildings and improvements located on the mortgaged premises or that may hereafter be placed thereon in good condition and state of repair and not to remove the same therefrom without the written consent of the mortgagee first had and obtained.

Should default be made by the mortgagors in the performance of any of the covenants or conditions hereof to be by them performed or in the payment of the indebtedness secured hereby as and when the same becomes due, the mortgagee may proceed to foreclose this mortgage.

If suit be brought to foreclose this mortgage, the mortgagee shall be entitled to have a receiver appointed to take possession of the mortgaged property, to operate the same, to make all needed repairs thereon, to lease the same and collect and receive all rents, issues and profits therefrom pending such foreclosure proceedings and to do all things necessary or proper to fully protect and preserve the mortgaged property.

Should the proceeds of any foreclosure sale of the mortgaged premises be insufficient to pay the full amount of the indebtedness secured hereby together with all costs and expenses of foreclosure including the costs and expenses of receivership and a reasonable attorney's fee, the mortgagors agree to pay the amount of such deficiency.

[fol. 2290] Should suit be brought to foreclose this mortgage, the mortgagors agree to pay all costs and expenses incident thereto including the costs and expenses of any receivership together with a reasonable attorney's fee.

Witness the hands of the mortgagors this 10th day of April, 1945.

Mr. Harold W. Butler, Mrs. Tessa T. Butler, Kamas, Utah.

DEAR SIR AND MADAM:

Reference is made to the following documents:

a. Your promissory note in our favor dated April 10, 1945, in the principal sum of $4000.00 payable in installments.

b. Your mortgage in our favor securing the above mentioned promissory note covering the following described premises located in Kamas, County of Summit, State of Utah, to wit:

Commencing at the northeast corner of Lot 3, Block 16, Kamas Townsite Survey, and running thence West 123¾ feet; thence South 100 feet; thence East 123¾ feet; thence North 100 feet, to the place of beginning.

c. Sublease dated April 10, 1945, wherein we have subleased to you the property above described for a term commencing on the 1st day of June, 1945, and ending on the 30th day of May, 1955.

If the above mentioned sublease remains in full force and effect during the term thereof and if all rental due and to become due thereunder during the full term thereof is paid to us at the time and in the manner provided for in said sub-lease, we will cancel your promissory note and surrender the same to you and release the mortgage above referred to.

We do hereby expressly waive any right to declare any installment of your promissory note to be due or payable so [fol. 2293] long as you are not in default in the performance of the terms of the lease between us dated April 10, 1945, covering the property above described requiring you to construct a service station and garage on the property above described.

We also waive any interest which may become due under the terms of your promissory note so long as you are not in default in the performance of the terms of said lease requiring you to construct a service station and garage.

Very truly yours, Standard Oil Company of California, by W. G. Watson, Attorney in fact.

MEMORANDUM

San Francisco, California

March 12, 1945

Loan—$10,000. SS. 3961 A. D.

Mildred C. Ransom, 3rd & Main Sts., Hermiston, Oregon

Mr. E. J. McClanahan

It is recommended Company loan dealer $10,000 to assist in purchase of the subject existing service station and garage, sign a ten year lease, sublease and dealer agreement TBA on a two-party basis.

Previously, proposal wherein it was recommended that Company purchase the realty and facilities for $10,000 and resell to dealer over a ten-year term, was not approved by Central Counties Company.

The recommended loan proposal exceeds Dealer Sales authority as to amount recommended to be loaned and return to be received on loan.

Estimated Normal Sales: 7,000 gallons of gasoline a month.

Loan: $10,000.

Repayment: 60% over a period of five years—no interest.

Security: First mortgage on real estate and facilities valued at $13,500.

Facilities Investment:

Value of existing: $3,206—no return to be secured.

New: None.

Ground Rental: $70.00 a month—1¢ a gallon (offset).

Realty & Improvement Taxes: (To be paid by Company) $14.83 a month—.212¢ a gallon.

Maximum Lease Commitments: 1 month.

Maximum Assured Tenure: (including options), 120 months.

Absorption Under Operating Agreements and Note: 1.070¢.

Netback for Chart Computation: 9.074¢ — (Wholesale Dealer now receiving 1.5¢ commission on gasoline, .5¢ of which is on an oral day-to-day basis. This temporary allowance is not included in above computation.)

Minimum Allowable Netback: 7.58¢ a gallon.

Dealer has right to terminate Company's present agreements by paying Company $3,206 (depreciated value of Company's existing investment) and has stated intention to do so if transaction is not approved. Texas Company [fol. 2295] has contacted dealer regarding establishing him as their wholesale distributor. (Texas Company does not now have bulk distribution plant in vicinity.)

This station represents 48.7% of the total resale business enjoyed by Wholesale Distributor who earned $632.00 net commission on sales to this unit in 1944. If account lost, it will undoubtedly be necessary to increase rate of commissions to Wholesale Distributor.

This proposal provides the dealer with a "stake in the business." Mr. Ransom, having 14 years' experience with Company's products as a dealer at Milton, Oregon, will operate the station which includes a Chevrolet Car and Truck Agency.

Proposal admirably fits Spokane's Representation Objective, this account being the only dealer Company has in Hermiston.

May we have your approval?

E. D. Thompson.

7. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on said premises and that they are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep them at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities.

8. Company may at any time remove from said premises any equipment or improvements placed thereunder or thereon which are now or hereafter owned by Company.

9. This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing April 1, 1945; and ending March 31, 1955, and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first six months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year, by giving to the other at least thirty days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. WARRANTY PERIOD AND ADJUSTMENT CHARGES

ATLAS PASSENGER TIRES—WARRANTY PERIOD

Passenger Car Service, 12 Months—Commercial Car Service, 6 Months

Atlas Passenger and Truck Tires Are Covered by Manufacturer's Warranty for Life Against Defective Workmanship and Materials

To Calculate Adjustment Charges on Passenger Tires:

1st—Determine current selling price of Tire (including excise tax).
2nd—Determine from customer's Warranty, number of months tire in service, and whether passenger or commercial car service.
3rd—Calculate from following chart adjustment charge to be paid by customer for replacement tire.

Passenger Car Service — Use figures as shown on following chart.
Commercial Car Service — Use figures on chart up to five months and multiply by two.

EXAMPLE

Adjustment on Passenger Tire (Passenger Car Service)
Current Selling Price (including excise tax) is $23.60.
Warranty Indicates Five Months' Service.

Adjustment Charge on Chart Under "5 Mos." for $23.00	$9.58
" " " " " " " " 60 cents	.25
Amount Customer Would Pay for Adjustment	$9.83

(Add Sales Tax, Where Applicable, to Adjustment Charges)

WARRANTY PERIOD AND ADJUSTMENT CHARGES (Cont.)

ATLAS BATTERIES—WARRANTY PERIOD

TYPE "A" — Passenger Car Service, 21 Months — Commercial Car Service, 12 Months TYPE "K" — Passenger Car Service, 12 Months — Commercial Car Service, 6 Months TYPE "AG" — Passenger Car Service, 27 Months — Commercial Car Service, 13 Months

To Calculate Adjustment Charges on Atlas Batteries:

1st — Determine current list price of battery.
2nd — Determine from customer's Warranty, number of months battery in service and whether passenger or commercial car service.
3rd — Calculate from following charts, adjustment charge to be paid by customer for replacement battery.

EXAMPLE

Adjustment on Type "A" Battery (Passenger Car Service)
Current List Price is $18.00
Warranty Indicates 13 Months' Service

Adjustment Charge on Chart Under "13 Mos." for $18.00	$9.29
" " " " " " " " 80 cents	.80
Amount Customer Would Pay for Adjustment	$9.79

(Add Sales Tax, Where Applicable, to Adjustment Charges)

If you adjust an Atlas Battery (Type "K") with an "A" or "AG" type or a Type "A" with an "AG," add to the adjustment charge the difference between the retail prices of the batteries. Do not adjust regular Atlas Battery (Type "A") with a Type "K," or Type "AG" with a Type "A." If adjustment is desired on that basis charge full RETAIL price for the replacement.

There is no charge for adjustments within 90 days of original purchase except when a Type "K" is replaced with an "A" or "AG" type, or when an "A" type is replaced with an "AG" type, in which event the difference in retail price is charged.

April 16, 1945

Mrs. Mildred C. Ranson
Main and Third Streets
Hermiston, Oregon

Dear Mrs. Ranson:

Reference is made to our letter of March 19, 1945 wherein we consented to your subletting to Hermiston Auto Company the premises referred to in the lease and sublease dated March 19, 1945 now operative between us.

In the event you should subsequently desire to sublet the premises to a party other than Hermiston Auto Company you agree to secure our written consent thereto prior to such subletting.

Should you desire at any time after April 1, 1947 to sell the service station operating equipment to such sublessee, we will release from the operation of the mortgage dated March 23, 1945 the following articles of equipment:

together with improvements and fixtures located thereon.

2. This sublease is subject to all the terms and conditions of the lease dated the 19th day of March, 1945, from Mildred C. Ransom, a married person dealing in her separate property to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA.

3. Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor as rental for the use and occupancy of the leased premises as follows:

In advance on the first day of each and every month for the full term hereof, the sum of Seventy and no/100 Dollars ($70.00).

If any rental shall be due and unpaid, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for Lessor to re-enter the leased premises and remove all persons therefrom, and Lessee agrees to quit and deliver up the premises to the Lessor peaceably and quietly at the end of said term in as good order and condition as the same are now or may be put into.

4. Lessee shall handle and sell on the leased premises only such petroleum products as are sold Lessee by Lessor, and Lessee agrees not to store, handle, sell, or distribute on or from said premises any petroleum products of any description other than those petroleum products sold to Lessee by Lessor. The price payable by Lessee to Lessor for said petroleum products shall be Lessor's posted price for the same or similar products to its Dealers generally in Lessee's vicinity at time and place of delivery.

5. Lessee shall not sell or assign this sublease, or sublet the leased premises without written consent of Lessor first had and obtained.

6. Lessor shall pay all taxes levied upon the leased premises or upon improvements placed by Lessor upon the leased premises or acquired by Lessor before or during the term hereof. Lessee shall pay any taxes levied or assessed as the result of improvements owned by Lessee and located on said premises.

7. Execution of this lease by Lessee constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Lessor until Lessor has executed this sublease and delivered a duplicate original thereof to Lessee.

GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT NO. 17-F.

LEASE

Dated March 19, 1945

1. Mildred C. Runyon, a married person dealing in her separate property hereby leases to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, Lessee, for the term commencing on the first day of April, 1945, and ending on the 31st day of March, 1955, the following described premises in the City of Hermiston County of Umatilla, State of Oregon:

Lessor,

M.C.R.

All of Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 in Block 5 of the Original Town, now City, of Hermiston, together with all improvements and fixtures located thereon, as more particularly set forth and described in Exhibit "A" attached hereto and made a part hereof.

M.C.R.

2. Lessee agrees to pay Lessor rental for the use and occupancy of the leased premises as follows:

In advance on the first day of each and every month for the full term hereof, the sum of Seventy and no/100 Dollars ($70.00).

provided, however, that no rentals shall be due and payable hereunder until the date on which possession of the leased premises has been delivered to Lessee. Lessee shall have the right to set off against rental payable hereunder any rentals owing Lessee by Lessor under the terms of any agreement in effect between Lessee and Lessor.

3. Should any of the improvements, fixtures or equipment referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, become obsolete or unfit for the purposes intended, Lessee shall have the right to return any such improvements, fixtures, or equipment to Lessor at Hermiston, Oregon and to replace the same with such improvements, fixtures or equipment as Lessee may deem necessary; title, however, to such new improvements, fixtures or equipment to remain in Lessee.

~~4. Lessor agrees during the term of this lease or any extension thereof to maintain in good condition and repair all service station equipment, facilities, yards, driveways, and other improvements installed or made by Lessor on the leased premises.~~ m.c.R.

5. Lessor agrees to insure the leased premises and all property placed thereon by Lessor against loss by fire. In the event said premises or property are destroyed wholly or in part by any cause during the term hereof, then Lessor shall forthwith re-enter said premises and shall with diligence repair the destroyed portion or portions of said premises or property. If, however, the premises or the destroyed portion thereof becomes untenantable in the opinion of Lessee, then the rent shall cease until such time as they are again, in the opinion of Lessee, tenantable. Should Lessor neglect forthwith to restore said premises to the same condition as they were prior to their destruction, Lessee shall, at Lessee's option:

(a) Repair said premises, deducting the cost thereof from rents accruing, with reasonable interest allowance for monies advanced, or

(b) Terminate this lease.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, Lessor shall not be obligated to restore or repair any improvements, fixtures or equipment placed on the leased premises by Lessee.

6. Lessee shall have the right at any time during Lessee's occupancy of the leased premises, or within a reasonable time thereafter, to remove any and all buildings, improvements, fixtures and equipment placed by Lessee or by Lessee's predecessor in interest, in, under or upon the leased premises or acquired by Lessee whether before or during the term hereof, but Lessee shall not be obliged to do so.

~~7. Lessee shall pay all taxes levied or assessed during the term of this lease on any facilities located on the leased~~ premises while the same are owned by Lessee. All other real ~~or personal~~ property taxes or assessments, including all ~~street improvements or other special taxes or assessments, shall be paid by Lessor.~~ m.c.R

8. Lessee shall have the right during the term of this lease to rearrange or remodel any improvements, trade or other fixtures, structures, buildings, or equipment on said leased premises; to construct and maintain on the leased premises such other buildings, structures, improvements or equipment as Lessee may desire, and to remove the same

~~street improvements or other special taxes or assessments, shall be paid by Lessor.~~ m.c.R

8. Lessee shall have the right during the term of this lease to rearrange or remodel any improvements, trade or other fixtures, structures, buildings, or equipment on said leased premises; to construct and maintain on the leased premises such other buildings, structures, improvements or equipment as Lessee may desire, and to remove the same or any part thereof at will; and to cut curbs, construct roadways and use sidewalks for vehicles to pass to and from the leased premises. In the event it is or becomes unlawful to erect, operate or maintain on the leased premises, or any part thereof, a service station, or facilities necessary or convenient to the conduct of the same; or to store thereon or to sell therefrom any gasoline or other petroleum product or other goods marketed generally by Lessee from time to time; or if it shall be or become unlawful to construct or maintain approaches to said service station by reason of any statute, ordinance, or other regulation; or if any part of the leased premises is condemned for public or quasi-public purposes; or if there is a highway or street change in the vicinity of the leased premises, so that in the opinion of Lessee it shall become impracticable or unprofitable to construct, maintain, or operate said service station on the leased premises, then Lessee shall have the right to terminate this lease by giving Lessor ten (10) days' notice in writing of such termination.

9. Every provision hereof imposing an obligation on Lessor is a material inducement and consideration for the execution of this lease by Lessee, and any breach, violation, or failure with respect thereto by Lessor shall entitle Lessee to terminate this lease forthwith by giving Lessor written notice of such termination, and no waiver by Lessee of any such breach, violation, or failure, shall waive any continuing, subsequent, or other breach, violation, or failure.

10. If any tax or charge is hereafter imposed upon Lessee, pursuant to any so-called Chain Store Tax Law hereinafter enacted by any governmental authority, for or on account of the operation of Lessee's service station on the leased premises, Lessee may terminate this lease at any time on ninety (90) days' notice to Lessor served after the enactment of such law.

11. If Lessee shall hold over after the expiration of the term of this lease, or any extension thereof, such tenancy shall be from month to month only and upon all the terms, covenants, and conditions hereof.

12. ~~Lessee may extend this lease for a further period of _____ years by giving Lessor notice in~~ writing of Lessee's intention so to do at any time prior to the expiration of the term hereof, and upon the giving of such notice this lease shall be extended as above provided.

13. Lessee may terminate this lease at any time during the term hereof, or any extension thereof, by giving Lessor thirty (30) days' prior written notice of intention so to do.

14. Lessee, while in possession, shall have the prior right to buy the whole or any part of the leased premises or any larger parcel of which the leased premises are a part. If Lessor receives from a third party an acceptable bona fide offer to buy such property, Lessor shall forthwith give Lessee written notice of such offer. Lessee shall have thirty (30) days from the receipt of such notice to buy such property at the terms of such offer relating to such property, or at such lesser terms as Lessor and Lessee may agree upon. If Lessee fails to exercise this option and Lessor sells such property to a third person, such sale shall be made subject to this lease.

15. All rentals payable hereunder shall be paid to Mildred C. Ransom unless and until Lessor designates some other party to receive said rentals.

16. Written notices to be given by Lessee to Lessor hereunder shall be addressed to Lessor at Hermiston, Oregon Written notices to Lessee hereunder shall be given to Lessee at Old National Bank Building, Spokane, Washington All notices shall be deposited in the United States Post Office, properly addressed as aforesaid, postage fully prepaid, for delivery by registered mail.

17. Execution of this lease by Lessor constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Lessee until Lessee has executed this lease and delivered a duplicate original thereof to Lessor.

18. This lease shall bind and inure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of Lessee, and shall bind and inure to the benefit of the heirs, administrators, executors, successors and assigns of Lessor.

Note

$10,000.00 Hermiston, Oregon March 23, 1945

For value received, I promise to pay to the order of Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars, in equal monthly installments of $100.00 each, commencing April 1, 1945, in lawful money of the United States of America, without interest. In case of default in the payment of any installment, the entire unpaid balance shall, at the election of the holder of this note, become immediately due and payable. In case suit is commenced for the collection of any sum due hereunder, I promise to pay, in addition to the costs provided by statute, a reasonable sum as attorney's fees.

Under date of March 19, 1945, the maker of this note leased to the payee hereof, the lands, premises and property described in the mortgage securing this note, for the term of ten years, commencing April 1, 1945. If the first sixty equal monthly payments of $100.00 each, commencing April 1, 1945, on this note are made without default, no further payments shall be required on this note so long as the maker of this note does not default on said lease. Should she default on said lease, at any time after April 1, 1950, then, and in that event, there shall immediately become due and payable on this note the sum of $60.00 per month for each and every month or fraction of a month of the then unexpired term of said lease.

Dear Sir:

Reference is made to your lease to the undersigned dated June 14, 1946, covering premises situated at the southwest corner of Slauson and Maywood, Maywood, California. This will confirm our agreement as follows:

A. The rental under said lease shall be supplemented and adjusted as follows:

1. On July 19th of each year of the term of said lease and commencing July 19, 1947, the undersigned will pay you as additional rent an amount computed at the rate of $15.00 per thousand gallons of gasoline delivered to said premises by the undersigned since the preceding July 20th, provided that, if the total of said deliveries exceeds 360,000 gallons, such excess over 360,000 gallons shall be disregarded.

Maywood, Maywood, California. This will confirm our agreement as follows:

A. The rental under said lease shall be supplemented and adjusted as follows:

1. On July 19th of each year of the term of said lease and commencing July 19, 1947, the undersigned will pay you as additional rent an amount computed at the rate of $15.00 per thousand gallons of gasoline delivered to said premises by the undersigned since the preceding July 20th, provided that, if the total of said deliveries exceeds 360,000 gallons, such excess over 360,000 gallons shall be disregarded.

2. Any obligation under the foregoing shall terminate upon any termination of said lease, provided that, if such termination occurs other than on July 19th of any year, the adjustment provided in paragraph 1 hereof shall be made on and as of said termination date rather then on July 19th thereafter.

B. The undersigned shall, within one year of the date hereof and subject to the reasonable availability and continued availability of manpower and materials, expend not less than $21,600.00 in the making and installation of automobile service station facilities and improvements upon said premises. Such facilities and improvements shall be of a type and design determined by the undersigned. Said sum of $21,600.00 shall be repaid by you to the undersigned on or prior to any termination of our rights under said lease of June 14, 1946, and in any event on or prior to October 19, 1956. Any and all amounts payable to you under any provision of this letter agreement shall be credited upon said $21,600.00 until the full amount of $21,600.00 has been paid.

LOAN $2,000 - INVEST $990.00
NEW CAR DEALER, "BURNIE" HYLAND
HUDSON DISTRIBUTOR, WEST 1126
SECOND AVE., SPOKANE, WASHINGTON

MR. E. J. McCLANAHAN

It is recommended Company loan Mr. Hyland $2,000.00 to assist him in remodeling his offices and the modernizing of his lubrication facilities; invest $990.00 in the purchase of certain salvable lubrication equipment; sign a 59 months Lease, Sublease and Dealer Agreement on a 2 party basis -- Company to receive 100% return of loan in 59 equal monthly payments absorbing the investment of $990.00; the loan and investment to be made immediately.

The following proposal is within Dealer Sales Authority except that our Lease will not be first Lien on the Property.

Name of Dealer: "Burnie" Hyland, Hudson Distributor.

Location: Corner 2nd Ave. and Jefferson St. (West 1126 2nd Ave.), Spokane, Washington.

Tenure:

Term: 2/1/45 to 12/31/49 with guaranteed sales lub oils and greases 55,000 gallons over a 59 month period.

Rental:
Company - $50.00 per month for 59 months
Dealer - $83.90 " " for 59 months.
Net Rental to Company - $33.90.

Cancellation: By Company on 30 days notice.

Option: None

Special Provisions: Company to give Bill of Sale on lubrication equipment to be purchased from Dealer.

Loan: $2,000.00

Re-Payment: 100% - 59 equal monthly payments - no interest.

Security: None.

Investment In Facilities: $990.00 (3.8¢ per monthly gallon lub oils and grease)
Company's return on investment -- 66 2/3%

Absorption: $990.00 over 59 months, $16.95 per month.

Average Monthly Gallonage:

	Lub Oils	Grease
Present	380 gals.	400 lbs.
Normal	450 "	600 "

This totals 126 bbls. annually and is split at present:- Oil - 70% Pennoil, 20% Kendall, 10% Standard. Grease - 100% Pennzoil.

No gasoline sold at present. Agreement is for all of dealers requirements and guarantees us 55,000 gallons oils and greases.

Remarks: Mr. Hyland is 52 years of age and has been in the automobile business for the past 20 years, 10 years of which was with the Hudson Motor Co. He is at present the Hudson Distributor for Inland Empire with 22 sub-dealers and has promised to assist us to gain all of these distributors 100% and is confident with his help that we can sign a minimum of 15. Mr. Hyland has also been very active in Shrine work for many years. Dunn and Bradstreet report on him dated 12/27/44 follows:

Cash on hand	$17,000	Liabilities -	None
Parts & Inventory	7,905
Mchy. & Fixtures	10,300
Total Assets	$35,205	Net Worth -	$35,205

Mr. Hyland's Service Department has 10 employees and performs all the work he can handle. He is starting his business with adequate capital and is transacting an active volume. The building he is occupying is in the automotive district on a well traveled street. The rent is $500.00 per month on a 5 year lease and the last 3 months rent has been paid in advance.

Because of Mr. Hyland's financial standing we feel Company's investment will be adequately protected by making the $8,000 loan and secure a receipt form from him whereby he agrees to pay back the loan in full in 59 equal monthly payments.

Acquisition of this desirable new car dealer account admirably fits Spokane's Representative Objective.

May we have your approval?

Dated January 5, 1945.

1. Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," agrees to sell to Burnie Hyland hereinafter called "Dealer," and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at West 1126 2nd Avenue, Spokane, Washington. The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity.

2. Deliveries shall be made in Company's customary manner. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products hereunder shall be Company's posted price to its dealers generally at time and place of delivery hereunder for the particular product and type of delivery involved. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option.

3. The products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trade-marks or brands for such products and shall not be sold, or offered for sale, at prices lower than Company's authorized retail prices therefor at time and place of sale. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging the trade for gasoline or lubricating oil sold to Dealer hereunder, is is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval. Company shall be excused from making deliveries hereunder while prevented from or hindered in doing so in its customary manner due to causes beyond its control. Whenever such causes require that deliveries of any product hereunder be restricted, Company reserves the right to restrict deliveries of such product to Dealer proportionately with restrictions on deliveries of such products to other comparable dealers in Dealer's vicinity.

4. Dealer shall pay to Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, as follows:

5. This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing February 1, 1945, and ending December 31, 1949, and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first 6 months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year, by giving to the other at least 30 days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agreement shall terminate forthwith upon the termination of [fol. 2346] any lease which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement, or upon the termination of any sublease between Dealer and Company covering said premises.

6. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property (including Dealer's property), or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

7. In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

8. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as a result of the transaction herein provided for, or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

9. This agreement shall not be assignable without the prior written consent of the Company. The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of the default of any other provision hereof. This agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof, terminate all prior Dealer Agreements and Agency Agreements between Dealer and Company respecting the premises covered by this agreement.

10. Company shall have the right at any time to remove from said premises any equipment or improvements placed thereunder or thereon which are now or hereafter owned by Company.

11. Execution of this agreement by Dealer constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Company until Company has executed this agreement and delivered a duplicate original to the Dealer.

Dealer Agreement. For Use in California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada and Arizona

D. The provisions of paragraph C. with reference to the extension of said lease, for a period not to exceed 5 years on and after October 19, 1956, shall be contingent and conditioned upon your obtaining an extension of the lease now held by you under date of September 26, 1941, between C. A. Webb and Lila F. Webb, husband and wife, as lessors, and yourself as lessee, for an additional period of 5 years, upon the same terms and condition as are now contained in said lease. In the event you shall not obtain such an extension of your lease, then it is understood and agreed that you shall pay to the undersigned such balance as shall remain due and not credited upon the sum of $21,600.00 in the manner and under the terms of this letter agreement.

[fol. 2351] GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT No. 20–A

File SS. 5127–AD

This Agreement of Conditional Sale between Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called "Seller," and Ray A. Wright, residing or doing business at ——, in the City of Parma, County of Canyon, State of Idaho, hereinafter called "Buyer":

Witnesseth:

1. Seller agrees to sell to Buyer, and Buyer agrees to buy from Seller, subject to and upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, the following personal property:

Kind of personal property
1—Atlas Fast Battery Charger, Price $210.00.
S.S. 23 #433701—9-17-45.
Sales Tax; None.

Total Selling Price including Sales Tax	$210.00
Less down payment of 3⅓% to be paid by Buyer on the date hereof, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by Seller	$ 7.00
Sub Total	$203.00
Plus interest and/or carrying charge on said sub total sum for a period of months at the rate of ½ or 1% a month	None
Balance due Seller	$203.00

Said balance to be paid by Buyer in equal monthly installments of Seven and no/100 dollars ($7.00) each, on the first day of each and every calendar month, commencing on the first day of October, 1945, until all of said balance shall have been fully paid. All payments shall be made to Seller at its office at Old National Bank Building, Spokane, Washington, or at such other place as Seller may from time to time direct.

2. Said personal property is to be located on the following described real property or premises, located in the County of Canyon, State of Idaho:

Lots 4 and 5 of Block 28, according to the Plat of a portion of the Town of Parma, Idaho, filed January 26th, 1901, in Book 1 of Plats, page 13 in the office of the County Recorder of Canyon County, Idaho, together with a tract of land in the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section 9, Township 5 North, Range 5 West of the Boise Meridian, Idaho, making a tract 140 x 150 feet in size, and more particularly described as follows: [R. A. W., F. H. P.]

Beginning at the North corner of said Lot 4 of said Block 28, thence running in a Southeasterly direction along the Southwesterly line of Grove Street, a distance of 150 feet to Fourth Street; thence running in a Southwesterly direction along the Northwesterly line of Fourth Street a distance of 140 feet to an alley; thence running in a Northwesterly direction on a line parallel with the Southwesterly line of Grove Street a distance of 150 feet to the Northwesterly line of Lot 4 extended; thence running in a Northeasterly direction along the extended Northwesterly line of said Lot 4 and on a line parallel with the Northwesterly line of Fourth Street a distance of 140 feet, to the place of beginning, Excepting from the Above, the following: Beginning at the North corner of the above mentioned Lot 4 of Block 28, according to said Plat; thence running in a Southeasterly direction along the Southwesterly line of Grove Street a distance of 100 feet to the real point of beginning; thence continuing Southeasterly on said line a distance of 50 feet to Fourth Street; thence running in a Southwesterly direction on and along the Northwesterly line of Fourth Street a distance of 50 feet; thence running in a Northwesterly direction on a line parallel with the Southwesterly line of Grove Street a distance of 50 feet; thence running Northwesterly a distance of 50 feet to the real place of beginning; together with all and singular the privileges, tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining.

3. Delivery of said personal property is to be made to Buyer at Parma, Idaho, and the same shall be installed, used and maintained by Buyer on the premises described in paragraph 2 hereof only. Buyer shall not relinquish possession of said personal property, or remove, or suffer or permit the same, or any part thereof, to be removed from said premises, without first obtaining the written consent of Seller so to do. It is the intention of Seller and Buyer that said personal property, and every part thereof, shall at all times be and remain the personal property of Seller until fully paid for, whatever may be the mode of its attachment to the realty or otherwise; and under no circumstances shall any of said personal property prior to such payment, be or be construed to be a fixture, or become a part of the freehold or leasehold.

4. Title to all of said personal property shall remain in Seller and not pass to Buyer until Buyer has fully paid in cash all sums herein provided to be paid by Buyer and has performed all of Buyer's obligations hereunder, Buyer, however, assuming all risks of loss of or damage to said personal property prior to full payment of the purchase price; but any loss, damage injury or destruction of said personal property, or any part thereof, however caused, shall not relieve Buyer of liability for payment of the full purchase price thereof, or of any liability hereunder.

[fol. 2352] 5. Buyer has thoroughly examined the personal property herein described and knows the condition thereof, and accepts the same in its condition as of this date, and such acceptance shall release and discharge Seller from any obligation to repair, improve, or restore said personal property in any manner or particular whatever. Buyer agrees to take good care of said property and keep it in good repair and operating condition at Buyer's own expense, to comply fully with all laws, ordinances, and regulations regarding the maintenance or use thereof, and to hold Seller free and harmless from any and all liability for violation of any law, ordinance or regulation, or for any damage to property, or for injury to or death of any person or persons, arising out of or in any way connected with the installation, maintenance and or use of said personal property. Seller may inspect the personal property at all reasonable times.

6. Seller may apply money received from Buyer hereunder either upon this contract, upon any other conditional sale contract, or account between Seller and Buyer, as Seller may elect, and the right of Buyer to make special application of payments is hereby expressly waived.

7. If Buyer fails to make any payment to be made hereunder on its due date, or otherwise fails in the performance or fulfillment of any obligation or undertaking of Buyer hereunder, or makes any default hereunder, Seller may, at its option, either (1) without notice to or demand of Buyer, and with or without aid of legal process, enter upon the premises where said property may be and remove and repossess said personal property and every part thereof, whether or not attached to the realty, and declare this instrument to be null and void, whereupon all payments actually theretofore made hereunder shall be retained by Seller as liquidated damages for the breach of this agreement; or (2) Seller may, at its option, declare the deferred balance of the purchase price and any and all other sums payable by Buyer hereunder, to be due and payable immediately, and may demand, and Buyer shall make, immediate payment thereof. It is agreed that no termination of this agreement upon default of Buyer shall release Buyer from payment of any sums due to Seller up to and including the date of such termination, it being hereby expressly agreed that such sums shall be due Seller as rental for the use, by Buyer, of said property, up to the date of such termination. Seller, in removing and retaking the personal property herein described, shall incur no liability to Buyer or any one else, in damages or otherwise, for any act done in removing said property or in the exercise of any right, privilege or remedy of Seller hereunder; nor shall the removal of any part of said personal property constitute an abandonment by Seller of the remainder thereof, which may be left in place without charge, until removed by Seller.

8. Without limiting the generality of any of the other provisions hereof, Buyer, at Seller's option, shall be deemed to have made default hereunder if Buyer be adjudicated a bankrupt, or become insolvent, or if a receiver be appointed for Buyer, or if Buyer make a general assignment or create a trust for the benefit of creditors or call a meeting of creditors to ask any accommodation of them, or if any interest of Buyer arising from this contract or in the personal property become encumbered or be assigned or transferred by Buyer voluntarily or otherwise without Seller's written consent to such encumbrance, assignment, or transfer, or if Buyer shall vacate or abandon or be deprived of the possession of the above-described premises.

9. No failure or delay by Seller in exercising any of its rights hereunder shall prevent the exercise thereof by Seller at any time when Buyer may continue in default, and no waiver by Seller of any default or breach by Buyer, or acceptance by Seller of any overdue payment hereunder, shall operate as a waiver of any other prior, continuing, or subsequent breach by Buyer, or as a modification of this agreement in any respect.

10. Buyer agrees to pay promptly when due, any and all licenses, taxes and assessments which may be levied upon said personal property, and to keep the same at all times free and clear of liens and encumbrances. If Buyer should fail to do so, Seller shall have the right to pay the same, or remove the encumbrances, and Buyer agrees to repay Seller any moneys so expended on demand.

11. If any suit or proceeding be brought to recover any sum due Seller by Buyer, or to enforce any obligation of Buyer hereunder, or to recover possession of the personal property sold hereunder, Buyer will pay Seller a reasonable attorney's fee in an amount to be fixed by the court, and Seller's costs of suit.

12. No transfer, assignment, renewal or extension of this contract, or any interest therein, shall release Buyer from Buyer's obligation hereunder.

13. This contract shall constitute the entire agreement between Buyer and Seller, and no other agreement, oral or written, express or implied, shall limit or qualify its terms. Time is of the essence of this agreement, and of every part thereof.

14. Seller may, at any time, assign this contract, or any right hereunder, and all of the terms hereof for the benefit of the Seller shall inure to the benefit of Seller's successors and assigns.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have executed this agreement in triplicate as of the 17th day of September, 1945.

Standard Oil Company of California, Seller, by F. H. Paine; Ray A. Wright, Buyer.

We have received your check in the amount of $1,288.10 and are attaching the loan agreement dated February 14, 1945, and the Bill of Sale for equipment dated January 5, 1945.

On January 5, 1945, we entered into a lease with you whereby we were to furnish certain monies, and in return, receive certain considerations from you. We quote from this executed lease of January 5, 1945:

> "The term of this agreement shall be from February 1, 1945, to December 31, 1949, but if during said period Dealer shall not have purchased from Company 33,000 gallons of lubricating oils and greases, this contract shall continue in full force and effect until such time as said number of gallons of lubricating oils and greases have been purchased by Dealer from Company."

It is understood and agreed that the delivery to you of these two instruments will in no way affect the above quoted provision.

It is also agreed by us that we will continue to repair and maintain the equipment which was mentioned in the above Bill of Sale for the balance of this contract, more specifically enumerated as follows:

2 - Grayco Waste Oil Containers #1036
2 - Grayco Gear Lub. Containers #1036
1 - Grayco Work Cabinet and Order Desk
1 - Overhead Chassis Lubricator

MEMORANDUM

San Francisco, California
June 22, 1945

LOAN $7,830
WRIGHT AND ROBERTS
SS 5127-AD
PARMA, IDAHO

MR. E. J. McCLANAHAN:

It is recommended Company loan Messrs. Ray Wright and Elmer C. Roberts - owners and operators of Station 5127-AD, Parma, Idaho, $7,830 to enable them to pay off existing real estate mortgage on the property in the amount of $6,280 and to assist in the financing of an automobile display room, which is at present being built with PAW approval. Company loan to be secured by mortgage and promissory note with $7,500 to be paid in equal monthly payments over 120 month period at no interest. In addition, Company is to purchase existing facilities owned by Messrs. Wright and Roberts in the amount of $1,000.00, Company to receive no return on this investment. By making this loan and investment, Company will receive a 10 year lease with a 10 year option on the only Standard Oil Company outlet in this community and on which Company has no assured tenure at the present time.

The proposed transaction exceeds Dealer Sales authority inasmuch as the amount of the loan is over $5,000 and full return of the loan is not to be obtained.

Present Status of Account: Authorized Distributor Agreement May 1, 1944 - April 30, 1949
Dealer's rental - $3.00 per month

Proposed Loan: $7,830

Repayment: $7,500 at no interest in 120 equal monthly payments

Security: Mortgage on property and improvements
Appraisal: Land and Improvements $7,500 with the additional building that is under construction at the present time which will cost $2,550, the total value of the property will be increased to $10,050.

Proposed Ground Rental: $60.00 a month

Maximum Lease Commitment: 30 days

Maximum Assured Tenure: 240 months

Estimated Normal Sales: 6,000 gallons - sales under present allocation 5,000 gallons

Economics:

Rental	$60.00 a month
Depreciation on Invest.	6.67 (150 mos.)
Amortization on loan	65.25 (120 mos.)
		$131.92
Return from Dealer: Loan Payment	62.50
Rental	60.00
		122.50
Deficit per month		$ 9.42
Deficit per gallon		.16¢

Messrs. Wright and Roberts have both had years of experience in the automotive and service station fields. Mr. Wright took over the operation of this station in May 1944 and shortly thereafter took in Mr. Roberts as his partner. Since the advent of their operation of this station sales have steadily increased to the point where 5,000 gallons per month is being realized. They have a full time service man employed and will employ 2 mechanics upon completion of the proposed additional building. Because of lack of space, these operators are unable to handle all the lubrication business that is available to them. In 1944 Mr. Wright entered into a real estate contract for the purchase of this property which at the present time has been reduced to $6,280. They have been offered $14,000 for the property but do not desire to sell since they intend to remain in business at this location permanently.

This station is the only service station in R. and V. Oil Company's field (Company's wholesale distributor) on which they do not have basic control and is the Company's only representation between Caldwell and Nyssa, a distance of 80 miles. If the proposal we have worked out is not concluded, it is felt certain that Messrs. Wright and Roberts will make a deal with competitors, possibly the General Petroleum Corporation since they are actively soliciting the account.

Because of the successful manner in which this station has been operated by these gentlemen, because of their future plans for enlarging the business, and the fact that Company will be able to retain representation at this location with a very small deficit, it is recommended that the deal as proposed be approved even though the full amount of the loan is not to be repaid. Financial statement as furnished shows the worth of the proprietorship as $4,325.44.

May we have your approval?

[fol. 2353] GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT No. 20-B

This Indenture, Made and entered into this 3rd day of May, 1945, between Elmer C. Roberts and Fern S. Roberts, his wife, and Ray A. Wright and Bessie M. Wright, his wife, of the County of Canyon and State of Idaho, parties of the first part, (hereinafter called "mortgagors"), and the Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, (hereinafter called "mortgagee"), party of the second part. [R. A. W. B. M. W. E. C. R. F. S. R.]

Witnesseth, That the said mortgagors, for and in consideration of the sum of Seven thousand eight hundred thirty and no/100 Dollars ($7830.00) in lawful money of the United States of America, in hand paid by the said mortgagee, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do by these presents grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said mortgagee, its successors and assigns, all of the following described real estate, lying and being situate in the City of Parma, Canyon County, State of Idaho, to-wit:

Lots 4 and 5 of Block 28, according to the Plat of a portion of the Town of Parma, Idaho, filed January 26th, 1901, in Book 1 of Plats, page 13 in the office of the County Recorder of Canyon County, Idaho, together with a tract of land in the Northeast Quarter (NE¼) of the Southwest Quarter (SW¼) of Section 9, Township 5 North, Range 5 West of the Boise Meridian, Idaho, making a tract 140 x 150 feet in size; and more particularly described as follows:

Beginning at the North corner of said Lot 4 of said Block 28, thence running in a Southeasterly direction along the Southwesterly line of Grove Street, a distance of 150 feet to Fourth Street; thence running in a Southwesterly direction along the Northwesterly line of Fourth Street a distance of 140 feet to an alley; thence running in a Northwesterly direction on a line parallel with the Southwesterly line of Grove Street a distance of 150 feet to the Northwesterly line of Lot 4 extended; thence running in a northeasterly direction along the extended Northwesterly line of said Lot 4 and on a line parallel with the Northwesterly line of Fourth Street a distance of 140 feet, to the place of beginning, Excepting From the Above, the following: Beginning at the North corner of the above mentioned Lot 4 of Block 28, according to said Plat; thence running in a Southeasterly direction along the Southwesterly line of Grove Street a distance of 100 feet to the real point of beginning; thence continuing Southeasterly on said line a distance of 50 feet to Fourth Street; thence running in a Southwesterly direction on and along the Northwesterly line of Fourth Street a distance of 50 feet; thence running in a Northwesterly [fol. 2354] direction on a line parallel with the Southwesterly line of Grove Street a distance of 50 feet; thence running Northwesterly a distance of 50 feet to the real place of beginning; together with all and singular the privileges, tenements hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining.

To have and to hold the same, to the said mortgagee, its successors and assigns forever, except as hereinafter stated.

This instrument is intended as a mortgage to secure the payment to said mortgagee, its successors and assigns, of the sum of money named above as the consideration hereof, in lawful money of the United States of America, evidenced by a certain promissory note of even date in the sum of Seven thousand eight hundred thirty Dollars, payable in installments of Sixty-two and 50/100 Dollars per month on or before the first day of each and every month, commencing with the month of June 1, 1945. [R. A. W. B. M. W. E. C. R. F. S. R.]

The mortgagors further covenant and agree with the mortgagee, its successors and assigns as follows:

First: That the mortgagors are lawfully seized of said premises in fee simple, free from all encumbrances, and that the mortgagors have good right and authority to sell, mortgage and convey said premises in manner and form as aforesaid, and that the mortgagors shall and will warrant and defend the same to the said mortgagee, its successors and assigns forever against the lawful claims and demands of all persons whomsoever.

Second: That the mortgagors shall and will keep the said premises free from any and all statutory liens of every kind, and shall not suffer or permit waste to be committed thereon, and shall not suffer or permit any matters or things to be done thereto which will in anywise impair or weaken the security of the mortgagee;

Third: That the mortgagors will pay said moneys, as expressed above, when from any cause the same shall become due:

Fourth: That the mortgagors will keep the buildings on said premises insured in one or more good and solvent [fol. 2355] insurance companies in at least the sum of Eight thousand eight hundred thirty Dollars, the said and all policy or policies of insurance covering said premises, or any part thereof, to provide that loss if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee, its successors and assigns, until the moneys secured hereby are fully paid, and shall deposit with the mortgagee all such policies of insurance to be retained by the mortgagee until the full debt secured hereby shall have been fully paid. [R. A. W. B. M. W. E. C. R. F. S. R.]

Fifth: That in case said mortgagors shall fail to deposit such policies of insurance, the mortgagee may procure such insurance and the mortgagors hereby covenant and agree to repay such party all moneys so paid, and this mortgage shall stand as security therefor.

Sixth: That in case any principal as provided above shall become due and remain unpaid, or there shall be a breach of any covenant or promise of the mortgagors herein contained, then the whole of the principal as provided above, and all moneys secured hereby, shall at the option of the mortgagee, immediately become due and payable and this mortgage may be foreclosed at any time thereafter, without notice of the exercise of such option being made in any manner to the said mortgagors or to anyone else for the whole of such moneys, and in case an action shall be brought to foreclose this mortgage, the mortgagors covenant and agree to pay such sums as the Court may adjudge reasonable as attorney fees in such suit or action, and the same shall be a lien upon said premises and this mortgage shall stand security for the same and also all costs and disbursements incurred by the mortgagee in said suit or action.

Seventh: That in case of an action being commenced to foreclose this mortgage under any of its provisions, on filing the complaint for such foreclosure, or at any time thereafter, upon motion of the plaintiff therein a receiver shall be appointed to take charge of the mortgaged premises at once and to hold possession of the same until the title to said premises is vested in the purchaser thereof; and all [fol. 2356] rents and profits derived from said premises shall be applied after payment of the costs and expenses of said receivership, toward the debt secured hereby.

Now, if the moneys secured hereby shall be fully paid, as and when provided, and the covenants and agreements herein fully kept and performed, then this instrument to become void and of no further effect; but if default shall be made in the payment of any of the moneys secured hereby, as and when provided, or in case of the breach of any covenant or condition herein, then all moneys secured hereby shall become immediately due and payable, as aforesaid, and this mortgage may be immediately foreclosed at any time thereafter, and the said premises sold, and the proceeds of such sale applied to the payment of the costs and expenses of such foreclosure and sale, the moneys secured hereby, including attorney's fees for foreclosure, and all other costs and expenses which may be incurred under and in pursuance of the terms of this mortgage, and the residue, if any, shall be paid to the mortgagors. If the proceeds of such sale shall not be sufficient to pay the costs and expenses of such foreclosure and sale, the moneys secured hereby, including attorney's fees for foreclosure, as aforesaid, and all costs and expenses which may be incurred under and in pursuance of the terms of this mortgage, then the mortgagors hereby covenant and agree to pay such deficiency, and a deficiency judgment for such amount may be entered up forthwith.

In Witness Whereof, the parties of the first part have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Promissory Note

$7830.00. Parma, Idaho, May 3, 1945.

For value received, I, we, or either of us, promise to pay to the Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, or order, at its principal place of business in San Francisco, California, the principal sum of Seven thousand eight hundred and no/100 Dollars, in lawful money of the United States of America, without interest, payable in monthly installments of Sixty-two and 50/100 Dollars ($62.50) each, on or before the 1st day of each and every month, commencing with the month of June 1, 1945; said monthly installments each being as and for a payment on account of the principal.

If default be made in any installment or monthly payment under this note, the entire principal sum shall become immediately due and payable at the option of the holder hereof.

If this note is not paid when due and it be placed with an attorney for collection, or if suit be instituted for its collection, I, we, or either of us, agree to pay in either case, besides costs and disbursements allowed by law, such additional sum as the court may adjudge reasonable as attorney fees in said suit or action.

It is also agreed that upon the payment of ~~one hundred~~ twenty (120) ~~monthly payments~~ of $62.50 each, totalling Seventy five hundred dollars ($7500.00), as and when hereinbefore provided, and the makers of this note not being in default, the payee of this note or its order, will give a full satisfaction of this note and release of record a real estate mortgage, dated June 1, 1945, given to secure the payment of this note.

LOAN $22,500.00
LEASE SITE CONSTRUCT POST WAR SERVICE STATION
CHITWOOD AND STUDY
11TH STREET AND SOUTH PACIFIC AVENUE
SAN PEDRO, CALIFORNIA

MR. E. J. McCLANAHAN:

It is recommended Company loan Chitwood and Study $22,500.00 to enable them to purchase real property adjacent to their present owned site; sign a 10 year lease with a 5 year option, sublease and dealer agreement on a 2-party basis; and construct a post war service station at a cost of $13,922.00.

This proposal exceeds Dealer Sales authority. It has been reviewed by Mr. O'Kane and approved by Appropriations Committee:

Estimated Normal Sales:	12,500 gallons a month
Loan:	$22,500.00
Repayment:	100% plus 2-1/2% interest - $100.00 a month till station constructed, balance in 120 equal monthly payments.
Security:	First trust deed on real property being purchased- appraised at $20,000. Second trust deed on adjacent property having a value of some $28,000. Second trust deed to be released when dealer's equity in parcel being purchased reaches $7,500.
Facilities Investment:	$13,922.00
Ground Rental:	$100.00 a month (.8¢ a gallon)
Maximum Lease Commitment:	1/12 years
Maximum Assured Tenure: (including options)	15 years
Absorption Under Operating Agreements:	.53¢ a gallon
Net Back for Chart Computation:	8.772¢ a gallon
Minimum Allowable Net Back:	8.42¢ a gallon

Associated Oil Company have a lease on this site presently owned by Chitwood and Study which expires on September 10, 1946 and will be terminated on that date. If allocations are still in effect at that time and Company is unable to supply products to them, Associated is obligated to do so under P.A.W. ruling.

Chitwood and Study are the Goodyear distributors for San Pedro and are considered one of the largest Goodyear distributors in the entire harbor area.

This proposal admirably fits Long Beach's Representation Objective and will provide representation where it is sorely needed. Company enjoys only 7.4% of the total available business in San Pedro.

May we have your approval?

LEASE

Dated January 19, 1945

1. DEAN B. CHITWOOD and BELLE CHITWOOD, his wife, and W. KENNETH STUDY and ELSIE C. STUDY, his wife, Lessor, hereby leases to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, Lessee, for the term commencing on the 1st day of March, 1945, and ending as provided in paragraph "16" hereof ~~on the 28th day of February, 1955~~, in. W.H.W. E.C.S. the following described premises in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California;

PARCEL 1: The South 50 feet of the West 30 feet of Lot 21, and the South 50 feet of Lots 22, 23, and 24 of Hill and Jourdan's Subdivision of Block 11, San Pedro, in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California, as per map recorded in Book 59 Page 21 of Miscellaneous Records in the office of the County Recorder of said County.

W.H.W. D.B.C. W.H. B.C. E.C.S.

This lease and option to purchase is made subject to a deed of trust dated January 20, 1945 executed by the lessors herein as trustors to secure their note for $22,500.00 in favor of Standard Oil Company of California, to be recorded concurrently herewith."

RECORD

3. Lessee shall have the right during Lessee's occupancy of the leased premises to rearrange or remodel any improvements, fixtures, or equipment on the leased premises; to construct and maintain on the leased premises such other buildings, structures, improvements, or equipment as Lessee may desire; and to remove the same or any part thereof at will; and to cut curbs, construct roadways, and use sidewalks for vehicles to pass to and from the leased premises. Upon the expiration of this lease, or any extension or renewal thereof, Lessee agrees to replace any or all curbs and sidewalks cut or removed by Lessee during Lessee's occupancy of the premises. In the event it is or becomes unlawful for Lessee to erect, operate, or maintain on the leased premises, or any part thereof, a service station, or any facilities necessary or convenient to the conduct of the same; or to make alterations or improvements necessary, in the opinion of Lessee, for the operation of said service station, or to store thereon or to sell therefrom any gasoline or other petroleum product or other goods marketed generally by Lessee from time to time; or if it shall be or become unlawful to construct or maintain approaches to said service station by reason of any statute, ordinance, or other regulation; or if any part of the leased premises is condemned for public or quasi-public purposes, or if there is a highway or street change in the vicinity of the leased premises, so that in the opinion of Lessee it shall become impracticable or unprofitable to construct, maintain, or operate said service station on the leased premises, then Lessee may terminate this lease by giving Lessor ten (10) days' notice in writing of such termination. If, as a result of causes other than those hereinabove set out, such as earthquake, fire, flood, strikes, riots, insurrection, or other similar or different causes beyond the control of Lessee, the leased premises shall become unusable, from a practical standpoint, for service station purposes for a period of thirty (30) consecutive days or longer, then Lessee may, effective on the day of the happening of any such event, suspend all rental payments hereunder until the leased premises are again so usable.

4. Lessee shall have the right at any time during Lessee's occupancy of the leased premises, or within a reasonable time thereafter, to remove any and all buildings, improvements, fixtures and equipment, placed by it, or by its predecessor in interest, in, under, or upon the leased premises, or acquired by Lessee whether before or during the term hereof, but Lessee shall not be obliged to do so.

5. Lessee shall pay all taxes levied or assessed during the term of this lease on any facilities located on the leased premises while the same are owned by Lessee. All other real or personal property taxes or assessments, including all street improvements or other special taxes or assessments, shall be paid by Lessor.

6. Lessee, while in possession, shall have the prior right to buy the whole or any part of the leased premises or any larger parcel of which the leased premises are a part. If Lessor receives from a third party an acceptable bona fide offer to buy such property, Lessor shall forthwith give Lessee written notice of such offer. Lessee shall have thirty (30) days from the receipt of such notice to buy such property at the terms of such offer relating to such property, or at such lesser terms as Lessor and Lessee may agree upon. If Lessee fails to exercise this option and Lessor sells such property to a third person, such sale shall be made subject to this lease.

7. If Lessee shall hold over after the expiration of the term of this lease, or any extension thereof, such tenancy shall be from month to month only and upon all the terms, covenants, and conditions hereof.

8. Lessee may extend this lease for a further period of five years by giving Lessor notice in writing of its intention so to do at any time prior to the expiration of the term hereof.

12. All rentals payable hereunder shall be paid to DEAN B. CHITWOOD and W. KENNETH STUDY unless and until Lessor designates some other party to receive rentals.

Written notices to Lessor hereunder shall be addressed to Lessor at 1024 South Pacific Avenue,

San Pedro, California

13. Written notices to Lessee hereunder shall be given to Lessee at 533 Jergins Trust Building, Long Beach 2, California. All notices shall be deposited in the United States Post Office, properly addressed as aforesaid, postage fully prepaid, for delivery by registered mail.

14. Execution of this lease by Lessor constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Lessee until Lessee has executed this lease and delivered a duplicate original thereof to Lessor.

15. This lease shall bind and inure to the benefit of the successors and assigns of Lessee, and shall bind and inure to the benefit of the heirs, administrators, executors, successors and assigns of Lessor.

16. The term of this Lease shall be for TEN (10) years, commencing on the first day of March, 1945, and ending on the 28th day of February, 1955; it being expressly understood, however, anything to the contrary herein notwithstanding, said TEN (10) year term shall be extended for such a period of time as shall elapse between March 1, 1945, and the date of the completion of construction ~~by Lessee~~ of a Service Station upon said premises ~~and the commencement of delivery of Lessee's products thereto.~~

16-a. Lessee shall have the option to purchase the demised premises for the sum of TWENTY FIVE THOUSAND AND NO/100 DOLLARS ($25,000.00) at any time prior to (a) September 11, 1946, or (b) until any and all Governmental regulations restricting construction of Service Stations are removed and materials are available, whichever is latest. The option shall be exercised by Lessee giving written notice to Lessor at any time prior to said date, of ~~Lessee~~'s intention to purchase the demised premises and thereupon, and within TEN days after the posting of such notice, unless it shall be agreed otherwise, shall deposit the purchase price in escrow with a title company or bank in the locality.

16-a. Lessee or its nominee shall have the option to purchase the demised premises for the sum of TWENTY FIVE THOUSAND AND NO/100 DOLLARS ($25,000.00) at any time prior to (a) September 11, 1946, or (b) until any and all Governmental regulations restricting construction of Service Stations are removed and materials are available, whichever is latest. The option shall be exercised by Lessee or its nominee giving written notice to Lessor at any time prior to said date, of intention to purchase the demised premises and thereupon, and within TEN days after the posting of such notice, unless it shall be agreed otherwise, shall deposit the purchase price in escrow with a title company or bank in the locality, with instructions to notify Lessor that such deposit has been made, and Lessor shall within said TEN days place in escrow with said title company or bank, in a form acceptable to Lessee or its nominee, a Deed conveying unto Lessee or its nominee a marketable title to the demised premises. If for any reason Lessor shall fail to deposit such Deed with the title company or bank, or shall be unable to convey to Lessee or its nominee a marketable title to the demised premises, then Lessee or its nominee shall have the right to reclaim the deposit made to the title company or bank or shall have the option to demand specific performance of Lessor's agreement to convey, in which event the deposit shall be, and be construed to be, a full tender of performance by Lessee or its nominee and avail itself of such other legal or equitable remedy as the law may provide. Otherwise upon completion of the sale, this Lease and any and all Subleases or Dealer Agreements relating to said property, shall cease and determine and thereafter the Parties shall be released from any and all obligation hereunder or thereunder.

17. Anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding, it is the intent that Lessee shall have the option to construct a service station on the demised premises if and when materials are available and existing governmental regulations prohibiting such construction are removed and it is not the intent that Lessee shall be obligated so to do.

DEALER AGREEMENT

Dated January 19, 1945

1. STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," agrees to sell to DEAN B. CHITWOOD and W. KENNETH STUDY, hereinafter called "Dealer," and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at 11th and South Pacific Avenue, San Pedro, California, The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity.

2. Deliveries shall be made in Company's customary manner. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products hereunder shall be Company's posted price to its dealers generally at time and place of delivery hereunder for the particular product and type of delivery involved. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option.

3. The products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trade-marks or brands for such products and shall not be sold, or offered for sale, at prices lower than Company's authorized retail prices therefor at time and place of sale. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging the trade for gasoline or lubricating oil sold to Dealer hereunder, it is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval. Company shall be excused from making deliveries hereunder while prevented from or hindered in doing so in its customary manner due to causes beyond its control. Whenever such causes require that deliveries of any product hereunder be restricted, Company reserves the right to restrict deliveries of such product to Dealer proportionately with restrictions on deliveries of such products to other comparable dealers in Dealer's vicinity.

4. Dealer shall pay to Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, as follows:

concurrent with a Sublease dated January 19, 1945 between parties hereto.

5. This agreement shall be operative during the period ~~commencing~~ _____, 194 ~~and ending~~ _____, 19____, and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first 6 months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year, by giving to the other at least 30 days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agreement shall terminate forthwith upon the termination of any lease which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement, or upon the termination of any sublease between Dealer and Company covering said premises.

6. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property (including Dealer's property), or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

7. In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

8. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as a result of the transaction herein provided for, or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

9. This agreement shall not be assignable without the prior written consent of the Company. The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of the default of any other provision hereof. This agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof, terminate all prior Dealer Agreements and Agency Agreements between Dealer and Company respecting the premises covered by this agreement.

10. Company shall have the right at any time to remove from said premises any equipment or improvements placed thereunder or thereon which are now or hereafter owned by Company.

11. Execution of this agreement by Dealer constitutes an offer which shall not be deemed accepted by Company until Company has executed this agreement and delivered a duplicate original to the Dealer.

PREVENTION OF PERFORMANCE

In the event Company is prevented from or hindered in making deliveries hereunderin its customary manner due to fire, riot, labor disturbances, earthquakes, war, acts of any government (whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county, or municipal), accident, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities or supplies, shortage of products deliverable under this contract due to a shortage in the supply of crude oil or natural gas produced in the State of California, or any cause beyond its control whether similar to the foregoing causes or not, the obligation of Company to make deliveries during the period of such disability shall be suspended. Distributor's attention is called to the fact that as of the date of this contract, there is a shortage of gasoline and other petroleum products on the Pacific Coast due to the needs of the Armed Forces and the war effort. Therefore, Company will not be able to, nor shall it be obligated to deliver all of the gasoline or other products required by Distributor as specified in the paragraph of this contract designated as "Quantity" during the period of such shortage. It is Company's intention to prorate its available supply of product equitably among its purchasers (contract or otherwise) during this and other periods of product shortage or whenever due to any of the other causes enumerated above Company is unable to make deliveries to all such purchasers. However, Company shall in no way be obligated to thus prorate its available supply and its failure, partial or otherwise, to make deliveries to Distributor shall not be a breach of this contract, notwithstanding that Company is making deliveries to others. Upon termination of the cause or causes for suspension of deliveries, performance hereunder shall be resumed, but nothing herein shall be construed as extending the term of this contract.

SS-7478-L. San Pedro

San Pedro, California, March 2, 1946.

Standard Oil Company of California, 533 Jergins Trust Building, Long Beach 2, California.

GENTLEMEN:

Reference is hereby made to that certain Lease, Sublease, and Dealer Agreement, all dated January 19, 1945, as operative between us covering the use and occupancy of the premises located at Eleventh and South Pacific Avenue, San Pedro, California, more particularly described as follows:

"Parcel 1: The South 50 feet of the West 30 feet of Lot 21, and the South 50 feet of Lots 22, 23, and 24 of Hill and Jourdan's Subdivision of Block 11, San Pedro, in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California, as per map recorded in Book 59, Page 21 of Miscellaneous Records in the office of the County Recorder of said County."

We hereby agree not to store, handle, distribute, sell or advertise for sale, on premises owned, or leased by us, adjoining the demised premises, any petroleum product or products in competition with those marketed by you, nor to suffer or permit, by lease, license, or other agreement, any person, persons, firm, or corporation, to store, handle, distribute, sell or advertise for sale on said adjoining premises, any petroleum product or products in competition with those marketed by you.

Yours truly, Dean B. Chitwood, Belle Chitwood, W. Kenneth Study, Elsie C. Study.

Note Secured by Deed of Trust

$22,500.00. San Pedro, California, January 15, 1945.

In installments as herein stated for value received, we promise to pay to Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, or order at 605 W. Olympic, Los Angeles, California, the sum of Twenty-two Thousand Five Hundred and no 100 Dollars, with interest from date on unpaid principal at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum, principal and interest payable in installments of One Hundred and no 100 Dollars ($100.00), or more on the first day of each month beginning on the 1st day of March, 1945, and continuing until such time as a Service Station is constructed upon the premises described in the Deed of Trust given to secure this Note; but in any event the balance of principal and interest due hereunder shall all become due and payable on or before March 1, 1960; if prior thereto the construction of a Service Station is completed thereon, the then remaining principal and unpaid interest shall be payable in One Hundred Twenty (120) equal monthly installments from the date construction is completed to include interest at 2½ per cent per annum.

Each payment hereunder shall be credited first on interest then due and the remainder on principal, and interest shall thereupon cease upon the principal so credited. Should default be made on the payment of any installment when due the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due at the option of the holder of this Note, Principal and interest payable in lawful money of the United States. If action be instituted on this note we promise to pay such sum, in addition to all sums herein provided to be paid, as the Court may fix as attorney's fees. This Note is secured by Deed of Trust to Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, a National Banking Association.

and continuing until said principal and interest have been paid.

Should interest not be so paid it shall thereafter bear like interest as the principal. Should default be made in payment of any installment of principal or interest when due the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due at the option of the holder of this note. Principal and interest payable in lawful money of the United States. If action be instituted on this note I promise to pay such sum as the Court may fix as attorney's fees. This note is secured by DEED OF TRUST to SECURITY-FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF LOS ANGELES, a National Banking Association.

A. To protect the security of this Deed of Trust, Trustor agrees:

1. To keep said property in good condition and repair; not to remove or demolish any building thereon; to complete or restore promptly and in good and workmanlike manner any building which may be constructed, damaged or destroyed thereon and to pay when due all claims for labor performed and materials furnished therefor; to comply with all laws affecting said property or requiring any alterations or improvements to be made thereon; not to commit or permit waste thereof; not to commit, suffer or permit any act upon said property in violation of law; to cultivate, irrigate, fertilize, fumigate, prune and do all other acts which from the character or use of said property may be reasonably necessary, the specific enumerations herein not excluding the general.

2. To provide, maintain and deliver to Beneficiary fire insurance satisfactory to and with loss payable to Beneficiary. The amount collected under any fire or other insurance policy may be applied by Beneficiary upon any indebtedness secured hereby and in such order as Beneficiary may determine, or at option of Beneficiary the entire amount so collected or any part thereof may be released to Trustor. Such application or release shall not cure or waive any default or notice of default hereunder or invalidate any act done pursuant to such notice.

3. To appear in and defend any action or proceeding purporting to affect the security hereof or the rights or powers of Beneficiary or Trustee; and to pay all costs and expenses, including cost of evidence of title and attorney's fees in a reasonable sum in any such action or proceeding in which Beneficiary or Trustee may appear.

4. To pay: at least ten days before delinquency all taxes and assessments affecting said property, including assessments on appurtenant water stock; when due, all incumbrances, charges and liens, with interest, on said property or any part thereof, which appear to be prior or superior hereto; all costs, fees and expenses of this Trust.

Should Trustor fail to make any payment or to do any act as herein provided, then Beneficiary or Trustee, but without obligation so to do and without notice to or demand upon Trustor and without releasing Trustor from any obligation hereof, may: make or do the same in such manner and to such extent as either may deem necessary to protect the security hereof, Beneficiary or Trustee being authorized to enter upon said property for such purposes; appear in and defend any action or proceeding purporting to affect the security hereof or the rights or powers of Beneficiary or Trustee; pay, purchase, contest or compromise any incumbrance, charge or lien which in the judgment of either appears to be prior or superior hereto; and, in exercising any such powers, pay necessary expenses, employ counsel and pay his reasonable fees.

5. To pay immediately and without demand all sums so expended by Beneficiary or Trustee, with interest from date of expenditure at _____

B. It is mutually agreed that:

1. Any award of damages in connection with any condemnation for public use of or injury to said property or any part thereof is hereby assigned and shall be paid to Beneficiary who may apply or release such moneys received by him in the same manner and with the same effect as above provided for disposition of proceeds of fire or other insurance.

2. By accepting payment of any sum secured hereby after its due date, Beneficiary does not waive his right either to require prompt payment when due of all other sums secured or to declare default for failure so to pay.

3. At any time or from time to time, without liability therefor and without notice, upon written request of Beneficiary and presentation of this Deed and said note for endorsement, and without affecting the personal liability of any person for payment of the indebtedness secured hereby, Trustee may: reconvey any part of said property; consent to the making of any map or plat thereof; join in granting any easement thereon; or join in any extension agreement or any agreement subordinating the lien or charge hereof.

4. Upon written request of Beneficiary stating that all sums secured hereby have been paid, and upon surrender of this Deed and said note to Trustee for cancellation and retention and upon payment of its fees, Trustee shall reconvey, without warranty, the property then held hereunder. The recitals in such reconveyance of any matters or facts shall be conclusive proof of the truthfulness thereof. The grantee in such reconveyance may be described as "the person or persons legally entitled thereto."

5. As additional security, Trustor hereby gives to and confers upon Beneficiary the right, power and authority, during the continuance of these Trusts, to collect the rents, issues and profits of said property, reserving unto Trustor the right, prior to any default by Trustor in payment of any indebtedness secured hereby or in performance of any agreement hereunder, to collect and retain such rents, issues and profits as they become due and payable. Upon any such default, Beneficiary may at any time without notice, either in person, by agent, or by a receiver to be appointed by a court, and without regard to the adequacy of any security for the indebtedness hereby secured, enter upon and take possession of said property or any part thereof, in his own name sue for or otherwise collect such rents, issues and profits, including those past due and unpaid, and apply the same, less costs and expenses of operation and collection, including reasonable attorney's fees, upon any indebtedness secured hereby, and in such order as Beneficiary may determine. The entering upon and taking possession of said property, the collection of such rents, issues and profits and the application thereof as aforesaid, shall not cure or waive any default or notice of default hereunder or invalidate any act done pursuant to such notice.

6. Upon default by Trustor in payment of any indebtedness secured hereby or in performance of any agreement hereunder, Beneficiary may declare all sums secured hereby immediately due and payable by delivery to Trustee of written declaration of default and demand for sale and of written notice of default and of election to cause to be sold said property, which notice Trustee shall cause to be filed for record. Beneficiary also shall deposit with Trustee this Deed, said note and all documents evidencing expenditures secured hereby.

After the lapse of such time as then may be required by law following the recordation of said notice of default and notice of sale having been given as then required by law, Trustee, without demand on Trustor, shall sell said property at the time and place fixed by it in said notice of sale, either as a whole or in separate parcels and in such order as it may determine (but subject to statutory right of Trustor to direct the order in which such property, if consisting of several known lots or parcels, shall be sold), at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in lawful money of the United States, payable at time of sale. Trustee may postpone sale of all or any portion of said property by public announcement at such time and place of sale, and from time to time thereafter may postpone such sale by public announcement at the time fixed by the preceding postponement. Trustee shall deliver to such purchaser its deed conveying the property so sold, but without any covenant or warranty, express or implied. The recitals in such deed of any matters or facts shall be conclusive proof of the truthfulness thereof. Any person, including Trustor, Trustee, or Beneficiary as hereinafter defined, may purchase at such sale.

After deducting all costs, fees and expenses of Trustee and of this Trust, including cost of evidence of title in connection with sale, Trustee shall apply the proceeds of sale to payment of: all sums expended under the terms hereof, not then repaid, with accrued interest at seven per cent per annum; all other sums then secured hereby; and the remainder, if any, to the person or persons legally entitled thereto.

7. Trustee's fees for its ordinary duties hereunder shall be: (a) For sale of property, exclusive of posting, advertising and other costs and expenses, a fee, hereby agreed to be reasonable, computed on the unpaid balance of all sums secured hereby at the following rates: on the first $1000.00 or part thereof, 6%%, with a minimum of $50.00; on the next $7000.00, 2%; on the next $42,000.00, 1½%; on the next $50,000.00, ¾ of 1%; and on all above $100,000.00, ½ of 1%; upon sale proceedings discontinued before sale, a reasonable fee, depending upon services performed. (b) For partial or full reconveyance, a reasonable fee, with a minimum of $3.50 and $2.50 respectively.

8. Trustor, or if said property shall have been transferred, the then record owner, together with Beneficiary, may from time to time, by instrument in writing, substitute a successor or successors to any Trustee named herein or acting hereunder, which instrument, executed and acknowledged by each and recorded in the office of the recorder of the county or counties where said property is situated, shall be conclusive proof of proper substitution of such successor Trustee or Trustees, who shall, without conveyance from the Trustee predecessor, succeed to all its title, estate, rights, powers, and duties. Said instrument must contain the name of the original Trustor, Trustee and Beneficiary hereunder, the book and page where this Deed is recorded, and the name and address of the new Trustee. If notice of default shall have been recorded, this power of substitution cannot be exercised until after the costs, fees and expenses of the then acting Trustee shall have been paid to such Trustee, who shall endorse receipt thereof upon such instrument of substitution. The procedure herein provided for substitution of Trustees shall be exclusive of all other provisions for substitution, statutory or otherwise.

9. This Deed applies to, inures to the benefit of, and binds all parties hereto, their heirs, legatees, devisees, administrators, executors, successors and assigns. The term Beneficiary shall mean the owner and holder, including pledgees, of the note secured hereby, whether or not named as Beneficiary herein. In this Deed, whenever the context so requires, the masculine gender includes the feminine and/or neuter, and the singular number includes the plural.

10. Trustee accepts this Trust when this Deed, duly executed and acknowledged, is made a public record as provided by law. Trustee is not obligated to notify any party hereto of pending sale under any other Deed of Trust or of any action or proceeding in which Trustor, Beneficiary or Trustee shall be a party unless brought by Trustee indebtedness hereby secured, enter upon and take possession of said property or any part thereof, in his own name sue for or otherwise collect such rents, issues and profits, including those past due and unpaid, and apply the same, less costs and expenses of operation and collection, including reasonable attorney's fees, upon any indebtedness secured hereby, and in such order as Beneficiary may determine. The entering upon and taking possession of said property, the collection of such rents, issues and profits and the application thereof as aforesaid, shall not cure or waive any default or notice of default hereunder or invalidate any act done pursuant to such notice.

6. Upon default by Trustor in payment of any indebtedness secured hereby or in performance of any agreement hereunder, Beneficiary may declare all sums secured hereby immediately due and payable by delivery to Trustee of written declaration of default and demand for sale and of written notice of default and of election to cause to be sold said property, which notice Trustee shall cause to be filed for record. Beneficiary also shall deposit with Trustee this Deed, said note and all documents evidencing expenditures secured hereby.

After the lapse of such time as then may be required by law following the recordation of said notice of default and notice of sale having been given as then required by law, Trustee, without demand on Trustor, shall sell said property at the time and place fixed by it in said notice of sale, either as a whole or in separate parcels and in such order as it may determine (but subject to statutory right of Trustor to direct the order in which such property, if consisting of several known lots or parcels, shall be sold), at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in lawful money of the United States, payable at time of sale. STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA

November 15, 1941.

Ransome Company, San Luis Obispo, California.

GENTLEMEN:

Please refer to the Sublease Agreement between us dated November 15, 1941 covering premises at San Luis Obispo, California as more particularly described therein.

It is hereby mutually agreed that the terms and provisions of said agreement shall be and are hereby modified to provide that we shall pay you the sum of one cent (1¢) per ~~gallon for each~~ gallon of gasoline delivered by us to you at said premises. Such payment shall be made by us to you on or before the 15th day of each and every month during the term of said agreement on aggregate deliveries made by us during the preceding calendar month, and shall be credited against the rental payable by you to us under paragraph 3 of said agreement. During each month such gallonage payments exceed said monthly rental you shall be credited with such excess on or before the 15th day of the following month.

Please signify your agreement to the foregoing by signing in the space provided below.

Yours very truly, Standard Oil Company of California, by W. G. Watson, Attorney in fact.

Agreed to: Ransome Company, by Talbert H. Ransome, Vice-President.

[fol. 2386] GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT NO. 23-F

This sublease, dated the 15th day of November, 1941.

Witnesseth:

1. That Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, does hereby lease unto Ransome Company, a corporation, for the term commencing on the 15th day of November, 1941, and ending on the 13th day of November, 1951, all that

[fol. 2376] Easement

The undersigned, Dean B. Chitwood and Belle Chitwood, his wife, and W. Kenneth Study and Elsie C. Study, his wife, sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Grantors," do hereby grant to Standard Oil Company of California, a Corporation, sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Grantee," an unobstructed easement and right of way over, along, and across the hereinafter described real property, for use by vehicles and pedestrians for ingress to and egress from the property to the South thereof, together with the right to pave and/or otherwise surface and maintain the property covered by said easement in connection with the use for such purposes, to wit:

The North 30 feet of the South 80 feet of Lot 24, and the North 30 feet of the South 80 feet of the West 10 feet of Lot 23, of Hill and Jourdan's Subdivision of Block 11, San Pedro, in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California, as per map recorded in Book 59, Page 21, of Miscellaneous Records in the Office of the County Recorder of said County. [O.K. E. C. S., W. K. S., D. B. C., B. C.]

To have and to hold unto Grantee until terminated as hereinafter provided, to wit:

That this easement and all rights of Grantee hereunder may be terminated by Grantors, by giving Grantee a thirty day written notice of election to terminate the same accompanied by a payment to Grantee as follows:

The parties hereto have heretofore executed a sublease dated January 19, 1945, for a term commencing March 1, 1945, covering the South 50 feet of the West 30 feet of Lot 21, and the South 50 feet of Lots 22, 23, and 24, of Hill and Jourdan's Subdivision of said Block 11, San Pedro, as per map in Book 59, Page 21, wherein, among other things, it is provided that after the completion of the construction of a service station on said premises, Lessees therein (Grantors [fol. 2377] herein) shall pay to Lessor therein (Grantee herein), on the first day of each and every calendar month during said term (in addition to other sums), a sum equal to "36/100ths of 1% of Lessor's cost of said service station and the installation thereof"; and in the event that at the time of giving notice of termination of easement as afore-certain parcel of land situated in San Luis Obispo Suburban Trate, County of San Luis Ibispo, State of California, described as follows, to-wit:

Lot 21 of the San Luis Obispo Suburban Tract, in the County of San Luis Obispo, State of California, according to the map thereof filed February 7, 1906 in the Office of the Recorder of Said County.

Together with improvements and fixtures located thereon.

2. This sublease is subject to all the terms and conditions of the lease dated the 15th day of August, 1941, from Sandercock Transfer Company, a Corporation, to Standard Oil Company of California, a Corporation.

3. Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor as rental for the use and occupancy of the demised premises the sum of Two Hundred Eighty-five Dollars ($285.00) on the 15th day of each and every calendar month during the term hereof, commencing November 15, 1941, provided, however, if Lessor extends the term of said lease, referred to under Paragraph 2 above, the terms and provisions of this lease shall be extended automatically for a further term of 5 years, less one day, and Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor as rental hereunder, the sum of One Hundred Dollars ($100.00) on the first day of each and every calendar month during such extended term, commencing November 15, 1951, and it is agreed that [fol. 2387] if any rent shall be due and unpaid, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for Lessor to re-enter the demised premises and remove all persons therefrom, and Lessee agrees to quit and deliver up the premises to the Lessor peaceably and quietly at the end of said term in as good order and condition as the same are now or may be put into.

4. Lessee shall have the right during the term hereof, to occupy and use the demised premises for the sale and distribution of only such petroleum products as may be sold Lessee by Lessor, and Lessee agrees not to store, handle, sell, or distribute on or from said premises any petroleum products of any description other than that sold to Lessee by Lessor, except as otherwise authorized in writing by Lessor. Lessee agrees to operate his business continuously during the term of this lease and to do everything in his power to promote and facilitate the sale and vending of such products.

Mr. W. S. Darnell, Redding, California.

DEAR SIR:

Referring to our recent understanding in reference to that certain Dealer Agreement TBA dated April 15, 1946, by and between Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, therein called "Company" and you, therein called "Dealer," we hereby amend that part of paragraph one which refers to price, to read as follows:

> "The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products purchased by Dealer shall be Company's posted price for the same or similar products to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity at time and place of delivery, with the exception that the price Dealer shall pay Company for all grades of gasoline purchased by Dealer shall be one cent (1¢) less than the Company's posted price for gasoline to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity at time and place of delivery."

Please signify your acceptance of this modification by signing in the space indicated below.

Very truly yours, Standard Oil Company of California, by W. G. Watson, Attorney in Fact.

Competitive Lubricating Oils Chevron Truck Sations

WAF 8-14-47

Mr. W. A. Frazer, San Francisco.

For your information, neither The Pacific Coast Motor Freight or Acme Transportation Company have stopped at our Chevron truck stations to date. No doubt, in their hauls from San Francisco to Los Angeles, they are using Highway 99.

In respect to Union Oil Company's T5X oil, this competitive stock is being carried by our Ransome Truck Service, 7200-CDA, at San Luis Obispo purposely for the accounts of Western Truck Company, South Highway 101, San Jose, managed by A. D. Wolley & Sons, and operating nine large diesel and four butane trucks as well as other small equipment. The other account is Don Keith, Corcoran, California, who operates nine large diesel trucks. Any aid you may give us in having a member of the Lubricant's Division call on the above accounts will be greatly appreciated.

In addition to the above, our truck station 7277-CDA, Santa Maria, California, is carrying from one to two barrels of T5X for the express purpose of servicing a local trucking concern of Engel & Gray. Also our unit 7333-CDA, Ontario, California, carries a like amount for two local truck companies, namely; Dean Beck and John Corkindale. This matter will be handled by our local Fuel and Lubricating Engineer.

cc—Mr. A. H. Kannady, Long Beach.

5. Lessee shall not sell or assign this sublease or any part thereof or any interest therein, or sublease or underlet the demised premises in whole or in part, or become associated with any other persons directly or indirectly, as partner or otherwise, in regard to Lessee's interest in, to, or under this sublease, without written consent of Lessor first had and obtained; any violation by Lessee of any of the foregoing provisions in this paragraph contained shall at the option of Lessor operate as a forfeiture of this sublease. Lessee shall not suffer any lien or encumbrance to be placed upon Lessee's leasehold interest of said premises or any part thereof, nor shall Lessee permit any one to occupy said premises or any part thereof in place and stead of Lessee, nor shall Lessee occupy the said premises or any part thereof as trustee of an express or implied trust for any person whatsoever; the breach by Lessee of any of the foregoing provisions and any assignment, whether voluntary or by operation of law, by any process or proceeding of any court, or by attachment, execution, proceedings in insolvency or bankruptcy, whether voluntary or involuntary, or receivership proceedings, shall constitute a breach of the covenant against the assignment of Lessee's rights hereunder and shall work a forfeiture of this sublease at the option of Lessor.

6. Lessor shall pay, when due, all taxes levied upon the improvements placed by Lessor upon the demised premises or acquired by Lessor before or during the term hereof; but Lessee shall upon demand reimburse Lessor for any taxes levied or assessed as the result of improvements owned by Lessee and located on said premises.

7. It is understood and agreed that Lessee in the performance of this agreement is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Lessor any right to control Lessee with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of this agreement. It is further understood and agreed that Lessor reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Lessee's employees and that all employees of the Lessee shall be entirely under the control and direction of Lessee who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Lessee undertakes and agrees that he will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said said, any balance of said "Lessor's cost of said service station and the installation thereof" shall be unpaid to Grantee herein, then as a condition to the termination of said easement Grantors shall pay to Grantee at the time of giving such notice of termination of easement, the entire unpaid balance of said "Lessor's cost of said service station and the installation thereof." In the event of such payment, then said Lessee's under said sublease shall no longer be obligated to make any further payments on account of said "Lessor's cost of said service station and the installation thereof."

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands this 13 day of May, 1946.

state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Lessor with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Lessee accepts exclusive liability for all contfibutions and payroll taxes required under the Federal Social Security Act and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

8. Lessee is to furnish and to install, wholly at expense of lessee, all facilities for the wholesale and retail distribution of Bu-Gas.

9. Lessee is to receive all revenue from subleasing by Lessee of restaurant and repair shop to be installed on said premises.

10. In the event that lessee does not market from marketing facilities on said premises a total of 120,000 gallons of gasoline, Standard Diesel Fuel, Standard Automotive Diesel Fuel, or more during any six months' period after the first six months from the date of commencement of said marketing from said premises, Lessor shall have the right to terminate this sublease and to re-enter the demised premises and remove all persons therefrom, and Lessee agrees to quit and deliver up the premises to the Lessor peaceably and quietly in as good order and condition as the same are now or may be put into. [T.H.R. 2/25/42]

11. In the event of termination of this sublease as provided in Paragraph 10 hereof Lessor shall have the option to purchase the Bu-Gas facilities referred to in Paragraph 8 hereof at the original cost therefor to Lessee less depreciation at the rate of 5% per year but in any event not less than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000). In the event Lessor elects not to exercise said option to purchase, Lessee shall have the right to remove said Bu-Gas facilities within a reasonable time after such termination of said sublease provided that the premises are placed in the same condition as they were prior to the installation of said facilities.

NOTE SECURED BY DEED OF TRUST

$22,500.00 San Pedro, California January 20, 1945.

In installments as herein stated for value received, we promise to pay to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, or order at 605 W. Olympic, Los Angeles, California, the sum of Twenty-two Thousand Five Hundred and no/100 Dollars, with interest from date on unpaid principal at the rate of 2-1/2 per cent per annum, principal and interest payable in installments of One Hundred and no/100 Dollars ($100.00), or more on the first day of each month beginning on the 1st day of March, 1945, and continuing until such time as a Service Station is constructed upon the premises described in the Deed of Trust given to secure this Note; but in any event the balance of principal and interest due hereunder shall all become due and payable on or before March 1, 1960; if prior thereto the construction of a Service Station is completed thereon, the then remaining principal and unpaid interest shall be payable in One Hundred Twenty (120) equal monthly installments from the date construction is completed to include interest at 2-1/2 per cent per annum.

Each payment hereunder shall be credited first on interest then due and the remainder on principal, and interest shall thereupon cease upon the principal so credited. Should default be made on the payment of any installment when due the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due at the option of the holder of this Note. Principal and interest payable in lawful money of the United States. If action be instituted on this note we promise to pay such sum, in addition to all sums herein provided to be paid, as the Court may fix as attorneys' fees. This lease, dated the 4th day of June, 1943,

Witnesseth:

1. That W. L. Kissinger and Zoe Kissinger, his wife, of the County of San Bernardino, State of California, Lessor, does hereby lease unto Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, Lessee, for the term commencing on the 1st day of August, 1943, and ending on the 31st day of July, 1953, all that certain parcel of land situate in the City of Ontario, County of San Bernardino, State of California, described as follows, to-wit:

Lots 5, 6, 7, 8, in Block 50, Town of Ontario, as per plat recorded in Book 9 of Maps, page 43, records of San Bernardino County, together with all improvements and fixtures located thereon.

2. Lessee agrees to pay Lessor rental for the use and occupancy of the demised premises as follows:

"In advance on the 1st day of each and every calendar month during the term hereof, the sum of Two Hundred Dollars ($200.00)."

"In each year commencing August first and ending July thirty-first, during the term of this agreement, in which deliveries of gasoline by Lessee into storage facilities on the demised premises exceed 240,000 gallons, then Lessee agrees to pay Lessor on September first following the end of each such year, an additional rental in the sum of one cent (1¢) for each gallon so delivered in excess of 240,000 gallons during each such year. Lessee shall at Lessor's request, render Lessor such statement showing the amount of gallons so delivered during each such year as will permit Lessor to determine the basis of any payment made under this provision," provided, however, that no rentals shall be due and payable hereunder until the date on which possession of the demised premises has been delivered over to Lessee.

Competitive Lubrication Oils, Chevron Truck Stations

Mr. H. R. Cuyler, Attention: Mr. R. W. Goodale.

Mr. C. T. Furrer reports that Union T5-X oil is being carried by the Ransome Truck Service, 7200-CDA, at San Luis Obispo, purposely for two accounts. The one is the Western Truck Company, South Highway 101, San Jose, managed by A. D. Wolley and Sons and operating 9 large diesel and 4 butane trucks as well as other small equipment. The other account is Don Keith, Corcoran, California, who operates 9 large diesel trucks.

We suggest your having someone call on these trucking companies in an effort to convert these accounts to the use of our RPM Heavy Duty Motor Oil. Please keep us advised as to the success you have in handling this matter.

Mr. Estabrook, of course, tried to bring out the point that he would undoubtedly lose considerable diesel fuel business and revenue to himself due to not being able to supply the competitive oils. However, we remained firm in our attitude and Mr. Estabrook knows all competitive oils are to be removed as soon as his present supply is sold.

Attention: Mr. R. W. Goodale

Since September we have been contacting your office with regard to the competitive lubricating oil problem existing at our Chevron Truck Stations. To date, there has been some encouraging progress made in the solicitation of the number of trucking firms requesting competitive brands at our stations. Although we certainly appreciate the difficulties at hand and the time element that must be taken into consideration in work of this kind, nevertheless, we should like a report of the situation as it now stands.

For some time past we have been concerned over inroads made by competitive oil companies in placing their lubricating oils with our Chevron truck stations. The Union Oil Company with their T5-X have been particularly active.

Combatting this problem requires primarily, sales and educational work with the Dealer involved and second, possibly outside solicitation of trucking firms where headquarter points are located in another District.

We feel certain that you have sales and educational plans under way at any stations where competitive oils are now on hand. However, regarding outside solicitation, Mr. Goodales' Division is anxious to cooperate with you to eliminate any problem involved. It will be of interest to you to learn that the Lubricants Division is now engaged in a series of contacts with several coast trucking firms. These contacts are designed to sell the trucker upon the use of our lubricating oils, both at headquarter points, as well as on the road.

Of the firms contacted, we have been informed that Pacific Coast Motor Freight of Portland, and Acme Transportation Company, Oakland, have instructed their drivers to use RPM Heavy Duty Motor Oil while on the road. Encouraging progress has been made also with the West Coast Trucking Company in Los Angeles.

If you have a competitive oil problem with any of your truck stations, we should like to be advised both as to product and trucking company or companies involved. If the trucker headquarters outside of your District, we shall then supplement your sales efforts at the station with the help of the Lubricants Division.

We should also like to know if either the Pacific Coast Motor Freight or the Acme Transportation Company are purchasing RPM Heavy Duty at your stations in the event they are hauling through your District.

We are prepared to assist you in your plans to eliminate

Mr. R. W. Goodale, San Francisco:

In reply to your above letter, we wish to report that Mr. Don Keith of Corcoran has been contacted in regard to our RPM Heavy Duty Motor Oil. This Diesel Truck operator had been using Associated products, and particularly Associated Cadel, for a number of years. However, the Associated Cadel was not giving him the service he figured it should and a friend of his suggested that he try Union Oil Company's product T5X. He has, for some time now, been using Union T5-X and has found it very satisfactory and advised our representative that he could see no reason for making a change as long as the product was satisfying his needs.

Mr. Keith is a user of our Standard Diesel Fuel and various other products and likes to do business with our Chevron Truck Stations. Our representative was told that he has even gone so far as to write our Company a letter asking them, for his convenience, to stock the Union product at the various stations along his runs.

At present it seems that Mr. Keith is not ready to make a change in regard to his lubricating oil; however, we shall maintain our contacts with him.

While we can give no additional information on the trucking accounts we listed, in many cases Districts, in submitting their reports on the competitive problem, did mention specific stations at which competitive motor oils were being sold.

Truckers—Cronin and Williamson are demanding other brands than our own at Bakersfield's station in Wheeler Ridge. The other firms listed by Bakersfield apparently are purchasing through the Greenfield Truck Station.

In the San Francisco District we are told the problem exists at all of their truck stations, whereas Fresno merely mentions the Mammoth Truck Station, and Sacramento the Woodland Truck Terminal.

There is no doubt but that the introduction of RPM DELO Special will furnish new impetus for renewed solicitation of these and other accounts who are insisting on the purchase of competitive oils at our Chevron Truck Stations. We are looking forward to much improvement as a result of

GENTLEMEN:

Please refer to the Distributor Agreement as now operative between us, dated February 21, 1941, covering your petroleum products requirements in the operation of the sub-surface garage under Union Square in San Francisco.

In consideration of the installation by us of certain additional lubrication facilities at the Union Square Garage in accordance with the Exhibit "A" attached hereto and made a part hereof, it is agreed that said Distributor Agreement shall be modified as follows:

1. We agree to install the equipment and make the improvements shown on said Exhibit "A". We shall retain title to all such equipment and improvements as shown on said Exhibit "A".

2. You shall pay us advance rental in the amount of five thousand dollars ($5,000.00) for the use of such additional lubrication equipment and facilities, which shall be due and payable on the first day of the month following the month when work on such lubrication facilities has been completed. Such advance rental represents a monthly rental of Eighty-three Dollars and Thirty-three Cents ($83.33) during a period commencing upon the aforesaid date when said advance rental payment becomes due and payable and continuing thereafter for Sixty (60) months.

We understand that the Union Square Garage, Inc. is operating said garage under the terms of a Garage Management Agreement with you. Under such agreement the latter corporation accounts to you for all operating costs; therefore, you hereby direct us to invoice such latter corporation for the amount of the advance rental involved herein.

3. Upon expiration of the Sixty (60) month period following said commencement date, we agree to give you a Bill of Sale to all such facilities and improvements provided for hereunder, provided that you have complied with all the terms and provisions of said Distributor Agreement, and you have not exercised any right you may have to terminate said Distributor Agreement (except for our default).

[fol. 2412] 4. All said facilities so installed by us under Exhibit "A" shall be maintained and repaired at your own expense and you shall pay all taxes assessed against such facilities.

As modified above, said Distributor Agreement is hereby ratified and confirmed.

Please signify your agreement to the foregoing by signing in the space provided below on the duplicate, triplicate and quadruplicate copies of this letter agreement.

Yours very truly, Standard Oil Company of California, By W. G. Watson, Attorney in fact.

Standard Oil Building

San Francisco, 20, Cal., March 1, 1945.

Union Square Garage Corporation, 114 Sansome Street, San Francisco, California.

GENTLEMEN:

Please refer to that certain Distributor Agreement dated February 21, 1941, as now operative between us covering the operation of a garage located under Union Square in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Reference is more particularly made to paragraph 1 of said Distributor Agreement wherein it is provided that the term of said agreement shall continue for a period of thirty (30) years, or until all of the Preferred Stock of Distributor shall have been redeemed at par, plus accrued dividends thereon, whichever period is longer.

It is our understanding that you are about to redeem said Preferred Stock and substitute in its place and stead interest bearing debentures. In the event said redemption and substitution is made by you, it is mutually agreed that paragraph 1 of said Distributor Agreement shall be hereby amended to read as follows:

> "Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called 'Company', hereby appoints Union Square Garage Corporation, hereinafter called 'Distributor', a 'Standard Stations, Inc. Authorized Distributor' for the distribution of such merchandise as is currently sold at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc., in Distributor's Area, including Atlas Tire, Atlas Tubes, and Atlas Batteries, for a term commencing upon the date the Union Square Garage, San Francisco, California, opens for business and continuing for a term of thirty (30) years from and after such date, or until all of the debentures of Distributor shall have been redeemed at par, plus accrued interest thereon, whichever period is longer; provided, however, this contract shall be terminable by Company at any time upon giving Distributor thirty (30) days notice in writing of intention so to terminate."

Except as modified herein all of the terms and provisions of said Distributor Agreement are hereby ratified and confirmed.

Please signify your agreement to the foregoing by signing in the space provided below.

Union Square Garage Corporation, San Francisco, California.

GENTLEMEN:

Please refer to the Distributor Agreement between you and Standard Oil Company of California, dated February 21, 1941, covering the operation of the subsurface garage under Union Square in San Francisco.

In the paragraph entitled "Appointment," the Distributor Agreement provides for a specified term commencing on the date the Union Square Garage opens for business. Since the opening date has now been set for September 14, 1942, we shall consider that date as the commencement date of the Distributor Agreement.

In the paragraph of the Distributor Agreement entitled "Other Merchandise," Standard Oil Company of California agrees to allow you certain commissions or differentials below the selling price on non-petroleum merchandise supplied you under the agreement. Under the terms of the Garage Management and Occupancy between you and Union Square Garage, Inc., the latter corporation will operate the garage. In view of this, we will arrange to have any commissions payable under provisions of paragraph entitled "Other Merchandise" of the Distributor Agreement paid to Union Square Garage, Inc., unless and until notified by you to the contrary.

In the paragraph entitled "Payment," the Distributor Agreement specifies certain rentals to be paid by you for equipment to be furnished by Standard Oil Company of California. The following equipment has been furnished and monthly rental is indicated opposite each item:

	Per Month
4 Chek-Charts	$1.00
2 Battery Chargers	2.00
2 Capacifesters	1.50
7 Cash Boxes with Windshield Servicer	2.35
13 Bottle Stands with Trays	.75
Total	$7.60

[fol. 2416] We will bill Union Square Garage, Inc. for this rental in accordance with your Garage Management and Occupancy Agreement with the operator.

Please signify your agreement to the foregoing by signing in the space provided below.

[fol. 2418] DISTRIBUTOR AGREEMENT

Appointment

Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company", hereby appoints Union Square Garage Corporation, hereinafter called "Distributor", a "Standard Stations, Inc. Authorized Distributor" for the distribution of such merchandise as is currently sold at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc., in Distributor's Area, including Atlas Tires, Atlas Tubes, and Atlas Batteries, for a term commencing upon the date the Union Square Garage, San Francisco, California opens for business and continuing for a term of thirty (30) years from and after such date, or until all of the Preferred Stock of Distributor shall have been redeemed at par, plus accrued dividends thereon, whichever period is longer; provided, however, this contract shall be terminable by Company at any time upon giving Distributor thirty (30) days notice in writing of intention so to terminate.

Quantity

Company agrees to sell to Distributor, and Distributor agrees to buy from Company, and stock and offer for sale, all of Distributor's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor in the conduct of its business in that certain subsurface garage under Union Square in the City and County of San Francisco, State of California. Company agrees to sell to Distributor such petroleum products as shall be required to meet Distributor's requirements, which shall include those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products then currently sold at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc., in Distributor's area.

Brand Names

It is understood and agreed that the product or products received from Company hereunder will be sold to the public as the product or products of Company under Company's regular trade-marks and brands for such product or products. Distributor is not to use, in connection with the sale and/or advertisement for sale of said product or products, any trademark or trade name other than those regularly used by Company for such product or products, unless expressly consented to in writing by Company. Upon written notice from Company or upon any termination of this contract, Distributor shall discontinue the use, in any manner, of Company's trademarks or trade names.

Location

Distributor's requirements hereunder shall be delivered at such times and in such quantities as shall be needed by Distributor in the normal conduct of its business at its garage located in the subsurface of Union Square in the City and County of San Francisco.

Other Merchandise

Company agrees to sell or consign to Distributor, and Distributor agrees to purchase or receive from Company, and stock and offer for sale, all of Distributor's requirements of tires, tubes, batteries, and other non-petroleum merchandise used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor upon the premises hereinbefore described, to the fullest extent to which Company shall be able to furnish such non-petroleum merchandise to Distributor. The tires, tubes, batteries, and other non-petroleum merchandise to be supplied to Distributor hereunder shall be Company's regular line of Atlas tires, Atlas tubes, Atlas batteries, and other non-petroleum merchandise then currently being sold at service stations operated by Company in Distributor's area. Company shall be obligated to deliver such merchandise hereunder only so long as the same is being sold generally in service stations operated by Company in Distributor's area, and Distributor shall have the right to purchase or receive from others such non-petroleum merchandise as may be not then currently sold by Company at its service stations in Distributor's area. Whether tires, [fol. 2419] tubes, batteries, and other non-petroleum merchandise which Distributor agrees to handle hereunder shall be consigned or sold to Distributor shall depend on Company's current policies, but Distributor shall have the right to handle such merchandise on a consignment basis during such time or times as similar merchandise is consigned to dealers in Distributor's area by a majority of the major oil companies hereinafter named. Company agrees to allow Distributor commissions, or the equivalent thereof in differentials below the selling price thereof, as set forth in schedules to be furnished Distributor from time to time; provided, however, that the prices, differentials and commissions applicable to such merchandise shall at all times be no less favorable to Distributor than those available to Company's other dealers in Distributor's area. All expenses of the storage, handling, sale, and distribution at or from the garage of products and merchandise consigned or sold to Distributor under the terms of this or any other paragraph hereof shall be paid by Distributor. The proceeds of the sale of consigned merchandise shall be held by Distributor as trustee for Company and paid over to Company on demand.

Prices for Petroleum Products

The prices charged for petroleum products sold to Distributor and the commissions allowed for petroleum products consigned by Company to Distributor, shall be Company's posted prices or commissions, as the case may be, to its dealers generally at the time and place of sale or consignment to Distributor, for the particular products and type of delivery involved, except that such prices shall not be more than, nor such commissions be less than those charged or allowed generally by a majority of the following corporations for similar deliveries of products of like grade and quality to dealers generally in the area in which Distributor's garage will be located:

Texaco Corporation.
Tidewater Associated Oil Company.
Union Oil Company of California.
Shell Oil Company of California.
Richfield Oil Company of California.
General Petroleum Corporation of California.
Standard Oil Company of California.

Whether petroleum products which distributor handles hereunder shall be consigned or sold to Distributor, shall depend on Company's current policies followed with respect to Company's other dealers generally in Distributor's area.

Selling Prices

Any and all products sold or consigned to Distributor hereunder shall be sold by Distributor at not less than Company's Authorized retail price therefor at time and place of sale, and said products shall not be advertised, offered for sale, or sold at a lower price.

Advertising

Upon any termination of this agreement, Company shall have the right to remove any and all signs and advertising matter and any other property placed on the premises by Company. Upon such termination, Distributor agrees to paint out any signs or colors at the garage which may indicate in any way that Company's products are sold thereon.

Operation of Station

Distributor agrees to promote diligently the sale of products and merchandise delivered to Distributor hereunder, and to use Distributor's best efforts to increase the sale thereof, while and to the extent that Distributor is handling Company's products hereunder.

[fol. 2420] Distributor's Responsibility

Distributor shall be responsible for all loss of or damage to consigned goods belonging to Company in Distributor's possession. Distributor agrees to protect, defend, and hold Company, harmless from and against any and all claims or demands for damage to property, or for injury to or death of any persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Distributor or Distributor's employees under this contract. Any and all consigned goods in Distributor's possession upon any termination of this contract shall be returned to Company.

Company will protect, defend, and hold Distributor harmless from and against any and all claims or demands for damage to property or for injury to or death of any persons occasioned or alleged to be occasioned by defective merchandise delivered to Distributor by Company.

Payment

Distributor agrees to pay to Company as follows for such advertising material as may be furnished by Company to Distributor hereunder, payment to be made monthly in advance:

$2.75 per month for each Chevron Sign
1.00 per month for each Battery Charger
.75 per month for each Capacitester
.25 per month for each Chek Chart

Terms on Products Purchased by Distributor

Net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option. If at any time Distributor shall fail to make any payment due hereunder, such failure shall, at Company's option, be deemed by Company to be a breach of the entire contract, and Company may suspend deliveries until such payment has been made or may terminate this contract. No such suspension or termination shall, however, affect any obligation of Distributor hereunder.

Charge or Tax

Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to or as a result of the transaction herein provided for or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Distributor on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for, including maximum prices.

Prevention of Performance

If Company is prevented from or hindered in making deliveries hereunder due to fire, riot, labor disturbances, earthquakes, war, acts of any government (whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal), accident, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities or supplies, shortage of products deliverable under this contract due to a shortage in the supply of crude oil produced in the State of California, or any cause beyond its control whether similar to the foregoing causes or not, the obligation of Company to make deliveries during the period of such disability shall be suspended. During such times as the Company shall be prevented from or hindered in the making of deliveries hereunder for and on account of any of the causes hereinbefore named, Distributor shall have the absolute right to fill its requirements of petroleum and non-petroleum products herein agreed to be sold by Company to Distributor, from any other source whatsoever.

Conduct of Distributor's Business

It is understood and agreed that Distributor in the performance of this agreement is engaged in an independent business, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Distributor with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of this agreement. It is further understood and agreed that Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Distributor's employees and that all employees of the Distributor shall be entirely under the control and direction of Distributor. Distributor undertakes and agrees that he will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of [fol. 2421] this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Distributor accepts exclusive liability for all Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

Breach of Contact

In the event Distributor or Company shall fail to perform or fulfill any obligation imposed on it herein, either party may at its option terminate this contract forthwith. The waiver by either party of any breach of any provision hereof shall not be deemed to be a waiver of the breach of any other provision or provisions hereof or of any subsequent or continuing breach of such provision or provisions.

Assignability

This contract shall extend to and shall be binding upon the successors and assigns of Company and Distributor, provided, however, that no assignment hereof shall be made by Distributor or Company, or by operation of law, except to any leasehold mortgagee of Distributor, without the written consent of the other party hereto; provided however, that such consent shall not be withheld arbitrarily or capriciously by either party. This contract shall not be deemed an asset in, and at the option of either party, shall terminate in the event of any voluntary or involuntary receivership, bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings of Distributor.

Standard Stations, Inc.

Until further notice from Company, all payments to be made and notices to be given by or to Company hereunder shall be made or given by or to Standard Stations, Inc., as the case may be.

Definition of Area

Wherever the terms "Distributor's area" or "area in which Distributor's garage is located" or other like terminology is herein used, the same shall be construed to mean the City and County of San Francisco.

Dated: February 21, 1941.

[fol. 2422] GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT 53-A

Amendment to Garage Management and Occupancy Agreement

This Agreement, made and entered into this 1st day of July, 1945, by and between Union Square Garage Corporation, hereinafter called "Union", and Union Square Garage Inc., hereinafter called "Operator",

Witnesseth:

Whereas, the parties hereto made and entered into a Garage Management and Occupancy Agreement dated December 31, 1941 (hereinafter referred to as "said Agreement"), with respect to the garage then being constructed in Union Square in San Francisco; and

Whereas, Operator entered into possession of said garage on September 14, 1942 and the term of said Agreement will continue until and expire on September 30, 1967; and

Whereas, the parties deem it in their best interests to modify and amend said Agreement in the respects hereinafter set forth;

Now, Therefore, in consideration of the premises and the respective covenants and agreements of the parties hereto, as hereinafter set forth, it is agreed as follows:

1. Payments and Annual Fixed Charges

The obligations of the parties pursuant to paragraph 7, subdivision (4), of said Agreement, in connection with payments required of Operator of the annual fixed charges of Union as therein provided, are hereby modified as follows:

(a) Commencing as of July 1, 1945, all future payments of annual fixed charges shall be computed for and on the [fol. 2423] basis of the fiscal years of the parties hereto which at present begin on July 1st of each year and end on June 30th of each succeeding year.

(b) In order to adjust the obligations of Operator under said Agreement which are to be performed in certain stated years of the term of said Agreement, as set forth therein, the third year of said term shall be deemed to be the period from October 1, 1944 to June 30, 1945, and the fourth and subsequent years of said term shall be deemed respectively to commence on July 1st, 1945, and July 1st of each subsequent year; all obligations of Operator to be performed in any year of the term of said Agreement shall be performed in the years of said term as modified hereby. The foregoing provisions of this paragraph (b) shall not affect the final expiration of the term of said Agreement as of September 30, 1967, and the period of said term after June 30, 1967 shall be deemed and treated as a fractional twenty-sixth year of said term.

(c) As interest at seven (7) per cent per annum after April 1, 1945 on the sum of $689,100.00, in lieu of interest at six (6) per cent per annum as provided in said Agreement has been included in the fixed charges of Union for said third year, Operator shall pay the increase of one (1) per cent for said period (i.e. $1722.75) to Union on or before September 30, 1945; provided that if the issuance of the debentures of Union hereafter to be issued but to be dated April 1, 1945 shall be abandoned, Operator shall be relieved of the obligation for such additional one (1) per cent for said period, and said amount, if theretofore paid, shall be returned to Operator.

(d) After July 1, 1945, annual fixed charges shall include interest at seven (7) per cent per annum to and including [fol. 2424] April 1, 1951 in lieu of six (6) per cent per annum as provided in said Agreement; provided that if the issuance of the debentures of Union hereafter to be issued but to be dated April 1, 1945 shall be abandoned, Operator shall be required only to pay dividends and/or interest as provided in said Agreement; provided further, that the interest ($12,062) accruing shall be included in fixed charges for the year beginning July 1, 1946 and shall be payable in three equal installments on July 15, August 15 and September 15, 1946, and not in the twelve installments otherwise payable in such year, and the interest ($12,062) accruing for April, May and June, 1947, shall be included in fixed charges for the year beginning July 1, 1947, and shall be payable in three equal installments on July 15, August 15, and September 15, 1947, and not in the twelve installments otherwise payable in such year.

(e) The fixed charges to be paid by Operator between July 1, 1967 and September 30, 1967 shall be estimated, computed and paid as follows: All taxes and surtaxes on, measured by or based upon earnings, receipts and/or income for tax periods ending on or before September 30, 1967 and not theretofore fully included in fixed charges which have been paid by Operator shall be paid in full on or before September 30, 1967 (or as soon thereafter as the amount thereof is determined), and all such taxes and surtaxes as will accrue against or be paid or payable by Union on account of earnings, receipts or income for any fraction of a tax period beginning prior to September 30, 1967, and ending thereafter, shall be computed in the same manner as they would be computed if the payments to Union by Operator during said fractional tax period prior to September 30, 1967 constituted the entire income of Union for a full tax period and the amount found to be due on the basis of such computation shall be paid by Operator on September 30, 1967 (or as soon [fol. 2425] thereafter as the amount thereof is determined). Except as above provided the fixed charges to be paid by Operator for the period between July 1, 1967 and September 30, 1967 shall be computed, estimated and paid on the basis of three-twelfths of all such annual fixed charges as will accrue against or will be paid or payable by Union in the twelve months following July 1, 1967, and shall be paid in equal monthly installments on the first days of July, August and September, 1967.

(f) In the event payments by Operator at the rate of one-twelfth of Union's estimated annual fixed charges shall not be sufficient to enable Union to meet its obligations as they currently become payable in any year, Union may notify Operator and require Operator to pay more than one-twelfth per month of its estimated annual requirements in the earlier part or parts of such year, provided that the total obligations of Operator for an entire year shall not exceed the total amount of fixed charges required of Operator under said Agreement as amended hereby.

2. Security

Union acknowledges that it received as security for the performance of the obligations of Operator under said Agreement a bill of sale from Operator to Union dated August 31, 1942, covering all cash registers, interior and exterior advertising and directional signs; portable standards and chains for entrances, furniture, furnishings, sales counters, display cases, auxiliary cashier stations, loose or moveable garage equipment and tools, tele/autograph for cashier stations, electric bulbs, fluorescent lamps, janitor's items, all materials and supplies for the garage business (exclusive of property intended for sale or for servicing of automobiles), and all other personal property [fol. 2426] (exclusive of property intended for sale or for servicing of automobiles) then located or installed in said garage. Operator agrees that it will at any time or from time to time upon request of Union publish notice of intention to mortgage and execute and deliver to Union a good and sufficient chattel mortgage effectively mortgaging to Union as security for the obligations of Operator under said Agreement and this amendment thereto, any and all such property then owned by or in the possession of Operator and intended for use or installation in said garage, including any hereafter acquired by Operator and located in or intended for use in said garage, all in such form and manner as may be satisfactory to Union.

3. Refunding Operations

Union shall have the right from time to time during the term of said Agreement to extend, refund and/or refinance its now existing indebtedness to Reconstruction Finance Corporation and/or its indebtedness evidenced by its debentures to be dated April 1, 1945 and for the issuance of which an application for a permit is now pending, and/or to issue debentures and/or bonds to pay, redeem or retire its outstanding preferred stock or any part thereof and to secure the whole or any part of any thereof by such mortgages, deeds of trust, pledges and/or assignments as Union may desire, provided only that Union shall not as a result thereof increase the annual or other payments required of Operator or require Operator to provide Union with funds for the payment or redemption of the principal thereof or for the interest thereon more rapidly or in greater aggregate amounts than those now required of Operator under said Agreement and this amendment thereto. All references in said Agreement or this amendment to Reconstruction Finance Corporation or to "said [fol. 2427] Mortgagee" shall apply to the Trustee under any and all indentures executed with respect to any indebtedness incurred by Union wholly or in part to extend, refund or refinance its now existing indebtedness to Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

4. Security Deposit

Operator agrees that it will establish and maintain during the term of said Agreement an account or accounts in a San Francisco bank or banks from time to time designated by Union, to constitute a trust fund for the protection of Union and as collateral security to secure the performance by Operator of its obligations under said Agreement, and this amendment thereto. Operator agrees to execute instructions in connection with such account or accounts satisfactory to the depositary and including, if requested by Union, a statement that said account constitutes collateral security to Union to secure the performance of such obligations and that withdrawals therefrom may only be made as hereinafter provided.

Within sixty days after the close of its taxable year ending June 30, 1946, Operator will deposit in said account or accounts a sum equal to its net income as hereinafter in this section defined for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946. Within sixty days after the close of each fiscal year to and including the year ending June 30, 1950, Operator will deposit in such account or accounts all of its net income for the fiscal year immediately preceding the date of such deposit until the total deposits in such account or accounts shall equal $100,000.

If on June 30, 1950 the amounts on deposit in said account or accounts exceeds the sum of $50,000 plus any known liabilities of Union for which Operator is liable but for which provision has not been made in an estimate of or by payment of annual fixed charges, Operator may withdraw [fol. 2428] such excess. If the amount on deposit in said account or accounts on June 30, 1950 is less than $50,000, Operator shall thereafter continue to deposit amounts equal to its net income for each fiscal year thereafter within sixty days after the close of each fiscal year until the total amounts on deposit equal $50,000.

If at any time during the term of said Agreement the amount in said account or accounts shall be reduced below the amounts aforesaid on account of the application of any part thereof in the payment of any of the obligations of Operator under said Agreement or this amendment thereof, Operator will within sixty days after the close of each fiscal year thereafter deposit all of its net income for such fiscal year until said accounts have been restored to the required amount.

During the period prior to June 30, 1950 Operator shall not be required to make any deposits in said account or accounts which would make the total amounts on deposit exceed $100,000. After June 30, 1950 Operator shall not be required to make any deposits in said account or accounts which would make the total amounts on deposit exceed $50,000.

After June 30, 1950 Operator may withdraw any interest which may accrue and be credited to said account or accounts provided such withdrawal of interest does not reduce the deposits in said account or accounts below the above required amounts.

Operator may with the written consent of Union invest all or any part of the funds in said account or accounts in bonds or other securities and from time to time change or sell such investments, provided that the securities are pledged in a manner satisfactory to Union as security for the performance of Operator's obligations under said Agreement and this amendment thereto, or proceeds thereof are redeposited in said account.

[fol. 2429] All withdrawals from such account or accounts shall be on checks or drafts bearing the signature of an officer of Operator and an officer of Union, provided that upon the termination or cancellation of said Agreement all deposits in said account or accounts shall be applied to the payment of any sums due from Operator to Union, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to Operator.

For the purposes of this Section 4 of this agreement the net income of Operator shall be computed in the manner defined in said Agreement as amended above, except that Operator shall be entitled to deduct from its gross income (1) all taxes, surtaxes (and interest and penalties thereon) on, measured by or based on its earnings, receipts or income, (2) such amounts as are reasonable to provide Operator with operating capital for the following fiscal year, (3) the amounts if any which are payable to Union under subdivision (5) of paragraph 7 of said Agreement, and (4) any expenditure for replacements, additions or improvements of or to said premises and/or the equipment used therein which have been made with the prior written consent of Union.

Operator agrees that at any time when said account or accounts are below the amounts hereinabove mentioned and required to be on deposit therein, Operator will not pay any dividend or make any other distribution upon any of its stock or pay to Andrew Pansini or Mary Pansini or to any stockholder or spouse of any stockholder the principal of any indebtedness to any such person for moneys heretofore or hereafter loaned to Operator.

5. Tax Deficiencies

If after the close of any year of the term of said Agreement, Union shall be liable for any deficiency in any taxes measured by or on its income, receipts or profits, and/or for [fol. 2430] penalties or interest thereon, Operator shall on written demand of Union pay all sums necessary to enable Union to pay such taxes, interest and/or penalties within the time permitted for the payment thereof; provided that Operator shall not be deemed in default in making such payments (a) until it shall have had a reasonable time, in view of the amount of such liability and its available assets or income, to pay such sum, or (b) if such sum can be paid by Operator only out of the security account mentioned in paragraph 5 above.

6. Excess Interest

In order to reimburse Operator for obligations hereinabove assumed for interest in excess of six (6) per cent per annum on the debentures to be issued by Union, no payment shall be due to Union from Operator under the provisions of subdivision (5) of paragraph 7 of said Agreement until Operator shall have recovered from sums which would otherwise be payable to Union under said subdivision an amount equal to the interest in excess of six (6) per cent per annum paid to Union by Operator on account of such debentures; provided, however, that such sums shall be payable as provided in said subdivision to the extent that Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall require the payment thereof for the establishment of reserves for the payment of the indebtedness of Union to Reconstruction Finance Corporation; provided further, that Union shall not by the use of reserves on hand at the time of any refinancing of its indebtedness increase the amounts which may be required under this paragraph to be paid for the establishment of reserves for the payment of such indebtedness.

7. Debt Reduction

If, at the close of the year ending June 30, 1948, or on June 30th in any year thereafter, Operator is not in default under said Agreement, as amended by this agreement, and [fol. 2431] the aggregate amounts theretofore included in annual fixed charges under the provisions of clause (h) in the definition of fixed charges in paragraph 7 of said Agreement shall be $5,000 or more in excess of the aggregate par value or principal amount of preferred stock and/or long-term indebtedness theretofore paid, redeemed or retired by Union, Union shall within a reasonable time after the close of such year pay, redeem, or retire its outstanding preferred stock and/or long-term indebtedness in an amount substantially equal to the excess of such charges over such prior payments, redemptions and retirements; provided that Union shall not be so obligated if (i) it does not have funds available for use for such purposes, or (ii) such funds are applied by Union on the principal of the indebtedness to Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or (iii) reconstruction Finance Corporation will not consent to such use of such funds, or (iv) such use of such funds would, in the discretion of Union, be detrimental to it in view of its outstanding obligations, whether absolute or contingent and whether existing or reasonably contemplated; provided further, that Union may in its discretion decline to make such use of such funds, in which event it shall allow Operator a credit against fixed charges equal to the dividends or interest thereafter accruing on such stock and/or indebtedness as could have been paid, redeemed or retired with such funds.

8. Adjusted Obligations

In order to adjust and provide for certain obligations of the parties, it is agreed as follows:

(a) The parties acknowledge that they have prepared a statement of the annual fixed charges of Union to constitute an itemized statement for the first three years of the term of said Agreement, as amended above, that said statement has been prepared on the basis of figures submitted by Union from its records and on the basis of said Agreement, [fol. 2432] as amended by this agreement, and that it has been found that the total payments made by Operator during said three years were $1,378.10 in excess of the total payments required of Operator under said Agreement, as so amended. It is mutually agreed that the determination of said sum of $1,378.10 by said statement and by this agreement is without prejudice to changes if any error therein be hereafter discovered. Subject to the correction of any such error, Operator shall be allowed credit for such overpayment in the manner provided below.

(b) Union shall credit Operator in the manner provided below with the sum of $6,712.78 on account of certain construction costs incurred by Operator and which the parties have agreed were properly the obligation of Union under said Agreement.

(c) The credits mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) shall be allowed to and taken by Operator in two equal monthly installments in May and June, 1946, against the payments on account of annual fixed charges otherwise payable in said months.

(d) In connection with the provisions of clause (d) in the definition of "fixed charges" in paragraph 7 of said Agreement, the parties acknowledge that Operator has heretofore paid to Union all of the dividends accruing on the preferred stock of Union for the first, second and third years of the term of said Agreement except for the additional sum of $8,038 on account of dividends which accrued but were not charged to Operator in the first year of said term pursuant to the limitations of clause (d) of said paragraph 7. The maximum obligation of Operator for dividends and/or interest in the fourth and fifth years of the term of said Agreement shall be the [fol. 2433] amount hereinabove stated in clause (d) of section 1 of this agreement, or, if the debentures therein mentioned shall not be issued, dividends in the amount of $41,346. The maximum amounts mentioned in said clause (d) of the definition of "fixed charges" in paragraph 7 of said Agreement for the fourth and fifth years of said term are hereby stricken therefrom. Operator shall pay to Union said balance of $8,038 at the times and in the manner hereinafter provided in clause (g).

(e) There shall be cancelled and stricken from clause (ii) of the definition of "fixed charges" in paragraph 7 of said

Agreement, the obligation of Operator for the fourth year in the amount of $1,500 and the obligation of Operator in the fifth year in the amount of $6,500. In lieu thereof, Operator shall pay to Union the sum of $8,000 in lieu of the payments otherwise provided in said paragraph at the times and in the manner hereinafter provided in clause (g).

(f) The parties acknowledge that Union has incurred and will incur and pay expenses for legal fees, trustee's fees, printing and similar purposes in connection with the issuance of the debentures to be dated April 1, 1945. When the amount of such fees and other expenses in connection with the issuance of such debentures is determined Union shall give Operator written notice of the amount thereof and such amount shall be payable by Operator to Union at the times and in the manner hereinafter provided in clause (g). There shall be included in such expenses to be paid by Operator only such premiums for the calling or redemption of preferred stock or for costs of soliciting the deposit or exchange of stock as may have been approved in writing by Operator.

(g) The amounts hereinabove agreed to be paid by Operator under clauses (d), (e) and (f) next above shall be paid by Operator to Union, in addition to all other pay-[fol. 2434] ments required of Operator, in thirty-six (36) equal monthly installments beginning on the 15th day of July, 1948 and ending with the 15th day of June, 1951.

9. Approvals

This agreement shall not be effective until it shall have have been approved by Reconstruction Finance Corporation

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have executed these presents by their officers thereunto duly authorized the day and year first above written.

Union Square Garage Corporation, by C. H. Wall, President.

Attest: M. McCaba, Secretary.

Union Square Garage, Inc., by Andrew Pansini, President.

Attest: L. R. Biltronn, Secretary.

[fol. 2435] Resolved that the corporate officers be and they hereby are authorized and directed to enter into a products contract with Standard Oil Company of California no less favorable than that proposed by the company's bid dated January 2, 1941, said contract to contain, however, if it should be possible to negotiate the same, a clause stipulating that the price charged to this corporation should be no greater than that charged to any other buyer for delivery of products of a like grade, quantity and quality.

I, Richard E. Guggenhime, hereby certify that I am the duly elected, qualified, and acting Assistant Secretary of Union Square Garage Corporation; that the foregoing is a true, correct, and exact copy of a resolution duly adopted at a special meeting of the Board of Directors of Union Square Garage Corporation on January 6, 1941, duly and regularly called in accordance with law and the by-laws, at which a quorum was present and voting, which resolution has not been amended, modified, or rescinded.

Dated: January 13, 1941.

Richard E. Guggenhime, Assistant Secretary of Union Square Garage Corporation.

[fol. 2436] GARAGE MANAGEMENT AND OCCUPANCY AGREEMENT

This agreement made and entered into this 31st day of December, 1941, by and between Union Square Garage Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, hereinafter called "Union", and Union Square Garage, Inc., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of — — hereinafter called "Operator",

Witnesseth:

Whereas, Union is the lessee of the property hereinafter described, or part thereof, under lease dated March 18, 1941, by and between the City and County of San Francisco and Union, and recorded in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco in Volume 3730 of Official Records, page 382, the said lease being sometimes hereinafter called "City Lease"; and

Whereas, the said lease and leasehold estate and the term thereby created, and all of the other property, real and personal, hereinafter described is subject to that certain mortgage dated March 18, 1941, executed by Union to Reconstruction Finance Corporation and recorded in the office of the County Recorder of the City and County of San Francisco in Volume 3719 of Official Records, page 433, the said Reconstruction Finance Corporation being sometimes hereinafter called "Mortgagee", and said mortgage being sometimes hereinafter called "said Mortgage"; and

Whereas, Union has made and entered into an agreement with Standard Oil Company of California dated February 21, 1941 providing for the purchase and sale of petroleum [fol. 2437] products and other goods in the premises described below herein, said agreement being sometimes hereinafter called "Distributor Agreement"; and

Whereas, the parties hereto desire to provide for the management and occupancy by Operator of the premises and property described in said lease and described below herein,

Now, therefore, the parties hereto agree as follows:

For and in consideration of the covenants and agreements of Operator herein contained and the compliance by Operator with the terms, provisions and conditions hereinafter set forth, Union hereby gives, grants, lets and demises unto Operator and Operator undertakes and hires from Union, subject to the terms, provisions and conditions herein contained, the management and control of the premises and property described below herein, and the premises and property described below herein, for the term and upon the conditions hereinafter stated, to wit:

1. Property and Premises

The premises and property subject to this agreement are the following: All the right, title and interest of Union in and to the property described in said City Lease, being the subsurface of that certain park in the City and County of San Francisco commonly known and designated as "Union Square" and more particularly described as follows, to wit:

> Commencing at the point of intersection of the southerly line of Post Street and the easterly line of Powell Street; running thence easterly and along said line of Post Street four hundred twelve (412) feet six (6) inches to the westerly line of Stockton Street; thence at a right angle southerly and along said line of Stockton Street two hundred seventy-five (275) feet to the northerly line of Geary Street; thence at a right [fol. 2438] angle westerly and along said line of Geary Street four hundred twelve (412) feet six (6) inches to the easterly line of Powell Street; thence at a right angle northerly and along said line of Powell Street two hundred seventy-five (275) feet to the point of commencement.

Being known as Union Square, together with all the right, title and interest of Union in and to the garage to be and being constructed by Union in accordance with the provisions of said City Lease and in and to any and all buildings, improvements and appurtenances now or at any time hereafter constructed or placed in or upon the premises subject to said City Lease, or any part thereof, including all partitions, dynamos, engines, boilers, furnaces, fire prevention and extinguishing apparatus, heating, plumbing, ventilating, gas and electric light fixtures, elevators, and fixed machinery, fixed appliances and fixed equipment, and all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, easements, appendages and appurtenances to said estate and property belonging or in anywise appertaining, and all other tangible property, real, personal or mixed, of whatsoever nature now owned or hereafter acquired by Union or Operator and situate and intended for use upon said premises. The foregoing, or such part thereof as may be appropriate in the context, shall be included within the meaning of the words "said premises" as used in this agreement. Upon the entry of Operator into possession of said premises, the parties will prepare and execute an instrument supplemental to this agreement identifying and describing specifically and in detail the property then covered hereby. Operator will install and supply for its own account and at its own expense such of the following items of garage equipment as Operator desires to use: Cash registers; interior and exterior advertising and direc- [fol. 2439] tional signs, portable standards and chains for entrances; furniture; furnishings; sales counters; display cases, auxiliary cashier stations; loose or movable garage equipment and tools; teleautograph for cashier stations; electric bulbs; fluorescent lamps; usual janitor's items; all materials and supplies for the business and for the operation of the building. Except for the materials to be supplied by Operator, Union will equip said garage and install therein the fixtures included in its present plans and specifications, but this agreement shall be operative notwithstanding Union or Operator may be unable to furnish or install all thereof so long as sufficient shall have been installed to enable Operator to conduct a garage business in said premises substantially as now contemplated by Union.

2. Term

The term for which Operator shall manage and occupy the premises as herein provided shall commence when Operator shall have entered into possession of said premises and continue for twenty-five (25) years thereafter and, if Operator shall not have entered into possession as of the first day of a calendar month, in addition until the last day of the calendar month in which the twenty-fifth year shall expire. Operator shall be deemed to have entered into possession of said premises when said premises shall be completed and equipped as provided in paragraph 1 above and ready for operation for the purposes set forth in this agreement, and when written notice thereof shall have been received by Operator from Union, or whenever Operator shall have actually entered into the exclusive possession of said premises, whichever is earlier. Upon the entry by Operator into possession, the parties will prepare and execute an instrument supplemental to this agreement specifying the date of the commencement and the date of [fol. 2440] termination of said term in accordance with the foregoing. If Operator shall not have been given possession as set forth herein prior to the first day of January 1st, 1943, this agreement shall cease and terminate at the option of either party hereto, but Union shall not be liable in any manner to Operator on account thereof, except to return the payment under clause (2) in paragraph 7.

3. Purpose

Said premises shall be used solely for the operation of a public automobile garage and parking station and for the sale of such commodities and services therein as are or may in the future be customarily sold or rendered in a public garage, and for other lawful purposes in connection therewith.

Operator agrees to manage, operate and conduct in said premises such a public automobile garage and parking station and to dispense such commodities and services and conduct such other lawful operations therein continuously and at all times throughout the term of this agreement, to the fullest extent possible, consistent with the demand for such facilities, commodities and services and will at no time, irrespective of such demand, or the absence thereof, permit said premises to be vacant or unoccupied or used for any purpose other than as aforesaid.

4. City Lease

Operator accepts said premises and this agreement subject to all the terms, provisions and conditions of said City Lease and agrees not to do or permit any act or thing to be done and not to fail to do any act or thing in respect of the use and occupancy of said premises which in either case would constitute a violation or breach of any of the terms, covenants or conditions thereof, or subject Union to any liability.

[fol. 2441] 5. Mortgage

Operator accepts said premises and this agreement subject to said Mortgage and agrees not to do or permit any act or thing to be done and not to fail to do any act or thing in the respect of the use and occupancy of said premises which in either case would constitute a violation or breach of any of the terms, covenants or conditions thereof, or subject Union to any liability. While said Mortgage is undischarged, any decisions or directions which said Mortgagee is entitled hereunder to make or give to Operator shall supersede any conflicting decisions or directions made or given by Union. Said Mortgagee shall have the right as a third party beneficiary under this agreement to enforce all of the provisions of this agreement for its benefit.

6. Distributor Agreement

Operator accepts said premises subject to said Distributor Agreement, and agrees with Union to perform all of the covenants and obligations of Union under said agreement or under any agreement substituted therefor by Union and Standard Oil Company of California, and to comply on behalf of Union with all conditions thereof, in each case so long as said Distributor Agreement or substitute agreement shall remain in force during the term of this agreement.

7. Payments

In consideration of the rights herein granted to Operator, Operator will pay to the Union the sums and at the times following:

(1) Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000) forthwith after the execution of this agreement, as the purchase price of two hundred and fifty (250) shares of the now authorized six per cent (6%) cumulative preferred stock of Union, in accordance with outstanding permits. Union will promptly issue, deliver and sell said stock to Operator, subject to and [fol. 2442] on the terms authorized by said permits. The purchase and sale of said stock shall constitute a separate transaction, distinct from the remaining provisions of this agreement. This provision is subject to obtaining necessary permits. Bonded or long-term indebtedness mentioned in paragraph 20 below may be substituted by Union.

(2) Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000) on or before December 31, 1941.

(3) Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000) on or before the 15th day after Operator shall have entered into possession as hereinabove provided, or such lesser amount as Union in its discretion deems necessary to cover its expenses during the first full twelve (12) calendar months, plus any additional fractional portion of a month, of the term defined by paragraph 2 above.

(4) A sum equivalent to the annual fixed charges of Union for and during the full term hereof in accordance with itemized statements to be presented annually by Union to Operator. For the purposes of this clause, the first year shall include the first full twelve calendar months of the term hereinabove defined, plus any preceding fractional portion of a month of the term hereof as hereinabove defined, and each subsequent year shall constitute a period of twelve calendar months, the last of which shall coincide with the expiration of said term; provided, however, that there shall be excluded in the computation of the payments for the first year and fractional period of said term and in the computation of the payments for the balance of the term of this agreement, all such charges attributable to the period prior to 12:01 A.M. of the sixteenth calendar day after Operator shall have entered into possession as aforesaid. An estimated amount as set forth in annual statements of estimated [fol. 2443] expenses, which shall be presented to Operator by Union at least thirty (30) days prior to the commencement of the ensuing year, shall be payable by Operator in twelve equal monthly payments in advance on the first day of each calendar month during the period covered by said statement; provided that, for the first year, the monthly payments shall each be the sum of Fifteen Thousand Dollars ($15,000) except that the first payment on the first day of the first calendar month shall be adjusted and be increased or decreased, as the case may be, to give effect to the aforesaid period of fifteen (15) days during which such charges are not to be paid by Operator and to any fractional portion of a month (in excess of twelve (12) full months) for which payments may accrue after taking said fifteen-day period into account; provided, further, that the moneys paid under clauses "(2)" and "(3)" above shall be credited and applied against the first payment or payments due under this clause for said first year. If the total payments made during any one year, in accordance with the statements rendered, shall exceed the amount finally found due for that year (determined from said first mentioned itemized statements to be furnished to Operator), then the excess shall be credited on the next accruing payment or payments required under this clause in the next year; if said total payments made during any one year shall be less than the amount so finally found due for that year, the deficiency shall be paid by Operator within thirty (30) days from the receipt of said first mentioned itemized statement for such year.

(5) One-half (½) of the annual net income of Operator, as hereinbelow defined, in excess of Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000), for each year it shall exceed Twenty-five [fol. 2444] Thousand Dollars ($25,000) payable annually promptly after the determination of the amount thereof, and in any event within sixty (60) days after the close of each twelve (12) months of the term hereof; provided, if Operator shall have entered into possession as aforesaid more than fifteen (15) days prior to the first day of the next following calendar month, that the first year shall also include the preceding fractional portion of a month in excess of fifteen (15) days: provided, further, that no payment shall be due for any year or years after the first year until Operator shall have had a net income calculated as hereinafter defined in an amount cumulatively of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000) per annum for the prior year or years, including the reimbursement to Operator of any and all losses in the prior year or years, such losses to be calculated under and in accordance with the definition of net income hereinbelow.

Fixed Charges: The words "fixed charges" as used herein, shall mean the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000), plus the sum of the following:

(a) Interest on all indebtedness of Union now or hereafter existing to said Mortgagee, whether or not secured by said Mortgage or otherwise, or to any other person or persons if incurred in respect of such other person or persons in the maintenance, repair or reconstruction of said premises;

(b) Payments required on the principal of said indebtedness to said Mortgagee, and payments required on the principal of any other indebtedness to any other person or persons if such indebtedness in respect of such other person or persons was incurred in connection with the maintenance, repair or reconstruction of said premises;

[fol. 2445] (c) Payments to be applied by Union to its agreement with Reconstruction Finance Corporation to deposit net earnings to a total of Sixty-six Thousand Three Hundred Dollars ($66,300), and payments to be applied by Union from time to time thereafter to replete and maintain said fund at a minimum of Sixty-six Thousand Three Hundred Dollars ($66,300). The sum of Five Thousand Five Hundred and Twenty-Five Dollars ($5,525) shall be paid on the first day of each calendar month commencing with the first day of the first calendar month of the term of this agreement and ending with the first day of the twelfth calendar month thereof. If after said fund shall have been created the same shall be depleted from any cause, then Operator shall pay the sum of Five Thousand Five Hundred and Twenty-five Dollars ($5,525), or such lesser sum as shall be needed, on the first day of each calendar month after receipt by Operator of written notice of the depletion of said fund until said fund shall be restored to a minimum of Sixty-six Thousand Three Hundred Dollars ($66,300); provided that, if such payments shall not have repleted said fund to said minimum amount by the end of the calendar year in which it shall have been depleted, all of the net income of Operator, as hereinafter defined, during Union's preceding fiscal year in excess of the payments so accruing at the rate of Five Thousand Five Hundred and Twenty-five Dollars ($5,525) per month shall be paid on account of the repletion and maintenance of said fund. Whenever said fund is sufficient to discharge the balance of principal and interest payable to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Union shall apply the same in payment [fol. 2446] thereof. Any interest allowed by Reconstruction Finance Corporation on account of the establishment of a deposit with it by Union out of payments mentioned in this paragraph shall belong solely to Union;

(d) Dividends or interest, at six per cent (6%) per annum in each case, on all outstanding preferred stock of Union now or hereafter outstanding, and/or on bonded or long-term indebtedness incurred by Union to redeem or in exchange for preferred stock under paragraph "20" below; provided, that, for the first five (5) years of the term hereof, the amount required of Operator shall not exceed the following maximum sums, respectively: $17,000, $50,000, $49,000, $49,000 and $44,000.

(e) Rent and any other sums payable under said City Lease;

(f) All insurance premiums on such insurance as Union in its uncontrolled discretion shall carry;

(g) All taxes of every kind and character and whether or not now known or hereafter imposed, including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, all general or special taxes on real or personal property, assessments, governmental charges, imposed against property, all kinds of privileges or license taxes or fees (whether for revenue or regulation), all earnings, receipts and income taxes, all surtaxes, all excess or undistributed profits taxes, and all other taxes measured by or on income or receipts, all stamp or excise taxes, and all sales and use taxes, all capital stock taxes, all capital taxes, and all franchise fees and taxes; also all interest and/or penalties on any [fol. 2447] thereof due to the nonpayment thereof, whether or not payment or the amount or validity thereof be contested;

(h) All sums necessary for the payment, redemption or retirement, as the case may be, of the outstanding cumulative preferred stock of Union or of the bonded or long-term indebtedness incurred by Union to redeem or in exchange for preferred stock under paragraph "20" below (which indebtedness may be made subject to payment, retirement or redemption in accordance with the following schedule) in the following indicated years of the term of this agreement, and in the amounts for each respective year, following:

1	$ none	9	$7,500.00	17	$ 5,500.00
2	1,000.00	10	7,500.00	18	5,000.00
3	2,000.00	11	7,000.00	19	69,000.00
4	1,500.00	12	7,500.00	20	74,000.00
5	6,500.00	13	6,500.00	21	80,000.00
6	8,000.00	14	6,000.00	22	86,000.00
7	8,000.00	15	6,000.00	23	91,000.00
8	8,000.00	16	5,500.00	24	98,000.00

(i) If during the first year of the term hereof, the gross income (and receipts) of Operator, after deducting operating expenses mentioned in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (g) of the hereinbelow definition of "net income", shall not be sufficient to permit payment in full of all expenses described in paragraphs (a) to (h), inclusive, in this definition of "fixed charges", the total payments required of Operator during said first year shall be reduced by the amount

said gross income, less said operating expenses, shall be less than the sum of all payments required, under said eight paragraphs in this definition of fixed charges; provided, that the total of such payments shall not be reduced below the total payable under said clauses [fol. 2448] (a), (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h); provided, further, that the amount of such deduction, if any, shall be made up during the second year of the term hereof in twelve equal monthly installments, irrespective of Operator's income during such second year.

All decisions of Union in connection with insurance premiums and taxes or in connection with the contesting thereof, regardless of the actual validity or the actual amount of the same, and any compromise thereof by Union, shall be binding upon Operator, but Union, if requested so to do by Operator, will have its tax adviser or will itself consult with Operator's tax adviser when making the annual estimate of its tax obligations and in paying or compromising any disputed or questionable tax items.

Net Income: The words "net income" of Operator as used herein shall mean the gross income and receipts of Operator from all sources whatsoever (exclusive only of loans and capital contributions) minus, to the extent such items would be allowed or allowable under the now existing United States Income Tax Laws and Regulations, the following:

(a) Salaries or wages payable for services actually rendered in or about the said premises or for the business conducted therein, excluding the salaries, wages or compensation of any person who is an officer of Operator;

(b) Salaries or compensation of the officers of Operator paid in good faith; provided that all salaries or compensation to be paid or to be payable to any stockholder, or spouse, parent or descendant of any stockholder, of Operator, shall be subject to the prior written approval of Union, and to the extent not so [fol. 2449] approved shall be excluded;

(c) Cost to Operator of maintenance, repair, reconstruction or replacement of the said premises or parts thereof, exclusive of any such costs for which insurance affords reimbursement and of any such costs arising out of the negligence of Operator or out of the breach of this agreement by Operator;

(d) Bad debts, interest on funds employed for any purpose of the business conducted in said premises, property taxes on property used in or for said business, license fees in connection with said business, capital stock taxes; sales and use taxes, bona fide contributions to established charitable organizations, and losses caused by fire, storm, casualty or theft, excluding losses due to the negligence of Operator or to any breach of this agreement by Operator;

(e) Actual fees and charges for attorneys, accountants, auditors and tax advisers, and similar professional or expert services, excluding fees for such services due to the negligence of Operator or to any breach of this agreement by Operator;

(f) Payments required of Operator under clauses "(2)", "(3)" and "(4)" in this paragraph "7";

(g) All actual costs of, or incidental to, actual operations on said premises, excluding any items excluded above in clauses "(a)" to "(f)" inclusive, and excluding depreciation and amortization of investments or costs, in any form.

Salary Limitation: So long as the indebtedness secured by said Mortgage to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is unpaid, Operator will not without the prior written consent of said Mortgagee pay any person compensation, [fol. 2450] as defined in Reconstruction Finance Corporation Form L-109 (c), as revised March 19, 1941, at a rate in excess of Three Thousand Six Hundred Dollars ($3,600) per annum, or pay or agree to pay or permit any company or firm controlled by Operator to pay or agree to pay to any employee or person any compensation deemed unreasonable by said Mortgagee. Operator will from time to time at the request of said Mortgagee furnish a schedule prepared in accordance with the instructions on said form herein mentioned showing all compensation then being paid to employees of Operator.

Fiscal Year: To facilitate accounting between Union and said Mortgagee and Operator, Operator agrees to establish for income tax purposes a fiscal year corresponding to the fiscal year of Union, which fiscal year now established by Union commences with July first and ends with June 30th of each calendar year. Should Union at any time deem it advisable to establish a fiscal year expiring on December 31st of each calendar year or expiring as of the last day of the calendar month as of which the term of this agreement shall expire, Union may do so, and in that event Operator will use its best efforts to obtain the consent of the tax authorities to the change of its own fiscal year to the same fiscal year as that of Union and upon obtaining such approval Operator will change its fiscal year to correspond with that established by Union; the rights herein conferred upon Union may be exercised from time to time. In the event of any change in such fiscal year, then all computations required by any provision of this agreement on account of accruing taxes, expenses and other obligations or payments then outstanding shall be computed pro rata upon the occasion of such change and in the last year of the term of this agreement, as the case may be.

[fol. 2451] 8. Use, Maintenance, and Condition of Premises

Operator, at its own cost and expense in each respect, will: maintain and keep said premises and every part thereof, both inside and out and all additions thereto, in good and thorough repair, working order and condition and free from waste or nuisance of any kind; operate the same in an efficient and first-class manner as a first-class public garage and parking station throughout the term of this agreement; neither vacate nor abandon said premises during the term hereof; make from time to time all repairs, renewals, replacements, improvements, betterments, and additions which may be needful or proper to preserve and maintain the said premises and every part thereof and the value and competitive efficiency thereof or which may be requested of Union under said Mortgage by said Mortgagee; neither commit nor suffer to be committed waste upon said premises; comply with and abide by all laws, ordinances and regulations now or hereafter in force, and all covenants, conditions and restrictions of any kind affecting the said premises or the maintenance, repair, renewal, replacement, alteration, improvement or use thereof; replace any and all parts of said premises which may be worn out, lost or destroyed; neither alter nor destroy nor remove any of the buildings, improvements or property subject hereto or permit the same to be altered, destroyed or removed; complete in good and workmanlike manner the construction, renovation or remodeling of any part of said premises that may be undertaken by it hereunder; pay when due all claims for labor performed and material furnished in or about said premises; adopt and put into effect any suggestions or requirements made by said Mortgagee in respect of the management of said premises and do any other act or acts, all in a timely and proper manner, which from the character or use of said [fol. 2452] premises may be reasonably necessary to protect and preserve the same; make no changes or alterations in or repairs of or to any of the structural portions of said premises, and make no additions in or to said premises, in either case without first having obtained the written consent of Union; if access to the roof of said premises through the surface of the park above said roof shall be desired, first notify Union of and obtain its written consent to the work to be done and restore the park surface to its previous condition in the event of removal of any part thereof for the purpose of effecting repairs; if any equipment, machinery or other property subject hereto shall become obsolete or worn out, replace the same with other property of the same or greater utility value and neither sell nor dispose of any such obsolete or worn out equipment, machinery or property without the prior written consent of Union; promptly upon acquiring any property which, if acquired by Union, would be subject to the lien of said Mortgage, notify said Mortgagee and Union of such acquisition and state the nature, cost, quantity and amount of such property so acquired, it being recognized that all such property shall forthwith become subject to the lien of said Mortgage and belong to Union. All replacements, renewals, improvements, additions and alterations of or to said premises or any part thereof, including all personal property (exclusive of property intended for sale or for servicing of automobiles) at any time installed therein for the conduct of said garage and parking sta tion, shall become at once a part of said premises and belong to Union. Union shall have no obligation in any of the foregoing respects. The obligations of Operator under this paragraph are subject to the provisions of paragraph 26 below.

9. Management

[fol. 2453] The management and personnel engaged in the operation of said premises and said garage business shall at all times be satisfactory to Union and to said Mortgagee, and if either Union or said Mortgagee shall notify Operator that such management or any of the personnel is or are not satisfactory to it, Operator will within thirty (30) days from the forwarding of such notice to Operator make changes so that such management and/or personnel shall be satisfactory to Union and to said Mortgagee.

10. Rates

The rate structure of Operator for parking charges until the end of the first twelve (12) full calendar months in which Operator shall have been in possession of said premises shall be as follows: For one hour, $0.25; for two hours, $0.35; for three hours, $0.45; for in excess of three hours and up to twelve hours, $0.50; for up to twelve hours, with the privilege of more than one entrance and one exit, $0.75; for in excess of twelve hours and up to twenty-four hours, $0.75; and for monthly contracts, including daily dusting service, $12.50. From time to time during the term hereof Operator may make special rate concessions to officers, merchants and business establishments, and for evenings, Sundays and holidays. After the end of said first twelve full calendar months and at the end of every twelve months thereafter such rate structure for parking charges shall be subject to revision by mutual consent of Operator and the Board of Directors of Union; provided, if they are unable to agree, that the rate shall be, within the limits requested by Operator and Union, such as may be approved by said Mortgagee, or, if said Mortgagee shall decline to act or if said Mortgage shall have been discharged, such as shall be determined by arbitration as next hereinafter provided; provided further, however, that in no event shall the rate structure for one hour, two hours, [fol. 2454] and three hours be less than $0.15, $0.25 and $0.35 respectively. Should arbitration be required under the foregoing sentence, then either party may by written notice delivered to the other specify an arbitrator to act on its behalf; all times herein mentioned shall be computed from the date of delivery of said first notice; within ten (10) days the other party shall designate its arbitrator by written notice delivered to the other; the two arbitrators shall promptly and in any event within a total of twenty (20) days (from delivery of said original notice) select a third arbitrator, and the three arbitrators so selected shall promptly, and in any event within a total of thirty-five (35) days (from delivery of said original notice), hear the parties and thereafter promptly and in any event within forty (40) days (from delivery of said original notice), determine such rates for the following year; the decision of any two of said arbitrators shall be final and be binding upon both Union and Operator. Each party shall bear its own expenses and the expenses of its arbitrator; the compensation of the third arbitrator and the expenses of the three arbitrators shall be borne by Union and Operator in equal shares.

11. Utilities

Operator will pay for all gas, electricity, water, steam and other utility services furnished to or used in connection with said premises and the operation thereof.

12. Indemnity

Operator accepts said premises in the condition which they shall be at the time of its entry therein and assumes all risks and hazards in connection therewith and the occupation and operation thereof, and waives any and all claims for compensation for, and agrees to indemnify and save harmless Union and its directors, officers, agents and employees from, claims and liability for injury to or death [fol. 2455] of any and all persons whomsoever, including the directors, officers, agents, employees, and contractors of Operator and any of the directors, officers, agents and employees of such contractors, and loss or damage to or loss of use of property whatsoever, including that of Operator or of the directors, officers, agents, employees or contractors of Operator or of the directors, officers, agents or employees of such contractors, by reason of any defect, deficiency or impairment of said premises now existing or hereafter to arise or by reason of any work heretofore or hereafter done on, in or about said premises by Union. Operator will indemnify and save harmless Union, its directors, officers, agents and employees, and the City and County of San Francisco and the Board of Park Commissioners thereof and their respective officers, agents and employees, from and against any and all claims, liabilities, losses and expenses arising or claimed to arise from injury to or death of persons whomsoever, or loss of or damage to or loss of use of property whatsoever, in either case occasioned or claimed to have been occasioned in whole or in part by the acts or omissions of Operator or its agents, employees or contractors or resulting from or occasioned or claimed to have resulted from or been occasioned by the lack of maintenance or repair of said premises or improvements or the occupation or operation of the said premises by Operator, or the failure of Operator to eliminate dangerous conditions known to or discovered by Operator, and in each case, irrespective of negligence; and Operator shall reimburse Union for the cost of such public liability and property damage insurance as Union shall elect to carry, including insurance inuring to the benefit of all parties mentioned in this paragraph, and in such reasonable amounts as may be determined by Union [fol. 2456] or by said Board of Park Commissioners in directions to Union under said City Lease. Operator hereby expressly releases and discharges Union and its directors, officers, agents and employees from any and all damages, claims, actions and causes of action arising from any of the causes aforesaid.

13. Judgments and Awards

Operator disclaims any interest in and releases to Union all judgments, decrees and awards for injury or damage to, or for the condemnation of, the said premises or any part thereof.

14. Insurance and Proceeds

Operator will not do or permit to be done in or about said premises or with respect to its business conducted therein any act or thing that would prevent Union from obtaining or maintaining, and will do in such respects any and all things necessary to enable Union to obtain and maintain, insurance against such risks to any and all of said premises and the business conducted therein, and in such companies and in such amounts as shall be satisfactory to or required by said Mortgagee, the policies for which shall in form be satisfactory to said Mortgagee, or such reasonable and customary insurance, including fire, explosion, earthquake and public liability insurance, as Union may at any time desire to carry. Except for using the premises for the purposes agreed above and in conformity with the foregoing sentence, Operator will not make or permit any use of said premises, nor do or omit to do any act or thing in or about said premises, which would increase the then existing rate or rates of insurance upon said premises or cause the cancellation, forfeiture or suspension of any such insurance policy as aforesaid or the coverage afforded thereby. Operator will bear all costs and expenses of complying with the provisions of this paragraph and of complying with any and all requirements pertaining to [fol. 2457] said premises or its business conducted therein of any insurance organization or company necessary for the maintenance of such insurance as aforesaid. Operator disclaims any interest in and releases to Union any and all such insurance and the proceeds thereof, save only such as may be specifically carried and be specifically payable to indemnify Operator against loss to itself. In the event of loss or damage to any premises or property in the possession or custody of Operator and which is covered by insurance, Operator will immediately give notice by mail to said Mortgagee of such loss or damage and also will promptly notify Union of such loss or damage. The obligations of Operator under this paragraph for compliance with the terms of any insurance policy shall be conditional upon Operator having been notified from time to time of the existence of such policy and the terms thereof. If, in making any payment to Union, Operator shall have included an amount based upon an insurance premium, Operator disclaims and releases to Union any interest in any unearned premium which may be payable upon the cancellation of any such policy.

If requested by Operator so to do and if the same can be done without prejudice or expense to Union, Union will include Operator and its officers and employees as insured in any policies of insurance maintained by Union; provided that Operator shall pay Union the amount of all premiums or increase in premiums occasioned thereby; provided further, that Union shall have no such obligation unless provisions, wholly satisfactory to Union, may and shall be attached to or included in the policy to the effect that such insurance shall not be prejudiced and shall extend in favor of all other insured named therein notwithstanding that [fol. 2458] the same may be avoided, suspended, cancelled or rendered inoperative as to Operator on account of the, or any of the, representations, warranties, acts, omissions or neglect of Operator or its directors, officers, employees, agents or contractors.

15. Adverse Claims and Liens

Operator will not at any time create, or suffer to be created, any debt, lien or charge which will or might be prior to the lien of said Mortgage and will not do in, upon or about said premises, or any part thereof, anything that might in anywise weaken, diminish or impair the value of said Mortgage or the lien thereof. Operator will at all times keep the said premises, including its interest therein, free and clear of any and all mechanic's, attachment and execution liens, and free and clear of any assignment or transfer in the nature of a lien or mortgage or like hypothecation. Operator will promptly pay or settle or cause to be removed all claims against any of the said premises which affect, or which might affect, the rights of said Mortgagee or of Union; will appear in and defend any action or proceeding purporting to affect said Mortgage or the interest of Union or the interest, rights or powers of said Mortgagee or of Union, and will pay all costs and expenses, including costs of evidence of title and attorneys fees in a reasonable sum, in any such action or proceeding in which said Mortgagee or Union may appear. Either said Mortgagee or Union, or both, may appear in and defend any action or proceeding purporting to affect the security of said Mortgage or the interest of Union or the rights or powers of said Mortgagee or of Union and either may pay, purchase, contest or compromise any encumbrance, charge or lien suffered or created by Operator which in the judgment of said Mortgagee or of Union appears to be prior or [fol. 2459] superior to said Mortgage or to the interests of Union; and in exercising any such powers, either may pay all necessary expenses and employ counsel and pay his reasonable fees; and Operator will reimburse said Mortgagee direct, or Union, as the case may be, for any and all sums expended by said Mortgagee or by Union in connection with any of the foregoing matters, with interest at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum. Union may enter said premises at any and all times and post and maintain therein notices of non-responsibility and all other appropriate notices, and Operator will use its best efforts to preserve and keep posted all such notices.

16. Taxes

Operator will pay promptly before the maturity thereof any and all taxes which shall or might be a lien upon the interest of Operator in said premises or upon any property belonging to Operator and used in said premises.

In respect of any and all taxes (general or special), assessments or governmental charges imposed upon said premises (all of which are included within the word "taxes" as used in this agreement) which shall be payable by Operator to Union or which shall be included in the computation of payments to be made by Operator to Union, the amount of any payment which may be required of Union by said Mortgagee, in its sole discretion, on account thereof, shall be binding upon the parties hereto and said Mortgagee or Union, or both, shall have uncontrolled discretion during the term hereof in paying taxes regardless of any alleged or possible invalidity or defect therein or the obligation or lien therefor, and neither said Mortgagee nor Union shall be deemed to assume any liability or responsibility for the validity of any tax levied or for the accuracy of any tax bill, and Operator waives any right to object to any such [fol. 2460] payment on account of any invalidity or defect in the levy or assessment of any of such taxes, and agrees that a receipt by the proper officer shall be conclusive evidence both as to the amount of and validity of such payments.

17. Access

Said Mortgagee, or its officers, agents and employees, and Union, or its officers, agents and employees and contractors, shall at all times be entitled to access to any and all parts of said premises for the purpose of exercising any right reserved to Mortgagee in said Mortgage, or in respect of Union, for the purpose of determining Operator's compliance with the terms, conditions and covenants of this agreement, or for exercising any right reserved in this agreement or for doing any act or thing in or about the premises which to Union may appear to be necessary for the maintenance, care or repair thereof.

18. Information and Reports

Operator will at all reasonable times furnish to said Mortgagee direct, or to Union, any and all information which said Mortgagee or Union may request concerning performance or compliance by Operator of or with the covenants of said City Lease or of said Mortgage, and Operator will permit said Mortgagee or Union, or both, at all reasonable times, to make investigations or examinations concerning such performance or compliance. Operator will make and render to Union or to said Mortgagee direct such financial, operating and other reports and at such times, from time to time, and in such manner and detail as shall be required by Union or by said Mortgagee as will enable Union to make and render such financial, operating and other reports and at such times, from time to time, and in such manner and detail, as shall be required of Union by said Mortgagee.

19. Books and Records

Operator will at all times keep and maintain books, records and accounts in a manner satisfactory to Union and [fol. 2461] adequate fully and accurately to reflect and determine any and all matters pertaining to any and all of its obligations hereunder. Operator will permit Union, or persons designated by it, at any and all times during business hours to audit, inspect, examine and copy any and all of said books, records and accounts. Operator will allow said Mortgagee to inspect at any time all records pertaining to the said premises. Operator will furnish promptly and fully at any time upon written request and in such form as said Mortgagee or Union may require certified audits of its books of account with respect to said premises and any and all additional information concerning said premises and its business, past operations and prospects. Union will at all times keep and maintain books, records and accounts that will adequately, fully and accurately reflect and determine any and all matters pertaining to any and all of Union's obligations hereunder, and will permit Operator or persons designated by it at any and all times during business hours to audit, inspect, examine and copy any and all of said books, records and accounts.

20. Refunding of Stock

If it shall appear to Operator to be desirable or economical for Union to replace any outstanding six per cent (6%) cumulative preferred stock with a secured or unsecured bonded or long-term indebtedness in an amount equal or substantially equal to the par value of such stock and bearing interest at six per cent (6%) per annum, payable semi-annually, and if Operator shall give Union assurances satisfactory to Union for the repayment of all costs and expenses to be incurred by Union in so doing; Union will use its best efforts to obtain the consent of said Mortgagee and of its stockholders to the redemption of such stock and the incurring of such indebtedness, but it is [fol. 2462] recognized that this agreement is being made without formal assent to such action by the stockholders of Union and that any such redemption of stock and all matters incidental thereto shall be subject to the prior vote and approval of said stockholders, and to the consent and approval of all governmental authorities having jurisdiction in the premises. If such stock be redeemed Union may in its discretion issue a new preferred stock having like voting rights and having such par and nominal value as Union may deem necessary or advisable, or may create a voting trust with respect to all or part of its stock, containing such voting rights and subject to such rights and privileges as may appear to Union to be advisable. Union shall not be obligated to redeem or retire such outstanding preferred stock if it shall appear to Union in its sole discretion that an undue amount of cash may be required to pay the holders of such stock, if any, as may decline to accept such indebtedness in exchange for their stock, unless operator shall advance to Union the necessary funds and accept bonds or debentures to evidence the obligation of Union in satisfaction of said advance. Should Operator request the redemption of said stock, Operator will promptly pay or reimburse Union for all costs and expenses incurred or paid by Union in such respects, whether or not the operation be completed. Nothing in this paragraph or elsewhere in this agreement shall preclude Union from voluntarily redeeming or retiring all or part of its outstanding preferred stock and/or from substituting therefor any secured or unsecured bonded or long-term indebtedness in an amount not greater than the amount of the stock so redeemed or retired. If any now outstanding preferred stock of Union be redeemed or retired in accordance with any of the provisions of this paragraph, all references in other [fol. 2463] portions of this agreement to dividends upon preferred stock and to payments for redemption of such preferred stock shall apply in lieu thereof to the bonded or long-term indebtedness, and interest at six per cent (6%) per annum, payable semiannually thereon, incurred to enable the redemption of such stock.

21. Operator's Stockholders

Operator warrants that at least fifty-one per cent of each class of its stock is, and will continue to be, owned by Andrew Pansini. In the event said warranty be unfounded, or in the event said Andrew Pansini shall cease to own such amount of any class of said stock, Union may at its option terminate and cancel the rights of Operator hereunder; provided, that no such right of termination or cancellation shall arise on account of the transfer of any such stock upon the death of Andrew Pansini.

22. Leases and Assignments

Operator will not underlet the whole or any part of said premises or any interest therein or transfer or assign this agreement or any rights of Operator hereunder, or encumber or mortgage its interest in said premises. Any attempted sublease, transfer, assignment, mortgage or encumbrance shall be null and void, at the option of Union.

This agreement shall not, nor shall any right or interest hereunder, be subject to transfer by operation of law or otherwise. If Operator shall file or be adjudicated subject to proceedings in bankruptcy, receivership, for the relief of debtors, or for an arrangement, the same shall constitute a breach of this agreement, all rights under this agreement shall, and this agreement shall, forthwith cease and terminate, without, however, releasing Operator from accrued obligations, prior defaults or damages for such breach. [fol. 2464] If Operator shall fail in business or make a general assignment for the benefit of creditors then all rights under this agreement, and this agreement, shall at the option of Union cease and terminate.

23. Signs and Entrances.

Operator will not place or maintain any signs in the entrance to or on the exterior of said premises or in the park over said premises without the approval of the Board of Directors of Union and will at all times comply with all requests of said Board in respect of the maintenance of such signs. The manner of ingress and egress to and from said premises and adjoining public streets and sidewalks shall, unless otherwise provided by law, ordinance or lawful governmental regulations, be subject to the approval of the Board of Directors of Union and Operator will from time to time change the same to eliminate any conditions of which said Board shall not approve.

24. Surrendering Possession

Upon the termination of this agreement and the rights of Operator thereunder for any reason, either before or after the normal expiration of the term thereof, Operator will surrender possession of the premises to union and leave the same in clean and good condition and repair and remove therefrom all rubbish and any of its own personal property that it is not precluded hereunder from removing. If Operator shall not remove any of such personal property, Union may remove and store the same at the cost and expense of Operator and may forthwith or at any time thereafter sell all or any part of such property, at public or private sale, and without any prior demand upon or notice to Operator, reimburse itself for any sums due it from Operator, and remit any excess proceeds, after deducting the costs and expenses of sale, to Operator.

25. Performance by Union

[fol. 2465] Should Operator fail to do any act required of it hereunder or required of it in respect of said Mortgage or in respect of said City Lease then Union, without notice to or demand upon Operator and without releasing Operator from any obligation hereunder, may make or do the same in such manner and to such extent as Union may deem necessary to protect its interest, Union being authorized to enter upon said property for such purposes; and in exercising any such powers Union may pay all necessary expenses, employ counsel, and pay his reasonable fees. Any and all sums expended by Union in connection with the exercise of any such power shall be repaid by Operator to Union immediately, with interest at the rate of seven per cent (7%) per annum. Said Mortgagee may exercise similar rights in respect of said Mortgage to the extent and in the manner provided therein.

Neither Union nor said Mortgagee shall be obligated to act in any such respect nor be liable or accountable to Operator for anything done or not done if it shall so act or while so acting.

26. Damage and Casualties

Union shall not be obligated or responsible in any respect for the repair or maintenance of said premises or any part thereof, but shall have the right and option to repair or maintain said premises in the event Operator shall default in its obligations hereunder in such respects. Further, Union shall not be obligated to repair or reconstruct the said premises if the same be wholly or partially destroyed or damaged from any cause or casualty whatsoever, but shall have the right and option to repair, reconstruct or replace said premises in the event the same be wholly or partially destroyed or damaged from any such cause or casualty. If any substantial part of said premises be destroyed or damaged by fire, earthquake, explosion, war, invasion or [fol. 2466] act of God, or other unavoidable and unusual event or casualty not within the control of Operator, and if such destruction or damage shall not have been caused by the negligence of Operator or by any breach of its obligations hereunder, Operator shall have no obligation under paragraph 8 above to reconstruct or replace the said premises or such part thereof so damaged or destroyed. If any damage to or destruction of said premises shall occur in respect of which Operator has no obligation in view of the foregoing sentence, and shall result in Operator being unable to occupy a material part of the premises, then there shall be rebated to Operator a proportionate part of the payments required of Operator hereunder corresponding to the number of days during which such condition shall exist and to the extent such condition shall interfere with the production of revenue in and about said premises. In the event Union shall not elect to repair, reconstruct or replace the premises after a material part thereof may be so damaged or destroyed, this agreement and the term hereby created may be terminated by Union and, if Operator is unable to conduct its business in said premises substantially as before and said damage or destruction is of a kind which Operator is not obligated to repair or replace (as provided above in this paragraph), the same may be terminated by Operator. If the premises be entirely destroyed, this agreement and the term hereby created shall cease and terminate.

If any of the structural portions of the premises shall be damaged or destroyed from any causes not within the control of Operator and not occasioned by or contributed to by the negligence of Operator or any breach of its obligations hereunder, and if Union shall have available or un- [fol. 2467] expended any moneys paid to it by Operator pursuant to the provisions of clause (5) of Paragraph 7, "Payments" above, and if Union in its sole discretion sees fit so to do, Union will apply said moneys to repair such damage or destruction; provided that Union shall be the sole judge in its uncontrolled discretion of the availability of such money for such purposes and of the advisability of repairing such damage or destruction, and shall not be precluded from disbursing or expending said moneys for any purpose.

27. Holding Over

Any holding over after the term hereof, with the consent of Union, shall be for periods not in excess of one month each and payment therefor shall be at the rate per month of one-twelfth (1/12) of the payment required of Operator for the last prior year, plus fifty per cent (50%) thereof and otherwise shall be on the terms and conditions in this agreement specified.

28. Operator's Status

Nothing in this agreement shall give Union any power or right of direction or control over the operations of Operator or its officers, agents or employees, and Operator shall be an independent contractor, free from any such powers or rights.

29. Right of Re-Entry

Should Operator default in making any payment required hereunder for three (3) days after written notice to pay the same is received or posted in said premises, or should Operator default or continue in default in respect of any term, covenant or condition hereof for more than ten (10) days after written notice is received thereof, Union, in addition to such other rights or remedies as it may have shall have the immediate right of re-entry and may remove all persons and property from said premises subject to the right of storage or sale as aforesaid; provided, however, that if any default is not in payment of money [fol. 2468] and cannot be remedied within ten (10) days, such right of re-entry and all rights of forfeiture, termination of suit, if Operator shall have commenced the elimination of such default within said period of ten (10) days, shall be postponed so long as Operator shall be continuously proceeding in good faith to eliminate the same.

30. Termination and Reletting

Should Union elect to re-enter as hereinabove provided, or retake possession pursuant to legal proceedings or pursuant to any notice provided by law, or should Operator vacate, abandon or surrender the premises, or should Operator default under any provision hereof, Union may either terminate this agreement and the term thereby created and recover from Operator all damages which may be incurred by reason of the breach of this agreement by Operator, including the recovery of possession, or may, from time to time, without terminating this agreement or the term hereby created, let the premises for all or part of the remaining term, from time to time, to a tenant of tenants satisfactory to Union and at any rental that may be obtained, with reasonable diligence, with the right to make alterations, additions and repairs of or to said premises; and, should any such rental actually received be less than the payments required of Operator hereunder, Operator shall pay such deficiency, together with the costs and expenses incurred in said letting and in the administration of said premises and such letting and such deficiency shall be paid monthly and such costs and expenses shall be paid as incurred. No re-entry or taking of possession shall be construed as an election by Union to terminate this agreement or the term hereby created unless a written notice to such effect be given Operator, or unless such termination be decreed by a court of competent [fol. 2469] jurisdiction. Notwithstanding Union may repossess or re-let said premises without such termination, Union may at any time thereafter elect to terminate this agreement and the term thereby created for any previous breach.

31. Remedies Cumulative

All rights, options, privileges and remedies conferred in this agreement or by law upon Union shall be cumulative and the exercise of any one or more thereof shall not preclude the exercise of any other or others. The specification herein of the rights, options, privileges and remedies of Union and of the rights, options and privileges of said Mortgagee shall not be deemed to be exclusive of but shall be in addition and supplemental to all rights, options, privileges and remedies conferred by law upon Union or by law or said Mortgage upon said Mortgagee, except, in respect of Union, as those conferred upon Union by law may be specifically modified by some provision of this agreement.

32. Waivers

The waiver by Union of any breach hereof shall not operate as a waiver of any subsequent breach of the same or any other term, condition, covenant or provision hereof in the absence of a written agreement to such effect. No lapse of time or delay by Union shall be deemed a waiver of any breach of any term, condition, covenant or provision hereof. No waiver shall ever occur unless the same be in writing.

33. Covenants are Conditions

Each and all of the terms, covenants and provisions of this agreement on the part of Operator to be performed shall also constitute conditions upon the continued enjoyment of the rights herein conferred on Operator upon the breach of which this agreement and the term hereby created may be terminated.

[fol. 2470] 34. Counsel Fees

Should suit be brought at any time for an unlawful detainer of said premises or for the recovery of any payments due from Operator or to enforce or because of the breach of any term, condition, covenant or provision of this agreement, or in the event Union shall deem it necessary to retain legal services though suit shall not be brought, Operator shall pay to Union, if Operator be in default hereunder, a reasonable sum for the fees of its attorneys.

35. Notices

Any notice which Union may be required or may desire to give to Operator shall be in writing and may be delivered to any adult person apparently in charge of said premises or if there be no such person there, may be left in a conspicuous place at said premises or be actually delivered to the President or Secretary of Operator or be mailed, postage prepaid, registered mail, return receipt requested, to Andrew Pansini [redacted] California, or to such other person and at such other address as Operator may hereafter designate in any notice given to Union as next provided. Any notice which Operator may be required or may desire to give to Union shall be in writing and may be delivered to any adult person apparently in charge of the principal office of Union in the City and County of San Francisco, California, or be actually delivered to the President or Secretary of Union or be mailed, postage prepaid, registered mail, return receipt requested, addressed to Union at 114 Sansome Street, San Francisco, or to such person and at such other address as Union may hereafter designate in any notice given as above provided.

36. Time

Time is of the essence of this agreement.

[fol. 2471] 37. Successors and Assigns

All rights, privileges and remedies conferred by this agreement upon Union shall inure to, and this agreement shall be binding upon, its successors and assigns. All of the terms, conditions, covenants and provisions hereof shall be binding upon the successors, lessees and assigns of Operator, but this provision shall not be deemed to be a consent

1. lessor, hereby leases to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, Lessee, for the term commencing on the day of , 19 , and ending on the day of , 19 , the following described premises in the City of , County of , State of :

2. Lessee agrees to pay Lessor rental for the use and occupancy of the leased premises as follows:

provided, however, that no rentals shall be due and payable hereunder until the date on which the leased premises are delivered to Lessee free and clear of all improvements except such as may be covered by this lease or belong to Lessee. Lessee shall have the right to set off against the rental payable hereunder any rentals owing Lessee by Lessor under the terms of any other agreement in effect between Lessee and Lessor.

[fol. 2478] 3. Lessee shall have the right during its occupancy of the leased premises to use such premises for any lawful purposes whatsoever, including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the use of such premises for service station purposes. Lessee shall further have the right during its occupancy to rearrange or remodel any improvements, trade or other fixtures, structures, buildings, or equipment on said leased premises; to construct and maintain on the leased premises such buildings structures, improvements or equipment as Lessee may desire, and to remove the same or any part thereof at will; and to cut curbs, construct roadways and use sidewalks for vehicles to pass to and from the leased premises. Upon the expiration of this lease, or any extension or renewal thereof, Lessee agrees to replace all curbs and sidewalks cut or removed by Lessee during Lessee's occupancy of the premises. If it is or becomes unlawful to conduct any particular operation or to to any letting or assignment by Operator of this agreement or any rights thereunder.

38. Union has at the request of Operator granted Operator the right to incorporate under the name "Union Square Garage, Inc." Operator will upon the termination of this agreement on the expiration of the term thereof or at any earlier time it may terminate as elsewhere herein provided, change its name and discontinue the use in said name of the words "Union Square." Operator will not use the name or words "Union Square" in any of its business or operations aside from the business conducted upon said premises subject hereto, either during or after the term of this agreement.

In witness whereof, the parties have executed these presents by their officers thereunto duly authorized the day and year first above written.

erect or maintain any particular structure or equipment on the leased premises, or if any part of the leased premises or the approaches thereto are condemned or changed by public authority, or if any highway or street change is made diverting or re-routing traffic away from the leased premises, so that in any such case enumerated above it becomes impossible or impracticable in Lessee's opinion to use the leased premises for any purpose for which such premises are being used at the time such use is declared unlawful or such condemnation or change is effected, then Lessee shall have the right to terminate this lease by giving Lessor ten (10) days' notice in writing of such termination. If, as a result of causes other than those hereinabove set out, such as earthquake, fire, flood, strikes, riots, insurrection, or other similar or different causes beyond the control of Lessee, the leased premises shall become unusable from a practical standpoint, for service station purposes for a period of thirty (30) consecutive days or longer, then Lessee may, effective on the day of the happening of any such event, suspend all rental payments hereunder until the leased premises are again so usable.

4. Lessee shall have the right at any time during Lessee's occupancy of the leased premises, or within a reasonable time thereafter, to remove any and all buildings, improvements, fixtures and equipment, placed by it, or by its predecessor in interest, in, under, or upon the leased premises, or acquired by Lessee whether before or during the term hereof, but Lessee shall not be obliged to do so.

5. Lessee shall pay all taxes levied or assessed during the term of this lease on any facilities located on the leased premises while such facilities are owned by Lessee. All other ~~real or personal~~ property taxes or assessments, including all street improvements or other special taxes or assessments, shall be paid by Lessor.

6. Lessee, while in possession, shall have the prior right, to be exercised by it or by its nominee, to buy the whole or any part of the leased premises or any larger parcel of which the leased premises are a part. If Lessor receives from a third party an acceptable bona fide offer to buy such property, Lessor shall forthwith give Lessee written notice thereof together with a copy of such offer. Lessee or its nominee shall have sixty (60) days from the receipt of such

San Francisco, California
February 8, 1946

2297 SOA

LEASE SITE AND LESSOR BUILT STATION
MAKE LOAN $7,000 BERNICE DUFFIN
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH

MR. E. J. McCLANAHAN:
Building

It is recommended that Company loan Mrs. Bernice Duffin (a widow) $7,000 to assist her in the cost of constructing a service station located on property which she owns free and clear on 11th East and 9th South Streets, Salt Lake City, Utah. Company's loan will be secured by first mortgage and promissory note with 100% being returned at no interest in 120 equal montly payments. Lessor will invest $5,000 in building this station in addition to the $7,000 she will borrow from Company.

Company will make an investment of $3,516 in the furnishing and installation of miscellaneous salvable operating equipment on which no return will be secured. Company will secure a ten year lease with a five year option and sublease back on an offset basis.

The proposed transaction exceeds Dealer Sales authority, inasmuch as the loan is over $2,500, it is to be repaid over 120 months rather than a sixty month period.

Estimated Normal Sales: 10,500 gallons per month

Loan: $7,000

Repayment: 100% at no interest in 120 equal monthly payments.
Security: First mortgage and promissory note
Appraisals:
Keith L. Knight, Salt Lake City, Utah $7,000
H. A. Havercamp, Salt Lake City, Utah 6,150

The above appraisals cover only the vacant property. With the proposed investment exclusive of the miscellaneous operating agreement which Company will furnish, the appraised value will be increased $12,000.

Proposed Ground Rental: $100.00 per month.

Proposed Lease Commitment: 30 days. If this cancellation privilege exercised, Company to give bill of sale to lessor on the equipment it is to install.

Maximum Assured Tenure: 180 months

Return from Dealer: $58.33 per month repayment of loan principal plus $100.00 per month over sublease.

11981

notice and offer to buy such property at the terms of such offer relating to such property, or at such lesser terms as Lessor and Lessee or its nominee may agree upon. If Lessee or its nominee fails to exercise this option and Lessor sells such property to a third person, such sale shall be made subject to the terms and provisions of this lease including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the provisions of this paragraph. Lessee agrees to notify Lessor in writing of any nominee designated for the purpose of this paragraph, and warrants that such nominee will be financially responsible; Lessor agrees to recognize and accept any such designation of nominee for the purpose of this paragraph.

7. If Lessee shall hold over after the expiration of the term of this lease, or any extension thereof, such tenancy shall be from month to month only and upon all the terms, covenants, and conditions hereof.

8. Every provision hereof imposing an obligation on Lessor is a material inducement and consideration for the execution of this Lease by Lessee, and any breach, violation, or failure with respect thereto by Lessor shall entitle Lessee to terminate this lease forthwith by giving Lessor written notice of such termination, and no waiver by Lessee of any such breach, violation, or failure, shall waive any continuing, subsequent, or other breach, violation, or failure.

9. If any tax or charge is hereafter imposed upon Lessee, pursuant to any so-called Chain Store Tax Law hereinafter enacted by any governmental authority, for or on account of the operation of its service station on the leased premises, Lessee may terminate this lease at any time on ninety (90) days' notice to Lessor served after the enactment of such law.

10. Lessee shall have the right to terminate this lease at any time during the term hereof, or any extension thereof, by giving Lessor thirty (30) days' written notice of Lessee's intention so to do.

[fol. 2479] 11. Lessee may extend this lease for a further period of years by giving Lessor notice in writing of its intention so to do at any time prior to the expiration of the term hereof.

Economics:

Rental	$100.00
Depreciation	23.44
Amortization on loan	58.33
Total	$181.77

Return from Dealer:

Loan principal payment	$ 58.33
Offset ground rental	$100.00
Total	$158.33

Deficit	$ 23.44
Deficit per Gal.	.223¢

Endorsements: Mr. H. E. Hartline has endorsed the loan proposal.

Map: Vicinity map and photographs attached. Photographs show the existing Allen Oil Company service station on this property. However, these facilities have been removed by lessor from whom the Allen Oil Company leased.

Remarks: The deficit in securing this account is small in relation to the gallonage which will be secured. We recommend the acceptance of this proposal.

Lease

1.

Lessor, hereby leases to STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, Lessee, for the term commencing on the day of , 19 , and ending on the day of , 19 , the following described premises in the City of , County of , State of :

together with all improvements and fixtures located thereon.

2. Lessee agrees to pay Lessor rental for the use and occupancy of the leased premises as follows:

provided, however, that no rentals shall be due and payable hereunder until the date on which possession of the leased premises has been delivered to Lessee. Lessee shall have the right to set off against rental payable hereunder any rentals owing Lessee by Lessor under the terms of any agreement in effect between Lessee and Lessor.

[fol. 2482] 3. Should any of the improvements, fixtures or equipment referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, become obsolete or unfit for the purposes intended, Lessee shall have the right to return any such improvements, fixtures, or equipment to Lessor at and to replace the same with such improvements, fixtures or equipment as Lessee may deem necessary; title, however, to such new improvements, fixtures or equipment to remain in Lessee.

4. Lessor agrees during the term of this lease or any extension thereof to maintain in good condition and repair all service station equipment, facilities, yards, driveways, and other improvements installed or made by Lessor on the leased premises.

5. Lessor agrees to insure the leased premises and all property placed thereon by Lessor against loss by fire. In the event said premises or property are destroyed wholly or in part by any cause during the term hereof, then Lessor shall forthwith re-enter said premises and shall with diligence repair the destroyed portion or portions of said premises or property. If, however, the premises or the destroyed portion thereof becomes untenantable in the opinion of Lessee, then the rent shall cease until such time as they are again, in the opinion of Lessee, tenantable. Should Lessor neglect forthwith to restore said premises to the same condition as they were prior to their destruction, Lessee shall, at Lessee's option:

(a) Repair said premises, deducting the cost thereof from rents accruing, with reasonable interest allowance for monies advanced, or

(b) Terminate this lease.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, Lessor shall not be obligated to restore or repair any improvements, fixtures or equipment placed on the leased premises by Lessee.

6. Lessee shall have the right at any time during Lessee's occupancy of the leased premises, or within a reasonable time thereafter, to remove any and all buildings, improvements, fixtures and equipment placed by Lessee or by Lessee's predecessor in interest, in, under or upon the leased premises or acquired by Lessee whether before or during the term hereof, but Lessee shall not be obliged to do so.

7. Lessee shall pay all taxes levied or assessed during the term of this lease on any facilities located on the leased premises while such facilities are owned by Lessee. All other real or personal property taxes or assessments, including all street improvements or other special taxes or assessments, shall be paid by Lessor.

8. Lessee shall have the right during its occupancy of the leased premises to use such premises for any lawful purposes whatsoever, including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the use of such premises for service station purposes. Lessee shall further have the right during its occupancy, to rearrange or remodel any improvements, trade or other fixtures, structures, buildings, or equipment on said leased premises; to construct and maintain on the leased premises such buildings, structures, improvements or equipment as Lessee may desire, and to remove the same or any part thereof at will; and to cut curbs, construct roadways and use sidewalks for vehicles to pass to and from the leased premises. Upon the expiration of this lease, or any extension or renewal thereof, Lessee agrees to replace all curbs and sidewalks cut or removed by Lessee during Lessee's occupancy of the premises. If it is or becomes unlawful to conduct any particular operation or to erect or maintain any particular structure or equipment on the leased premises, or if any part of the leased premises or the approaches thereto are condemned or changed by public authority, or if any highway or street change is made diverting or re-routing traffic away from the leased premises, so that in any such case enumerated above it becomes impossible or impracticable in Lessee's opinion to use the leased premises for any purpose for which such premises are being used at the time such use is declared unlawful or such condemnation or change is effected, then Lessee shall have the right to terminate this lease by giving Lessor ten (10) days notice in writing of such termination.

9. Every provision hereof imposing an obligation on Lessor is a material inducement and consideration for the execution of this lease by Lessee, and any breach, violation, or failure with respect thereto by Lessor shall entitle Lessee to terminate this lease forthwith by giving Iessor written notice of such termination, and no waiver by Lessee of any such breach, violation, or failure, shall waive any continuing subsequent or other breach, violation, or failure.

10. If any tax or charge is hereafter imposed upon Lessee pursuant to any so-called Chain Store Tax Law hereinafter enacted by any governmental authority, for or on account of the operation of Lessee's service station on the leased premises, Lessee may terminate this lease at any time on ninety (90) days' notice to Lessor served after the enactment of such law.

11. If Lessee shall hold over after the expiration of the term of this lease, or any extension thereof, such tenancy shall be from month to month only and upon all the terms, covenants, and conditions hereof.

[fol. 2483] 12. Lessee may extend this lease for a further period of ..... years by giving Lessor notice in writing of Lessee's intention so to do at any time prior to the expiration of the term hereof, and upon the giving of such notice this lease shall be extended as above provided.

13. Lessee may terminate this lease at any time during the term hereof, or any extension thereof, by giving Lessor thirty (30) days' prior written notice of intention so to do.

14. Lessee, while in possession, shall have the prior right, to be exercised by it or by its nominee, to buy the whole or any part of the leased premises or any larger parcel of which the leased premises are a part. If Lessor receives from a third party an acceptable bona fide offer to buy such property, Lessor shall forthwith give Lessee written notice thereof together with a copy of such offer. Lessee or its nominee shall have thirty (30) days from the receipt of such notice and offer to buy such property at the terms of such offer relating to such property, or at such lesser terms as Lessor and Lessee or its nominee may agree upon. If Lessee or its nominee fails to exercise this option and Lessor sells such property to a third person, such sale shall be made subject to the terms and provisions of this lease including, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the provisions of this paragraph. Lessee agrees to notify Lessor in writing of any nominee designated for the purpose of this paragraph, and warrants that such nominee will be financially responsible; Lessor agrees to recognize and accept any such designation of nominee for the purpose of this paragraph.

15. All rentals payable hereunder shall be paid to

1. Lessor does hereby lease unto Lessee and Lessee does hereby hire from Lessor, all that certain real property situate in the City of , County of , State of , described as follows:

together with all buildings, improvements and equipment listed in attached Inventory (Form 4280 and Form 4281), hereinafter referred to as "premises."

2. The term of this Lease shall be for a period of one year commencing on the day of ; 19 ; and from year to year thereafter, subject to termination at the end of the first or any subsequent year by either party upon thirty days' written notice to the other; subject, however, to the right reserved by Lessor to terminate this Lease at any time upon thirty days' written notice to Lessee. In the event of Lessor's interest in said premises is held under a lease, then this Lease is made subject to all the terms, covenants and conditions thereof and shall terminate upon the termination of such lease.

3. As rental for the demised property herein, Lessee shall pay Lessor a sum equal to (¢) cents for each gallon of gasoline delivered to the leased premises. Said rental shall be due and payable on or before the 10th day of each calendar month, based on the gallonage delivered during the preceding calendar month, or, at Lessor's option, at time of delivery.

4. Lessee shall:

(a) pay the rent as aforesaid; accept said premises in their present condition, which is known to Lessee, and occupy and use the same solely as a gasoline service station and for the sale of such commodities and accessories as are usually sold at such stations; not assign this Lease or any interest hereunder nor sublet or vacate said premises nor cease to operate the same for the purpose for which they are leased hereunder; not make any additions or alterations to the improvements, nor remove any equipment, without Lessor's written consent, hereby waiving any right granted by law to make any repairs at Lessor's expense; permit Lessor to enter and inspect said premises at any time; and at any termination of this Lease surrender said premises to Lessor in good condition and repair with any additions and replacements;

(b) indemnify and save Lessor harmless from any and all liability, cost and expense on account of personal injury or fatality or property damage (including the persons or property of Lessee or Lessee's employees), arising from Lessee's possession or operation of said premises;

(c) comply with all the requirements of law and governmental authorities applicable to said premises and the conduct of Lessee's business thereon; procure and maintain in effect all permits necessary to operate said premises as a gasoline service station; pay any and all taxes, license fees, and other charges levied or assessed against any property of Lessee on said premises or in connection with the business conducted thereon; pay all charges for water and electricity and operating expenses; keep the sidewalks unobstructed and clear of ice and snow; maintain said premises in good condition, making all necessary repairs and replacements and keep the same in a clean and tidy condition.

5. Lessee may conduct his business on said leased premises as he sees fit, and none of the provisions of this Lease shall be construed as reserving to Lessor any right to exercise any control or management over the business or operations of Lessee. It is understood and agreed that neither Lessee, nor any person or persons performing any duties or engaged in any work at the request of Lessee upon the said premises, shall be an employee or agent of Lessor.

6. Lessor reserves the right, at its option, but shall not be obligated, to repair or reconstruct the leased facilities, and may enter the premises at any reasonable time for such purposes.

7. Upon any default by Lessee hereunder or violation of any of the terms or conditions of this Lease, or should Lessee become bankrupt or insolvent or should any attachment or other legal process or proceedings be levied or instituted by anyone other than Lessor against said premises, or should Lessee sell, assign, pledge or mortgage said premises or any part thereof, or attempt to do so, or allow any lien to attach hereto, or in the event of the death of Lessee, Lessor may, without notice, immediately terminate this Lease and all Lessee's rights hereunder, and reenter and, in any manner, resume possession of said premises, Lessee hereby waiving all statutory rights inconsistent herewith.

8. The waiver of any breach of any of the provisions hereof shall not be deemed a waiver of any succeeding or other breach.

9. All notices under this Lease shall be duly given if forwarded by registered mail to Lessor, at its above address, or to Lessee, at said premises.

10. The making, execution and delivery of this Lease by Lessee have not been induced by any representations, statements, warranties, or agreements other than those herein expressed. This Lease embodies the entire understanding of the parties hereto, and there are no further agreements or understandings, written or oral, in effect between the parties hereto relating to the subject matter hereof; and this Lease cancels and supersedes any lease or other agreement between the parties hereto or their predecessors with reference to possession of said premises by Lessee.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have caused this Lease to be executed the day and year herein first above written.

Merchandise Agreement

Federal Tires and Tubes, Acro Batteries, Auto Supplies

This Agreement, made this day of , 19 , between TIDE WATER ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY, a Delaware corporation, Associated Division, hereinafter called "Associated", and hereinafter called "Buyer",

Witnesseth

(1) Products: Associated agrees to sell and deliver to Buyer, and Buyer agrees to purchase from Associated during the term of this Agreement, all tires, tubes, batteries, accessories and/or auto supplies required by Buyer for resale from Buyer's place of business at the address set forth below, and Buyer shall diligently promote the resale of said merchandise to consumers and/or dealers. Merchandise to be sold and delivered to Buyer by Associated hereunder shall be such items as marketed by Associated at time of delivery.

(2) Period: The term of this Agreement shall be from , 19 , until terminated by either party giving to the other at least ten (10) days' prior written notice of such termination.

(3) Price, Terms: Payment shall be made by Buyer for goods purchased hereunder at the prices and discounts applicable to Buyer's class of trade, as established by Associated at time of shipment, which prices, discounts and allowances shall be subject to change without notice, and on terms extended by Associated to Buyer from time to time. A cash discount of two percent (2%) if paid by the tenth day of the month following delivery will be allowed except on items specifically excluded by Associated. Associated may decline to make deliveries except for cash. Upon any termination hereof, any and all sums due Associated hereunder shall immediately become due and payable.

(4) Identification: Buyer shall identify his place of business as a resale outlet for tires, tubes, batteries, accessories and/or auto supplies, in accordance with Associated's Advertising policy.

(5) Deliveries: Deliveries shall be f. o. b. Associated's point of shipment and the goods shall become the property of the Buyer at time of shipment. Associated shall pay freight to Buyer's place of business on such shipments complying as to quantity with Associated's policy, from time to time. On express shipments of one hundred (100) pounds or more, freight allowance only will be made.

(6) Adjustments: All claim for adjustments or replacements of tires, tubes, batteries, accessories and/or auto supplies shall be in accordance with the procedure established by Associated from time to time.

(7) Returned Merchandise: Tires or tubes returned to Associated by Buyer for exchange shall be of current design only and shall be subject to a handling charge of two and one-half per cent (2½%) of the dealer net cost price for the tires and tubes returned for exchange, in effect at time of such exchange, and such charge shall be paid by Buyer. All products sold to Buyer hereunder are subject to return only upon written request to and approval by Associated. Only merchandise in good condition in original containers and of a current design, size or type will be accepted for return. Associated will charge Buyer a ten per cent (10%) handling fee for all auto supplies, accessories or batteries returned for credit.

(8) Price Protection Federal Tires & Tubes: In case of a decline in Associated's Federal tire and tube "List Prices" which reduces Buyer's net cost, Associated will issue to Buyer a merchandise credit to be available to Buyer during the term of this agreement amounting to the difference if any between the net prices paid and the reduced net prices on all Federal Tires and Tubes of current design invoiced by Associated to Buyer within thirty (30) days next prior to the effective date of such price decline, and that shall remain in the Buyer's stock, on hand and unsold, as of the date of such decline. The term "Net Prices" herein means the prices as specified in "Associated's Federal Tire and Tube List Prices" less all discounts to the Buyer, if any, which may then be in effect.

(9) Force Majeure: Associated shall not be liable for damage because of total or partial interruption of deliveries, changes in quality or discontinuance of any product, as the result of war, Governmental action, embargo, order, requisition or request of any Governmental or acting authority; acts of God, the elements, fire, storm, flood, strike, industrial disturbance, or accident; inability to secure supplies; failure or impairment of Associated's transportation, or distributing facilities; joinder of Associated in any curtailment, rationing or proration program, whether voluntary or involuntary; or any other causes whatsoever beyond Associated's control, whether or not similar to the foregoing enumerated causes. If any such causes hinder or delay Associated in making deliveries to all its customers, failure to make deliveries to Buyer, in whole or in part, while making deliveries to others, shall not be a violation of this Agreement.

(10) Breach: Breach of any of the terms hereof, or failure to make any payments when due, shall entitle Associated to terminate this Agreement without notice or refuse further deliveries hereunder, whether or not any previous breach has been waived. This Agreement constitutes the entire agreement between the parties hereto and supersedes all prior agreements, written or oral, relating to the subject matter hereof.

Buyer shall not sell or handle any petroleum products during said period at said premises except those purchased hereunder.

Term

2. The term of this Agreement shall be for a period of one (1) year, commencing on the day of , 19, and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, that either party may terminate this Agreement at the end of any calendar month of the term, or extended term, hereof by giving the other at least thirty (30) days prior written notice. Upon any termination hereof, any and all sums due Associated hereunder shall immediately become due and payable by Buyer to Associated.

Products

3. The Products covered by this Agreement include, but are not limited to: Associate Arotane Gasoline, Associated Flying A Gasoline, and Associated White Gold Gasoline, and any other brands of gasoline marketed by Associated in Buyer's territory, provided, however, that Associated may at any time discontinue the marketing of any brand or grade of gasoline, either generally or in Buyer's territory, in which event Associated and Buyer shall be released from all obligations hereunder relating to the purchase and sale of such brand or grade of gasoline, but no other; Veedol Motor Oils and Greases; Tydol Motor Oils; and such other petroleum products as may be marketed generally by Associated in Buyer's territory.

Price

4. Buyer agrees to pay Associated at time of delivery (or, if credit is extended, on date when due), for all deliveries hereunder, the price, including taxes, posted by Associated at the time and for the place of delivery, governing sales of like products to Buyer's class of trade generally. Any tax levied by governmental authority except as already herein provided for and in any manner affecting sale or delivery hereunder shall be added to said price and shall be paid by Buyer.

Resale Price

5. Pursuant to the Fair Trade Act of the State in which delivery is made hereunder, Buyer agrees not to sell or to offer or advertise for sale any products purchased hereunder at less than Associated's posted authorized selling price for said products and type of sale in effect at time and place of resale.

Claims

6. Buyer waives any claim against Associated as to price or quantity of any delivery of products hereunder, unless such claim is made by Buyer to Associated in writing within forty-eight (48) hours after such delivery.

Force Majeure

7. Associated shall not be liable for damages because of total or partial interruption of deliveries, changes in quality or discontinuance of any of its products, or type or size of containers, as the result of war, Governmental action, embargo, order, requisition or request of any Governmental or acting authority; restraints of rulers or princes; acts of God, the elements, fire, storm, flood, strike; industrial disturbance, or accidents; inability to secure supplies in the open market; failure or impairment of Associated's production, transportation, manufacturing or distributing facilities; joinder of Associated in any curtailment, rationing or proration program, whether voluntary or involuntary; or any other causes whatsoever beyond Associated's control, whether or not similar to the foregoing enumerated causes. Buyer may purchase elsewhere, but without recourse on Associated, any product which Associated fails to deliver because of any such causes. Upon cessation of such causes, deliveries shall be resumed hereunder, but not beyond the period hereof, nor, except by mutual agreement, in any greater amounts than required to be delivered during the unexpired period of the contract, excluding amounts undelivered during the period Associated is excused from making deliveries. If any such causes hinder or delay Associated in making deliveries to all its customers, failure to make deliveries to Buyer, in whole or in part, while making deliveries to others, shall not be a violation of this contract and Associated may apportion its available supply among its customers in any manner it shall deem best.

Deliveries

8. Deliveries shall be made in fairly equal quantities and Associated reserves the right to refuse deliveries in abnormal quantities or in quantities in excess of Buyer's usual requirements. The quantity of each delivery of gasoline by Associated hereunder shall be established and fixed by the volumetric measurement, at the time of such delivery, of the containers from or into which delivery is made by meter attached to the delivery equipment. Said quantity shall be shown on delivery ticket issued by Associated covering such delivery, and shall be accepted as final by both parties.

Brands

9. Buyer agrees to resell products purchased hereunder only under Associated's names, trade marks and brands, and through pumps and containers properly marked with said names, trade marks and brands. Associated in its uncontrolled discretion, may at any time change the quality, brand name or any distinctive designation of any of its products. Should it do so, this contract shall be deemed to cover products of the new names or designations to the same extent as if said names or designations were specifically set forth herein.

Conduct of Business

10. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Associated any right to direct or control Buyer in the conduct of his business hereunder. All persons working for Buyer shall be employees of Buyer and not of Associated, and Associated reserves no right to exercise any control over such employees. Buyer agrees that he will at his own expense secure and maintain at all times during the period hereof full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Law effective in Buyer's State, covering Buyer's employees, and, upon request, shall furnish Associated with evidence of such insurance. Buyer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes, both State and Federal, as to all employees engaged in the performance of work in connection with Buyer's business. Buyer agrees to conduct his business in compliance with all governmental laws, ordinances and regulations.

Signs.

11. Upon the termination of this Agreement, Associated shall have the right at its option, to enter upon said property and to remove, paint out, or obliterate any signs, symbols, or colors on said property or on the buildings or equipment thereon which might denote that Associated's products are being handled thereat.

Breach

12. Associated, at its option, may terminate this Agreement at any time without notice, or refuse deliveries hereunder, if Buyer breaches any of the provisions hereof, or fails to make any payment when due. Such termination shall be exclusive of and in addition to any other remedy which Associated may have against Buyer for said breach. Waiver of any breach shall not be construed as a waiver of any other or successive breach hereof.

General Provisions

13. Time is of the essence of this Agreement. This Agreement supersedes all agreements of a prior date between the parties hereto or their predecessors in interest, relating to the subject matter hereof, and releases the parties from any and all past or future obligations, claims or liabilities thereunder, excepting only that Buyer agrees to pay Associated in accordance with its delivery tickets or statements rendered for all products delivered to Buyer thereunder. This Agreement shall not be assigned by Buyer, or by operation of law, without Associated's prior written consent. Consent to any assignment shall not be construed as consent to any further assignment. This instrument contains the entire contract and understanding between the parties and there are no oral promises, representations or warranties affecting same. SHELLUBRICATION DEALER'S LICENSE AGREEMENT

No. 6399

THIS AGREEMENT made this ..... day of ..... , 19 .....

by and between SHELL OIL COMPANY, Incorporated, hereinafter called "SHELL," and .....

hereinafter called "DEALER":

WITNESSETH:

1. SHELL hereby grants to DEALER a non-exclusive, non-transferable license to use "Shellubrication—The Modern Upkeep Service," together with the right to use such materials, forms and records in connection with said service as may from time to time be specified by SHELL. The license herein granted applies only to the following described place of business, hereinafter referred to as the "premises":

Street Address ..... City ..... State .....

2. "Shellubrication" is a lubrication service for the application to automobiles of automotive lubricants including the use of "Shellubrication" Guide, "Shellubrication" Receipts, advertising signs and materials and such other standard forms and records as may be required by Shell. The term "Shellubrication" includes the maintenance of a standard set of equipment and the adoption of a standard method of applying automotive lubricants.

3. The efficient operation of "Shellubrication" requires the use of the advertising and sales promotional materials, and the forms listed in Appendices "1" and "2," which are a part hereof. The advertising and sales promotional material listed in Appendix "1" will be loaned Dealer by Shell. Shell will endeavor at all times to have the forms specified as a part of "Shellubrication" and listed in Appendix "2," available to Dealer. All such materials, forms and records shall be used exclusively in connection with the use of "Shellubrication." Title to all materials, forms and records furnished or loaned hereunder by Shell shall at all times remain in Shell and Shell shall have a right of examination thereof and access thereto at all reasonable times and upon the expiration or sooner termination of this agreement, shall have the right to remove all of said materials, forms and records, and Dealer agrees to provide the proper means for Shell to do so. Dealer shall be responsible for any injury or damage to any materials, forms or records which is not caused by ordinary usage while in Dealer's possession.

4. DEALER, at his sole expense, agrees to maintain in first-class condition at the said premises an adequate set of all equipment required for the proper and efficient lubrication of motor vehicles and to supplement such equipment with any new or different equipment as may, from time to time, be designated by Shell as necessary to lubricate adequately new models of motor vehicles.

5. DEALER shall indemnify and hold SHELL harmless from and against any and all liability for loss or damage to property of whatsoever kind, or for injury to or death of any person or persons arising out of or in any way ...with the use of "Shellubrication." Title to all materials, forms and records furnished or loaned hereunder by Shell shall at all times remain in Shell and Shell shall have a right of examination thereof and access thereto at all reasonable times and upon the expiration or sooner termination of this agreement, shall have the right to remove all of said materials, forms and records, and Dealer agrees to provide the proper means for Shell to do so. Dealer shall be responsible for any injury or damage to any materials, forms or records which is not caused by ordinary usage while in Dealer's possession.

4. DEALER, at his sole expense, agrees to maintain in first-class condition at the said premises an adequate set of all equipment required for the proper and efficient lubrication of motor vehicles and to supplement such equipment with any new or different equipment as may, from time to time, be designated by Shell as necessary to lubricate adequately new models of motor vehicles.

5. DEALER shall indemnify and hold SHELL harmless from and against any and all liability for loss or damage to property of whatsoever kind, or for injury to or death of any person, or persons, arising out of or in any way connected with the installation, use and/or maintenance of "Shellubrication" and/or all materials, forms or records furnished or used in connection therewith or in any wise arising out of any acts committed or omitted upon said premises.

6. DEALER agrees to use, advertise and display only lubricating oils and greases obtained from Shell in connection with the performance of "Shellubrication" service and for this purpose DEALER agrees to keep on hand at all times and to display a representative stock of automotive lubricants acquired from Shell as listed in Appendix "3" which is a part hereof.

7. Should DEALER at any time fail to abide by or comply with any of the terms or provisions of this agreement, SHELL may, at its election, cancel this contract. The waiver of any breach hereunder will not be deemed a continuing waiver or a waiver of any subsequent breach, whether of the same or different provision of this agreement. The remedies hereunder afforded SHELL are cumulative and shall not be deemed to deprive SHELL of any other remedy given to SHELL by law.

8. No prior stipulation, agreement or understanding of the parties or their agents in respect to the subject matter of this contract, whether written or oral, express or implied, shall be valid or enforceable unless embodied in this contract or covered by these provisions.

9. Nothing herein shall be deemed as constituting DEALER the agent of SHELL.

10. This agreement shall rema'n in full force and effect until terminated by either party giving to the other written notice at least ten days prior to the time such termination is to become effective.

11. This agreement or any modification thereof shall not be binding upon SHELL until approved and signed on its behalf by a duly authorized employee. Commencement of performance hereunder prior to approval and signing as above stipulated in no case shall be construed as a waiver by SHELL of this requirement.

tion being given to Shell's general distributing operations. Shell shall not be responsible for any failure or delay in making deliveries due in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, to any cause or condition of whatsoever nature or description beyond Shell's control.

4. Price and Terms: For all gasoline delivered hereunder Buyer shall pay to Shell, in cash on delivery, Shell's dealer net price for gasoline of like grade and quality delivered by tank truck to resellers coming within the same class and delivery area as Buyer, all as shown on the price schedules posted by Shell on date of delivery hereunder at its said distributing plant. Should Shell extend credit to Buyer, the extension thereof shall not be deemed a waiver of Shell's right, at any time without notice, to require payment to be made in cash on delivery.

5. Resale Price: Buyer shall not sell, offer or advertise for sale any gasoline delivered by Shell hereunder at any price lower than Shell's retail price for gasoline of like grade and brand posted by Shell at its said distributing plant at the time of resale of such gasoline. Buyer shall not grant any rebates, discounts or concessions or resort to any device whatsoever whereby any purchaser may obtain such gasoline at a lower net price than Shell's said retail price posted as aforesaid.

6. Breach of Contract: Should Buyer at any time fail to abide by or comply with any of the terms or provisions of this contract, Shell may, at its election, suspend deliveries hereunder or may, at its election, cancel this contract. The waiver of any breach hereunder will not be deemed a continuing waiver or a waiver of any subsequent breach, whether of the same or a different provision of this contract. The remedies herein afforded Shell are cumulative and shall not be deemed to deprive Shell of any other remedy given to Shell by law.

7. Trademarks and Trade Names: Buyer may use the trademarks, trade colors and trade names of Shell to identify and advertise the products purchased hereunder, but shall not use the same for any other purpose or in connection with the sale of any other products. At the termination of this contract Buyer shall discontinue the use of

[fol. 2515] PAINT WORK AND SIGNS

1. Authorization:

The Dealer named in the 100% Dealer Gasoline Contract on the reverse side hereof hereby authorizes Shell Oil Company, Incorporated, (hereinafter called "Shell") at its election and without incurring liability to Dealer for any act or omission of Shell in connection therewith:

(a) To do the following painting at Dealer's place of business mentioned in said contract:

(b) To place the following described signboards or other advertising media which shall remain Shell's property:

(c) To install on gasoline pumps signs and insignia, including porcelain enamel emblems, and to make any necessary changes or alterations in connection with such installation, including the boring of holes in pump skirts. Upon removal, Shell shall have no obligation to plug holes or to otherwise restore pumps.

2. Cost of Painting—Depreciation Allowance:

Dealer shall not be obligated to pay Shell for any such paint work unless Dealer fails to abide by or comply with any of the terms or provisions of said 100% Dealer Gasoline Contract. In case Dealer so fails:

(a) He shall pay Shell, upon demand, the full cost of any such painting, less a depreciation allowance at the rate of 8% per month if the term of this contract is one year or less, and 4% per month if the term of this contract is over one year, computed in each case from the date of completion of paint work to and including the date such failure occurs, provided no depreciation allowance for any particular paint work in the event of any such failure by Dealer, shall exceed 80% of Shell's cost, and

(b) Shell, at its election, may enter upon Dealer's said premises and paint out or obliterate all paint work theretofore done by Shell, and Dealer shall, upon demand by Shell, reimburse Shell for the cost thereof.

3. Alterations:

Dealer agrees that he will not permit any of the signs, advertising media or painting furnished by Shell hereunder to be removed, obliterated or in anywise altered during the term of said 100% Dealer Gasoline Contract and thereafter until ten (10) days after Dealer has given Shell written notice of his intention to make any such change. Shell shall have the right at any time prior to the lapse of said ten (10) day period to enter upon Dealer's said property and remove and or obliterate, either by painting out or otherwise, any paint work, signs, signboards or other advertising media furnished by Shell hereunder.

4. Authority:

Dealer represents he has full authority to permit all of the work herein mentioned to be done and agrees to hold Shell harmless from the claims of any person or persons by reason thereof.

Owner's Consent

The undersigned, the owner of the premises referred to in the 100% Dealer Gasoline Contract on the reverse side hereof, hereby consents to the above agreement; provided undersigned does not undertake any obligation to pay for any paint work therein mentioned or the removal or obliteration thereof.

GENTLEMEN:

Undersigned, being now, or proposing at once to become, the purchaser of petroleum products from you for sale or use at the place of business of undersigned located at requests you:

(a) to do the following painting at his said place of business:

In the event of any breach hereof or in the event undersigned, or the tenants, successors or assigns of undersigned, shall at any time within one (1) year from the date hereof cease to purchase from you all of the gasoline kept for sale or use at said place of business, or used therein or sold therefrom, undersigned will pay you on demand the full cost of said painting, less depreciation at the rate of eight per cent (8%) per month thereon computed from the date of completion of said painting, provided no depreciation in excess of eighty per cent (80%) shall be deducted. If you elect, you may exercise the further and additional right, upon any violation of the terms hereof or discontinuance of the purchase of all said gasoline, to enter said place of business and paint out or obliterate the said painting, provided you shall not be obligated to effect such painting out or obliteration;

(b) to place thereat the following described signboards or other advertising media, which shall remain your property:

(c) Install on gasoline pumps porcelain enamel emblems which will require holes to be bored in the skirt of the pumps. If and when the signs are removed, you shall have no obligation with respect to restoring the skirts to their original condition.

All signs or other advertising media are subject to obliteration or removal by you at any time without notice. If you should elect, in the event of breach of any of the terms hereof by undersigned to paint out or obliterate any painting or signs hereunder, undersigned agrees to pay the cost of such painting out and/or obliteration.

In consideration of your doing said painting, and/or placing said advertising media, undersigned agrees not to engage in or permit the removal or obliteration of said painting or other advertising media without your written consent, so long as your products are kept for sale or use at the said place of business or so long as any agreement with you, your successors or assigns, concerning the furnishing or consignment of your products for use or resale from or at said place of business, is in effect, nor thereafter until the expiration of ten (10) days after undersigned has notified you in writing and has afforded you adequate opportunity to enter said place of business and remove or obliterate said paint work, sign boards or other advertising media placed thereon by you.

The undersigned further represents he has full authority to have the said work done, and agrees to hold you harmless from the claims of any person by reason thereof.

Lessee shall pay for all water, gas, heat and electric current used by Lessee on the premises during the continuance of this lease. In the event of Lessee's failure or refusal to pay any of the above charges, Shell may pay same and the amount paid shall become an indebtedness to Shell bearing interest at the rate of six percent (6%) per annum.

5. Repairs—Removal of Improvements: Lessee shall at all times, at Lessee's own cost and expense, make all necessary repairs and replacements of the improvements and equipment subject to this agreement and shall keep the leased property in neat, clean and properly painted condition, provided no repairs or replacements shall me made or done except with the written consent of Shell. Should Lessee fail to make such repairs and replacements as may reasonably be necessary for the proper preservation and maintenance of Shell's property, then Shell shall have the right to make such repairs and replacements and shall be granted the license to enter upon said premises for this purpose and Lessee shall reimburse Shell for the cost thereof. Upon the termination of this agreement Lessee shall, at Lessee's sole cost and expense, remove any additional properties placed by Lessee on the demised premises, provided this can be done without damage to the leased premises, and shall surrender the said premises and all buildings, improvements and equipment demised to Lessee hereunder, to Shell in as good condition as when received, reasonable use, wear and tear and damage by the elements excepted. All signs, colors or trade-marks, directly or indirectly identifying Lessee with such premises of the business conducted thereon, shall be removed by Lessee upon or prior to surrender of said premises.

If Lessee does not make the repairs and replacements for which Lessee is liable herein, and surrender the property in the condition required herein, Shell may make such repairs and replacements and do all work necessary therefor, and Lessee shall pay Shell the cost thereby incurred by Shell, provided that if neither Lessee nor Shell shall make any such repairs or replacements or do any required work the Lessee shall pay Shell for the damaged, destroyed or missing property and for all work required to remedy the conditions, the reasonable value thereof. In the event the premises are rendered unfit for tenancy by fire or the elements, Shell may, at its option, repair or replace the property destroyed, but if Shell does not so repair or replace said property then this lease shall terminate and Shell shall be released from any further liability hereunder.

[fol. 2518] 6. Trademarks and Trade Names: This lease shall not be construed as conferring on Lessee the right to use Shell's trademarks, trade names, advertising signs and devices or color scheme of red and yellow.

7. Security: Lessee shall furnish to Shell such deposit or other security as Shell may require, to secure the payment of rentals or other sums which may become due Shell hereunder and to insure Lessee's full and faithful performance of the obligations hereunder. In the event a deposit shall be required, Shell may from time to time apply all or any part of such deposit to any indebtedness of Lessee to Shell whether accruing under this agreement or otherwise. Any unapplied portion of said deposit shall be returned to Lessee at the termination of this lease.

8. Control of Property: None of the provisions of this lease shall be construed as reserving to Shell any right to exercise any control or management over the business or operations of Lessee conducted upon the leased premises or to direct in any respect the manner in which any such business or operations shall be conducted or managed, it being understood and agreed that so long as Lessee shall use said premises in a lawful manner, for the purposes herein specified, the entire control and direction of such activities shall be and remain with Lessee. It is understood and agreed that neither Lessee nor any person or persons performing any duties or engaged in any work at the request of Lessee upon leased premises, shall be deemed the employee or agent of Shell.

9. Indemnity: Lessee agrees to indemnify and hold Shell harmless from and against any and all liability of whatsoever nature or kind for damage to property or for injury to or death of any person arising out of or in any way connected with condition, use, possession, maintenance or operation of said premises.

10. Default: Should Lessee at any time fail to abide by or comply with any of the terms, conditions, covenants or provisions of this agreement, Shell may, at its election, without notice, immediately terminate this lease and may re-enter the said premises and exclude all other persons therefrom. The waiver of any breach hereunder shall not be deemed a continuing waiver or a waiver of any subsequent breach whether of the same or of a different provision of this agreement. In case Shell shall retain an attorney for the protection and enforcement of its rights and remedies hereunder, Lessee agrees to reimburse Shell, upon demand, for reasonable attorney's fees and costs incurred in this connection. The remedies herein afforded Shell are cumulative and shall not be deemed to deprive Shell of any other remedy given it by law.

11. Sublease: It is understood Shell's interest in the demised premises is held under lease dated the ..... day of ....., 19..., from .....
and this agreement is made subject to all the terms, covenants and conditions thereof, and the herein agreement shall ipso facto terminate upon the termination of the first mentioned lease, whether by mutual consent of the parties hereto or for any other cause whatsoever. The Lessee shall cause or permit no act to be done, or create any lien which will in anywise impair Shell's interest and title under the lease in this paragraph first mentioned. Wherever the words "Lessor" or "Lessee" are mentioned in this agreement, said words shall be interpreted to mean "Sublessor" and "Sublessee," respectively.

12. Notices: Any notices provided herein may be given to Lessee by delivery in person or by registered mail addressed to Lessee at ....., and any notices hereunder may be given to Shell by registered mail addressed to it at .....
Either party may change its or his address at any time by written notice to the other.

13. Assignment: Lessee shall not assign this agreement, or any interest hereunder, or sublet any of the demised premises without the written consent of Shell. This agreement shall not be assigned by operation of law.

14. Cancellation of Previous Agreements: This lease cancels and supersedes any lease or other agreement between the parties hereto with reference to the possession of the demised premises.

15. Shell's Acceptance: It is expressly understood and agreed that Shell shall not be bound by any of the terms, conditions or covenants herein unless and until this agreement has been accepted by Shell and a copy of the same, signed by a duly authorized officer or employee of Shell, has been delivered to Lessee by Shell.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have caused this agreement to be executed the day and year first hereinabove written.

SERVICE STATION SUBLEASE

This Agreement, made this ..... day of ....., 19 ..., between Shell Oil Company, Incorporated, as Sublessor, and ....., as Sublessee,

Witnesseth:

1. That for the term at the rental and upon the conditions, covenants and agreements hereinafter expressed and subject thereto, the Sublessor does hereby demise and sublet to the Sublessee, and the Sublessee does hereby sublease and hire from the Sublessor all that certain real property situate in the City of ....., County of ....., State of ....., particularly described as follows:

Together with all buildings, improvements and equipment thereon as listed in Exhibit "A" hereto attached and hereby made a part hereof.

2. Term: The term of this sublease shall be for a period of , commencing on the day of 19 , subject however to termination at any time by Sublessor, by giving to Sublessee ninety (90) days' written notice of its desire and intent to terminate.

3. Rental: Sublessee shall pay to Sublessor as rental for said premises a sum equal to cent(s) (c) for each gallon of gasoline delivered by Sublessor to the demised premises during the calendar month for which payment is to be made, commencing , 19 . Payment shall be made on or before the 20th day of the month next following the calendar month for which payment is due. The Sublessee shall pay any taxes which may during the said term be levied or assessed on improvements and equipment on the said premises whether placed thereon by the Sublessor or by Sublessee, and shall reimburse Sublessor for the cost of all insurance carried thereon or in connection therewith.

4. Default: In the event of the default of the Sublessee in the compliance with any of the conditions, covenants, or agreements hereof on his part to be kept and performed, then the Sublessor may terminate this sublease and may reenter the said premises and exclude all other persons therefrom, if Sublessee shall continue in default thereof for fifteen (15) days after Sublessor has made written demand for performance.

5. Possession: The Sublessee shall and hereby covenants and agrees to at all times during the term hereof conduct and maintain on the said demised premises an automobile supply or service station, and shall use, dispense, handle, sell and keep for sale petroleum products, including gasoline, lubricating oils and greases, supplied by and acquired from the Sublessor exclusively. This condition is a material consideration moving to the Sublessor for the grant of this sublease and without which it would not have granted the same. Any breach of this covenant shall entitle the Sublessor to terminate this sublease immediately without notice and shall entitle Sublessor to take immediate possession of the demised premises and all properties thereon, and to exclude all persons therefrom. The price Sublessee shall pay Sublessor for petroleum products purchased by Sublessee shall be Sublessor's posted price for the same or similar products to its dealers generally in Sublessee's vicinity at time and place of delivery.

6. Repairs—Removal of Improvements: The Sublessee shall at all times at his own cost and expense make all necessary repairs and replacements to the improvements and equipment subject to this agreement. The Sublessee shall keep the leased property in neat and clean condition, and painted with the standard colors of the Sublessor. The Sublessee shall pay for all water, gas, heat and electricity used upon the said premises. On termination of this agreement the Sublessee may remove any additional properties placed by him at his expense on the demised lands, and shall surrender the said premises, and all other buildings, improvements and equipment demised to him hereunder to the Sublessor in as good condition as when received, reasonable use, wear and tear and damage by the elements excepted.

7. Indemnity: Sublessee agrees to protect, defend, hold harmless and indemnify the Sublessor against all claims for damage to property or injury or death to persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Sublessee or Sublessee's employees in or about the said premises.

8. Sublease: It is understood the Sublessor's interest in the demised premises is held under agreement dated the day of , 19 , with , as Lessor, a copy of said agreement being hereto attached and hereby made a part hereof, and this agreement is made subject to all the terms, covenants and conditions thereof. The Sublessee shall cause or permit no act to be done or create any lien which will in anywise impair the Sublessor's interest and title thereunder, and any violation of this covenant shall ipso facto terminate this agreement.

9. Notices: All payments shall be made and notices given to the Sublessor at and any notice may be given to the Sublessee hereunder by delivery in person or by registered mail addressed to the Sublessee at . Either party may change its or his address at any time by written notice to the other.

10. It is further understood and agreed that the certain contract bearing date of the day of 19 , between the parties hereto, is hereby declared to be terminated and rendered null and void.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have executed this agreement in duplicate the day and year first hereinbefore written.

The price Sublessee shall pay Shell for petroleum products purchased by Sublessee shall be Shell's posted price for the same or similar products to its dealers generally in Sublessee's vicinity at time and place of delivery.

6. Repairs—Removal of Improvements: The Sublessee shall at all times at his own cost and expense make all necessary repairs and replacements to the improvements and equipment subject to this agreement. The Sublessee shall keep the leased property in neat and clean condition, and painted with the standard colors of Shell. The Sublessee shall pay for all water, gas, heat and electricity used upon the said premises. On termination of this agreement the Sublessee may remove any additional properties placed by him at his expense on the demised lands, and shall surrender the said premises, and all other buildings, improvements and equipment demised to him hereunder to Shell in as good condition as when received, reasonable use, wear and tear and damage by the elements excepted.

7. Indemnity: Sublessee agrees to protect, defend, hold harmless and indemnify Shell against all claims for damage to property or injury or death to persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Sublessee or Sublessee's employees in or about the said premises.

8. Sublease: It is understood Shell's interest in the demised premises is held under agreement dated the ..... day of ....., 19..., with ..... , as Lessor, a copy of said agreement being hereto attached and hereby made a part hereof, and this agreement is made subject to all the terms, covenants and conditions thereof. The Sublessee shall cause or permit no act to be done or create any lien which will in anywise impair Shell's interest and title thereunder, and any violation of this covenant shall ipso facto terminate this agreement.

9. Assignment: Sublessee shall not assign this agreement or any interest hereunder or sublet any of the demised premises without the written consent of Shell. This agreement shall not be assigned by operation of law without Shell's consent.

10. Notices: All payments shall be made and notices given to Shell at ..... , and any notice may be given to the Sublessee hereunder by delivery in person or by registered mail addressed to the Sublessee at ..... . Either party may change its or his address at any time by written notice to the other.

11. It is further understood and agreed that the certain contract bearing date of the day of ,

SERVICE STATION LEASE (L)

S. S. No. Deal No. St. Intersection

This indenture of lease made and entered into this day of , 19 , between GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION, hereinafter called Lessor, and , jointly and severally, if more than one, hereinafter called Lessee.

1. Premises. Subject to easements, conditions and restrictions of record, Lessor hereby leases to Lessee those certain service station premises located at , in the City of , County of , State of . It is agreed, however, that the concession(s) located on said premises shall not be included under the terms of this lease but shall be reserved by Lessor.

2. Duration of Lease. This lease shall continue in effect for one (1) year from , 19 , and thereafter from year to year, provided, however, that same may be terminated by Lessor or Lessee any time during the term hereof or any extension thereof by giving seven (7) days' written notice.

3. Rental. Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor in advance on the first day of each and every calendar month during the term of this lease or any extension thereof, as rental, the sum of Dollars ($), and in addition thereto Lessee shall pay to Lessor a sum determined by multiplying by one (1¢) cent per gallon the number of gallons of gasoline sold by Lessor to Lessee. Should the monthly rentals, as determined by the method of computation hereinabove specified, be more than Dollars ($) for any calendar month (hereinafter referred to as the "Maximum Monthly Rental"), Lessee's rental obligation for such calendar month shall be limited to said Maximum Monthly Rental.

Lessee shall pay to Lessor the rentals becoming due on the number of gallons of gasoline sold to Lessee at time of sale by Lessor.

Should Lessee take possession of the demised premises on a day other than the first of any calendar month, his first payment of rental to the Lessor shall be prorated in proportion to the number of days remaining in such calendar month.

4. Limitation as to Use. Lessee acknowledges that the premises are leased for the sole and exclusive purpose of conducting thereon a petroleum and gasoline service station business, and Lessee agrees at all times to operate said petroleum and gasoline service station business thereon in an orderly and lawful manner.

5. Inventory and Maintenance of Buildings and Equipment. Lessee hereby acknowledges receipt of all structures, apparatus, material and personal property listed on the inventory signed by Lessee on file in Lessor's office. Lessee acknowledges that said premises and all structures, apparatus, material and personal property situated thereon are in safe and in good order and condition and fit for carrying on the business for which they are leased, and Lessee agrees to maintain said premises in good and safe condition and make all repairs or replacements where damage, destruction or loss is occasioned by the negligent acts or omissions of Lessee or Lessee's agents, tenants, employees, guests or patrons. Lessee hereby waives all rights against Lessor under Sections 1941 and 1942 of the Civil Code of California. Should Lessee fail to promptly make such repairs or replacements, Lessor may, at its option, enter upon the premises and make such repairs or replacements, and Lessee shall promptly pay Lessor the cost thereof. Lessee further agrees not to make any alterations, changes or additions to said premises or to any of the buildings, improvements or equipment now in place thereon, and not to place any additional equipment, buildings or improvements thereon without first having obtained the written consent of Lessor so to do. Lessee agrees that Lessor during ordinary business hours may enter upon the premises and make such alterations, changes, additions, repairs or replacements it may deem necessary without any liability to Lessee in event of interference with Lessee's business.

6. Utilities, Taxes and Assessments. Lessor will pay all taxes levied on facilities leased hereunder.

Lessee hereby agrees to assume and to pay before delinquency, in addition to the rentals hereinabove provided, all charges for public utility services, all licenses, business permits, and all taxes and assessments that may be levied upon the improvements, equipment and stock in trade of Lessee placed by Lessee upon said premises.

[fol. 2528] 7. Liability. Lessor shall have at all reasonable times the right to enter upon said premises and inspect and examine the same, and to post such notices as Lessor may deem necessary to protect Lessor against loss from liens of laborers, materialmen or others, and Lessee further agrees to indemnify and save harmless said Lessor from any cause of action, loss, cost, damage, claim, demand or expense whatsoever arising out of any act or omission on the part of Lessee or Lessee's agents, tenants, employees, guests or patrons and which may cause damage to persons or property. In the event Lessee fails to pay or discharge any lien which may hereafter attach to the land demised herein, arising out of the act or omission of said Lessee, Lessor may, at its option, pay and discharge such lien, in which event Lessor shall be subrogated to the rights of the holder or holders thereof and may thereupon bill the Lessee for any and all expense incurred thereby, and such expense shall be payable from Lessee to Lessor at the date of payment of the monthly rental accruing first thereafter.

8. Sublease. It is specifically agreed that this instrument, regardless of the designation as a lease, shall be in all respects regarded as a Sublease, subject to the limitations thereof and dependent upon continuance in existence of that certain original lease on these premises, and Lessee agrees that in all events he will so conduct his operations on said premises as to in every respect comply with all the terms, conditions and limitations of said original lease, and in event of any termination of said original lease, this Sublease shall likewise terminate, and all of the rights of Lessee herein shall be at an end, and in such event Lessee herein named shall not be entitled to any damages whatsoever, nor to the refund of any moneys, except that if Lessee herein named be not in default at such time, he will be entitled to the refund of the prepaid rentals not theretofore applied and to no other payment whatsoever.

9. Performance. In the event of Lessee's failure to perform any of the provisions of this lease on his part to be performed and upon failure of Lessee to remedy the same within three (3) days after written notice from Lessor so to do, or if Lessee shall assign this lease or sublet all or any portion of the demised premises without the written consent of Lessor, or if any process or proceeding of any court be instituted against Lessee in attachment, execution, proceedings in bankruptcy, insolvency or receivership, or if any proceedings be taken to sequester the assets of Lessee for the benefit of his creditors, or if there be any interference with or cessation of the business being conducted on said premises, (all of the foregoing shall be applicable, whether it be voluntary or involuntary on the part of the Lessee) then, and in each such event, Lessor, at its option may forthwith terminate this lease and re-enter the demised premises and take possession thereof. Lessee acknowledges that the rental value of said premises is its utility for the purpose of a petroleum and gasoline service station business and that Lessee's failure to operate and keep the demised premises open for business for a minimum of ten (10) hours out of each calendar day shall constitute an interference with or cessation of business being conducted on said premises. The rights herein conferred upon Lessor shall not be exclusive and shall not impair Lessor's right to collect any unpaid rentals or to re-let said premises for the account of Lessee after taking possession thereof and such other rights as Lessor may seek in law or in equity. Anything herein contrary to the terms and provisions of or regulations under any State or Federal law shall be modified to conform to the terms and provisions thereof.

10. Entirety of Contract; Waivers; Assignability. This instrument contains the entire agreement and understanding between the parties in respect of the subject matter. The right of Lessor to require strict performance shall not be affected by any previous waiver or course of dealing. This contract is not assignable by Lessee except with the written consent of Lessor, and upon the death of Lessee, this contract shall forthwith terminate.

11. Notices. Any notices to be given hereunder shall be in writing and shall be deemed to have been duly given if and when deposited in the United States mail, properly stamped and sent by Registered Mail to Lessor at

, and to Lessee at the service station address set forth herein; or when delivered personally to said parties at said addresses.

Executed the day and year first above written.

SERVICE STATION LEASE (LX).

This Indenture of Lease, made and entered into this day of , 19 , by and between GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION, a Delaware corporation, hereinafter referred to as "Lessor" and hereinafter refered to as "Lessee".

Witnesseth:

Lessor, hereby leases to Lessee those certain premises situate at , in the City of , County of , State of , more particularly described as follows:

for the sole and exclusive purposes of conducting thereon a petroleum and gasoline service station, and Lessee agrees at all times to operate said petroleum and gasoline service station business thereon in an orderly and lawful manner.

This lease shall continue in effect for ( ) months and ( ) days from , 19 , and thereafter from year to year, provided, however, that the same may be terminated by Lessor at any time during the term or any extension thereof, upon thirty (30) days written notice to Lessee, and may be terminated by Lessee at the end of the original term or on any anniversary date, on thirty (30) days prior written notice.

1. Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor as rental the sum of $ per month; the first payment shall be made on the date on which possession is actually delivered to Lessee for the pro rata of the calendar month then current and thereafter on the first day of each and every calendar month to the end of the term.

Lessor hereby acknowledges receipt of the sum of $ as consideration for the execution of this lease, which sum is not and shall not be deemed any part of the rent reserved. If Lessee shall have fully and faithfully performed each and every obligation on the part of Lessee to be performed hereunder, then said sum of $ shall be applied upon the last ( ) months rental of this lease, but otherwise said sum shall belong to Lessor as part of the consideration for this lease.

All payments to Lessor hereunder shall be payable at its office at .....

[fol. 2530] 2. Lessee agrees at all times to keep the premises clean, sanitary and attractive looking. Lessee further agrees that he will not at any time during the term of this lease place or allow to be placed upon the demised premises structures or devices, without first having secured the written consent of Lessor.

3. Lessor shall have at all reasonable times the right to enter upon said premises and to inspect and examine the same and from time to time to paint the improvements and equipment located thereon with such colors as Lessor may see fit, and to post such notices as Lessor may deem necessary to protect Lessor against loss from the liens of laborers, materialmen or others, and Lessee hereby agrees to indemnify and save harmless said Lessor from any cause of action, loss, cost, damage, claim, demand or expense whatsoever arising out of any act or omission on the part of said Lessee, or Lessee's agents or employees, guests or patrons, and which may cause damage to persons or property.

4. Lessee hereby acknowledges receipt of all structures, apparatus, material and personal property listed on the inventory signed by Lessee on file in Lessor's office. Lessee acknowledges that said premises and all structures, apparatus, material and personal property situated thereon are in safe and in good order and condition and fit for carrying on the business for which they are leased, and Lessee agrees to maintain said premises in good and safe condition and make at his own expense all repairs or replacements which may be necessary or which may be required by law, municipal ordinances or governmental regulations. Lessee hereby waives all rights against Lessor under Sections 1941 and 1942 of the Civil Code of California. Should Lessee fail to promptly make such repairs or replacements, Lessor may, at its option, enter upon the premises and make such repairs or replacements, and Lessee shall promptly pay Lessor the cost thereof. Lessee further agrees not to make any alterations, changes or additions to said premises or to any of the buildings, improvements or equipment now in place thereon, and not to place any additional equipment, buildings or improvements thereon without first having obtained the written consent of Lessor so to do. Lessee agrees that Lessor during ordinary business hours may enter upon the premises and make such alterations, changes, additions, repairs or replacements it may deem necessary without any liability to Lessee in event of interference with Lessee's business.

5. Lessee hereby agrees to assume and to pay before delinquency, in addition to the rentals hereinabove provided, any and all charges for electricity, power, water, gas and heat, used by Lessee in the conduct of Lessee's business on said demised premises, and Lessee further agrees to pay any and all taxes and assessments that may be levied upon the improvements, equipment and stocks in trade of Lessee placed by Lessee upon said premises. Lessor shall have no liability to furnish to Lessee or to secure for the benefit of Lessee the Service of water, gas, heat, electricity, power or any other utility service, nor shall Lessor have any liability to Lessee on account of the failure in continuity of any such service. In the event Lessee fails to pay or discharge any lien which may hereafter attach to the land demised herein, arising out of the act or omission of said Lessee, Lessor may at its option pay and discharge such lien, in which event Lessor shall be subrogated to the rights of the holder or holders thereof and may thereupon bill the Lessee for any and all expense incurred thereby, and such expense shall be payable from Lessee to Lessor at the date of payment of the monthly rental accruing first thereafter.

6. Any notices to be given hereunder shall be in writing and shall be deemed to have been duly given if and when deposited in the United States mail, properly stamped and sent by Registered Mail to Lessor at , and to Lessee at the service station address set forth herein, or when delivered personally to said parties at said addresses.

7. No assignment, sublease or transfer in whole or in part of this lease, or any interest therein may be made by Lessee nor shall any encumbrances be placed thereon without the written consent of Lessor having first been obtained.

8. In event of Lessee's failure to perform any of the provisions of this lease on his part to be performed, and upon failure of Lessee to remedy the same within three days after written notice from Lessor so to do, or if Lessee shall assign this lease or sub-let any portion of the demised premises or shall place any encumbrance on the premises or this lease without the consent in writing of Lessor, or if Lessee, or property owned or occupied by Lessee, be attached, or if Lessee commits an act of bankruptcy, or if execution be levied against Lessee, or property owned or occupied by Lessee, or any other proceedings be taken to sequester the assets of Lessee for the benefit of his creditors, then and in that event Lessor may, at its option, terminate this lease and re-enter the demised premises and take possession thereof. It is admitted that interference with the business being conducted on said premises will seriously affect the value of the property, and it is hereby agreed by the parties that in event any action be brought by Lessor to recover possession of said premises on account of the default of Lessee, that Lessor shall have the right to the appointment of a Receiver to carry on the business pending a decision of said action. The rights herein conferred upon Lessor shall not be exclusive and shall not impair Lessor's rights to pursue such other, different or inconsistent remedies as Lessor may see fit.

9. On the expiration of the term of this lease or sooner termination thereof, Lessee shall quietly and peacefully surrender the demised premises to Lessor in good order and condition, reasonable wear and tear thereof alone excepted, and if any action be brought by Lessor to recover possession of said premises or to enforce any obligation of Lessee hereunder, Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court in such action.

10. It is specifically agreed that this instrument regardless of the designation as a lease, shall be in all respects regarded as a sub-lease, subject to the limitations of and dependent upon continuance in existence of that certain original lease between , as Lessors, and , as Lessee, dated , 19 , which said lease is recorded in Book of of the County of State of , at page , thereof, and Lessee agrees that in all events he will so conduct his operations on said premises as to in every respect comply with all of the terms, conditions and limitations of said original lease, and in event of any termination of said original lease, this sub-lease shall likewise terminate and all of the rights of Lessee herein shall be at an end, and in such event Lessee herein named shall not be entitled to any damages whatsoever, nor to the refund of any moneys except that if Lessee herein named be not in default at such time, he shall be entitled to the refund of the prepaid rentals not theretofore applied and to no other payment whatsoever.

[fol. 2531] 11. The parties agree that there is no understanding or agreement, oral, written, expressed, or implied, existing on any of the subjects referred to in the foregoing agreement, other than this written agreement itself, and that every agreement, representation, warranty or understanding on the said subjects has been merged into this agreement, which is mutually understood to be, and shall be conclusively accepted as, full agreement between Lessor and Lessee.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have caused this lease to be executed the day and year first above written.

Deal No.

Dealer Gasoline Contract (L).

This contract, made this day of , 19 , by and between GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION, hereinafter called "Company", and hereinafter called "Dealer,"

Witnesseth:

Company shall sell and deliver to Dealer, and Dealer shall purchase and receive from Company, Dealer's ordinary trade requirements of gasoline for resale at the service station located at upon the following terms and conditions:

1. The gasoline to be delivered and received hereunder shall be such grades or brands which Company is at the time of delivery marketing and delivering from its distributing plant at to service station dealers located in the vicinity of Dealer's station, and Company shall have the absolute right from time to time to change the quality of or the names of such grades and brands, or any of them, or may discontinue the marketing of all or any of them and substitute any grades or brands for those so discontinued, without any liability whatsoever to Dealer. Deliveries shall be made by Company or its Authorized Distributor at Dealer's service station on orders of Dealer by tank truck in fairly even monthly quantities.

2. Dealer shall pay Company for all gasoline delivered hereunder, in cash, on delivery, at Company's posted prices to undivided independent reseller accounts in effect on date of delivery, applying to deliveries by tank truck for the grade and quality of gasoline so delivered, as posted at Company's said distributing plant which delivery is made applicable to the delivery area in which Dealer's station is located. If Company extends credit to Dealer, the extension thereof shall not be deemed a waiver of company's rights at any time, without notice, to require payments to be made in cash on delivery.

3. Company shall not be held liable for failure to make deliveries resulting from fire, riot, labor disturbances, strikes, lockouts, boycotts, picketing, earthquake, war, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities of Company or carriers usually used or employed by Company in effecting deliveries hereunder; acts, orders, demands or recommendations of public officer or agents of government, whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal acting under claim or color of authority, or for failure to make deliveries or delay in delivery when, for causes above specified, Company is unable to replenish its stocks of products involved by the means of transportation usually used or employed by Company in effecting such replenishment of stocks at the plant or plants from which products are obtained for delivery hereunder; nor shall Company be liable for failure to make deliveries hereunder for any other cause or causes reasonably beyond its control, whether similar or dissimilar to the causes above specified. In case deliveries be limited by partial failure of Company's usual source of supply or for any of the foregoing reasons, then Company shall apportion its available supply between Dealer and other buyers from Company without liability to Dealer.

4. Dealer agrees to (a) keep the products purchased from Company free from adulteration by or with any other products and sell them only under Company's respective brands applicable thereto; (b) during such time as any law, ordinance or regulation does not prohibit the fixing of resale or retail prices at which branded or trade marked products may be sold, Dealer shall not sell, offer or advertise for sale any petroleum products delivered by Company hereunder at any price lower than Company's posted retail price (if any be posted) applicable to place of sale, for petroleum products of like quality at time of resale of such petroleum products, nor grant any rebates, discounts or concessions, or resort to any devices whatsoever whereby any purchaser may obtain such petroleum products at lower net prices than Company's said posted retail price, unless required to do so by governmental regulations.

5. Dealer hereby agrees that he is conducting all business at the said service station above referred to as an independent contractor and not as an employee of Company, acknowledging hereby that Company has no direction or control of the manner in which he conducts any business, or when or how such business is conducted except as herein otherwise provided.

6. Dealer agrees to protect, defend and hold Company harmless against all claims for damages to persons or property directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, or in the use, maintenance and operation on said premises of tanks, pumps, equipment and other facilities in connection with said service station, or from the sale, storage or delivery of products on said premises.

7. Dealer shall pay Company amounts equivalent to any tax (not included in the price or otherwise paid by Dealer) now or hereafter imposed. For the purpose of this contract the word "tax" shall be deemed to include all taxes, charges or duties now or hereafter levied or assessed directly or indirectly by any Federal, state or local governmental authority or agency upon or in any manner affecting the production, manufacture, storage, transportation, sale or distribution of the products sold hereunder, or on this contract, or any matter or thing connected with the performance thereof, which Company is required to pay to or collect for any such governmental authority or agency.

8. This contract shall extend to and be binding upon the successors and assigns of Company and Dealer, provided, however, that this contract is personal to Dealer and shall not be assigned by Dealer or by operation of law without the written consent of Company, and this contract shall not be deemed an asset in any receivership, bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings of Dealer and, at the option of either party, shall terminate in the event of any voluntary or involuntary receivership, bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings of Dealer.

9. The waiver of any breach of any provision hereof shall not be deemed to be a waiver of any other provision or provisions hereof or of any subsequent or continuing breach of such provision or provisions.

10. This contract shall continue in effect for one (1) year from date hereof and thereafter from year to year, subject to the right of Company or Dealer to terminate same at any time on seven (7) days' written notice. Company may forthwith terminate this contract at any time by written notice to Dealer on any default by Dealer, or Company may suspend deliveries during such default. Any termination shall be without prejudice to the accrued rights of Company.

This Contract, made this day of , 194 , by and between GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION, a corporation, hereinafter called "Seller," and , hereinafter caller "Buyer,"

Witnesseth

Quantity:

Subject to the other provisions of this agreement, Seller agrees to sell and deliver to Buyer and Buyer agrees to purchase from Seller, as ordered by Buyer during the term hereof, for resale at Buyer's premises situated at ; the following petroleum products in yearly quantities not greater than the maximum nor less than the minimum amounts hereinbelow specified for the respective products:

	Minimum	Maximum
Gasolines	Gals.	Gals.

Grade and Brands of Gasoline:

The gasoline to be delivered hereunder shall be those grades of Seller's gasoline which are currently marketed by Seller at the delivery point or points involved.

Price:

Buyer shall pay Seller in cash for all gasoline delivered by Seller to Buyer at Seller's posted price to undivided independent reseller accounts for gasoline of like grade and quality applying to deliveries by tank truck in the same delivery area as Buyer as shown on price schedules posted by Seller on date of delivery at Seller's said bulk storage plant.

Period:

This contract shall continue in effect (subject to prior termination as herein provided) for the period of five years from date hereof, and thereafter until cancelled by either Buyer or Seller upon 90 days written notice to the other.

Assignability:

This contract is not assignable without the written consent of Seller.

Additional Provision:

The Provisions Printed on the Reverse Side Hereof Are Hereby Made a Part of This Agreement.

GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION
By

(Seller)

(Buyer)

[fol. 2535] Delivery:

Delivery shall be made by Seller or its authorized distributor at Buyer's above mentioned station, on orders of Buyer in bulk by tank truck in fairly even monthly quantities at the prices herein specified.

Credit Terms:

If Seller extends credit to Buyer, the extension thereof shall not be deemed a waiver of Seller's right at any time, without notice, to require payments to be made in cash on delivery.

Taxes:

Buyer shall pay Seller amounts equivalent to any tax (not included in the price or otherwise paid by Buyer) now or hereafter imposed. For the purpose of this contract the word "tax" shall be deemed to include all taxes, charges or duties now or hereafter levied or assessed directly or indirectly by any domestic or foreign governmental authority or agency upon or in any manner affecting the production, manufacture, storage, transportation, sale or distribution of the products sold hereunder, or on this contract, or any matter or thing connected with the performance thereof, which Seller is required to pay to or collect for any such governmental authority or agency.

Prevention of Performance:

Seller shall not be held liable for failure to make deliveries resulting from fire, riot, labor disturbances, strikes, lockouts, boycotts, picketing, earthquake, war, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities of Seller or carriers usually used or employed by Seller in effecting deliveries hereunder, acts, orders, demands or recommendations of public officers or agents of government, whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal, acting under claim or color of authority, or for failure to make deliveries or delay in delivery when, for causes above specified, Seller is unable to replenish its stocks of products involved by the means of transportation usually used or employed by Seller in effecting such replenishment of stocks at the plant or plants from which products are obtained for delivery hereunder; nor shall Seller be liable for failure to make deliveries hereunder for any other cause or causes reasonably beyond its control, whether similar or dissimilar to the causes above specified. In case deliveries be limited, by partial failure of Seller's usual source of supply or for any of the foregoing reasons, then Seller shall apportion its available supply between Buyer and other buyers from Seller without liability to Buyer.

Breach of Contract:

In the event that either party shall fail to perform any of the provisions of this contract and said default shall continue after five (5) days' written notice from the party not in default, then this contract may be terminated at the option of the party not at default. A waiver for any breach of any provisions hereof shall not be deemed to be a waiver of any other provision or provisions hereof or of any subsequent or continuing breach of such provision or provisions.

Former Contracts:

This contract shall as of the commencement date hereof cancel and supersede all prior contracts between Seller and Buyer for the purchase and sale of the products named for use at the place mentioned, and shall cancel and supersede all other agreements or understandings with regard to leases, rentals, commissions, agency and other relationships between the parties and prices or differentials or relating to credits, bonuses, or concessions to be paid by Seller in connection with the purchase and sale, consignment or handling of said products. The entire transaction between the parties is set forth in this contract. No other understandings or agreements, oral, written, express or implied, exist on any of the subjects referred to herein, and all agreements and representations have been merged into this contract.

Statutory Regulations:

In so far as this agreement is or may become subject to any statutory provision relating to the subject matter hereof, as well as any order, regulation, interpretation or recommendation of public officers or agents of government, whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal, acting under claim or color of authority, it shall be deemed modified so as to conform to the applicable provisions of such law, order, regulation, interpretation or recommendation so long as the same may be in effect.

Maintenance of Retail Price:

During such time as any law, ordinance or regulation permits or authorizes the fixing of resale or retail prices at which branded or trademarked products may be sold, Buyer shall not sell, offer for sale, or advertise for sale any gasoline delivered by Seller hereunder, at any price lower than Seller's authorized retail price for gasoline of like quality at the place and time of resale of such gasoline, and Buyer shall not grant rebates, discounts or concessions or resort to any device whatsoever whereby any purchaser may obtain such gasoline at a lower net price than Seller's said retail price. Buyer shall resell all gasoline secured from Seller only under brands designated by Seller, and Buyer agrees not to mix, substitute, or adulterate said gasolines with any other material.

[fol. 2539] Provisions of Agreement

Entirety of Agreement.—No prior stipulations, agreement or understanding of the parties or their agents shall be valid or enforceable unless embodied in this agreement or covered by these provisions.

Delivery.—Unless otherwise stated in this agreement, delivery shall be deemed complete when goods, properly consigned, are placed free on board cars, boats or other vehicles.

Waiver.—The right of either party to require strict performance by the other of any and/or all obligations imposed upon the other by this agreement shall not in any way be affected by any previous waiver, forbearance or course of dealing.

Tank Cars.—Any tank cars furnished by the Seller shall be discharged by the Purchaser immediately upon arrival and delivered back to the railway from which they were received, billed in accordance with forms furnished by the Seller, and for any cars of the Seller detained more than 48 hours the Purchaser, besides paying such railway demurrage as may accrue, shall pay the Seller the amount per car stated in this agreement, or if not stated, then Two ($2.00) Dollars for each day or portion of a day after expiration of 48 hours.

Vessel Deliveries.—When shipment is made by boat, lighter, tank ship, or other vessel, the Purchaser immediately upon the arrival thereof shall furnish, without cost to the Seller, berth at which the vessel may lie safely afloat at all stages, together with the necessary connections and facilities for receiving, and shall receive the oil as fast as it can be discharged. The oil shall be pumped out at the expense of the Seller, its risk and responsibility ending at the boat's rail. In ports where fire is not allowed on board vessels, the Purchaser shall find and furnish steam for discharging purposes. The lay days or free unloading time for vessels and the penalties for detention beyond such time shall be in accordance with local trade custom unless otherwise specifically agreed upon at the time of execution of this agreement.

Deliveries in Drums.—If drums or wood barrels of the Seller are used, said drums or wood barrels shall remain the property of the Seller, and a deposit will be charged for same on the invoice at the rates in effect at the time of delivery. All said drums or wood barrel of the Seller shall be returned promptly on demand, in as good condition as when received, less ordinary wear and tear, and nothing other than the original contents shall be placed therein.

Force Majeure.—Failure (in whole or in part) or delay on the part of either party in the performance of any of the obligations imposed upon such party hereunder shall be excused and such party shall not be liable for damages or otherwise on account thereof, when such failure or delay is the direct or indirect result of any of the following causes, whether or not existing at the date hereof, and whether or not reasonably within the contemplation of the parties at the date hereof, namely: Acts of God, earthquakes, fire, flood, or the elements, malicious mischief, insurrection, riot, strikes, lockouts, boycotts, picketing, labor disturbances, public enemy, war (declared or undeclared), compliance with any federal, state or municipal law, or with any regulation, order, rule, recommendation, request or suggestion (including, but not limited to, priority, rationing or allocation orders or regulations) of governmental agencies, or authorities or representatives of any government (foreign or domestic), acting under claim or color of authority; total or partial failure or loss or shortage of all or any part of transportation facilities ordinarily available to and used by a party hereto in the performance of the obligations imposed by this agreement, whether such facilities are such party's own or those of others; or, if failure or delay be that of Seller, total or partial loss or shortage of raw or component materials or products ordinarily required by Seller; the commandeering or requisitioning by civil or military authorities of any raw or component materials, products, or facilities, including, but not limited to producing manufacturing, transportation and delivery facilities; perils of navigation, even when occasioned by negligence, malfeasance, default, or errors in judgment of the pilot, master, mariners or other servants of the ship's owner; or any cause whatsoever beyond the control of either party hereto, whether similar to or dissimilar from the causes herein enumerated.

If, by reason of any of said causes, Seller is unable to make deliveries to all its customers (whether under contract or not) its failure in whole or in part to make deliveries to Purchaser, while delivering to others, shall not be a breach of this agreement and in such event Seller may, but shall not be obligated to, prorate its available supply.

Upon the cessation of the cause or causes for any such failure or delay, performance hereof shall be resumed, but such failure or delay shall not operate to extend the term of this agreement nor obligate either party to make up deliveries or receipts, as the case may be.

Seller may suspend deliveries so long as its cost of performance is increased and the increased cost cannot be recovered by an equivalent increase in the price to be paid by Purchaser.

Nothing herein contained shall excuse Purchaser from paying Seller, when due, any amounts payable hereunder or pursuant hereto.

Ethyl-Treated Gasoline.—The Purchaser shall handle ethyl-treated gasoline in accordance with rules and regulations now in existence or which may be issued hereafter by any governmental agency having jurisdiction and shall have his employees properly instructed in respect to all said rules and regulations.

If Purchaser is required to obtain a license to handle, distribute or sell ethyl-treated gasoline, this agreement shall not be effective in respect of said gasoline at any time other than when such license is in full force and effect.

Indian Gasoline.—If this agreement covers Indian Gasoline, Seller shall not be obligated to deliver product until (a) Seller has an adequate supply thereof at its plant from which delivery shall be made to Purchaser, and/or (b) adequate facilities for the receipt and handling thereof have been installed by Purchaser. Seller, in its uncontrolled discretion, at any time, may discontinue selling and delivering Indian Gasoline hereunder.

Payments.—The Purchaser shall pay for goods without discount or deduction except as stated in this agreement; and if at any time the financial responsibility of the Purchaser shall become impaired or unsatisfactory to the Seller or in the Seller's opinion inadequate to meet the obligations hereunder, cash payments or satisfactory security may be required. A failure to pay any amount when due may at the option of the Seller terminate this agreement as to further deliveries.

Claims.—Any claims for defect or variance in quality or shortage in quantity shall be made, and the Seller shall be notified and given an opportunity to inspect, within two days after the product or goods are delivered, except that if delivery is made in equipment furnished by the Seller such notice and opportunity shall be given before the product or goods are unloaded; and if delivery is made in equipment furnished by the Purchaser such notice and opportunity shall be given before the products or goods move from point of shipment. If equipment furnished by the Seller is in bad order or leaking the Purchaser shall notify the carrier and secure examination by the authorized agent of the carrier as to the condition of the shipment before the same is unloaded. Failure of the Purchaser to comply with these requirements shall operate as a waiver of any and all claims by the Purchaser.

Taxes.—Purchaser assumes the payment of any tax and/or duty now or hereafter imposed, directly or indirectly, by the United States, or any State or foreign country, or governmental subdivision thereof, on (a) the goods covered by this agreement and/or (b) the production, manufacture, transportation, sale, use and/or other handling of said goods and/or (c) the production, manufacture, transportation, purchase, sale, use, exportation, importation and/or other handling of any material contained in said goods or from which said goods are wholly or partly refined or manufactured, and/or (d) the Seller on account of the sale or measured by the sales price of said goods; and the Seller may bill Purchaser for such tax or duty and the Purchaser shall pay the amount thereof.

Freight Rates.—The prices mentioned in this agreement are based on existing freight rates, and if under this agreement the Seller is to pay freight, then in case the rates are increased or diminished these prices shall be increased or diminished accordingly.

Monthly Shipments.—If this agreement extends over a period of months, shipments or deliveries shall be in equal monthly quantities unless otherwise stated in this agreement, the Purchaser having the option of varying the monthly quantities by ten per cent, provided that, subject to other provisions of this agreement, the agreed quantity must be taken within the time fixed.

Approximate Quantities.—In case deliveries are made in carload, boatload, transport truck or tankwagon lots, deliveries within ten per cent of amounts called for by this agreement or any installment thereof shall be deemed sufficient deliveries by the Seller, only the actual amounts delivered to be paid for.

Trademarks and Names.—Purchaser shall not sell products purchased from others under the trademark or trade name of Seller, unless Seller shall, after analysis thereof, give special consent in writing; Purchaser, however, shall have the right to use the trademarks and trade names of Seller to identify and advertise Seller's products by Purchaser on condition that Purchaser shall follow directions as to manner of such use given to Purchaser by Seller.

Assignability.—This agreement shall not be assigned by the Purchaser without the written consent of the Seller.

Approval and Signing By Seller.—Agreements involving $10,000 or less and covering one year or less may be approved and signed on behalf of The Texas Company by any of the following: by the Manager of National Sales Division; Manager of Roofing Division; Manager of Aviation Division; Manager of Marine Sales Division; and Division Managers and Assistant Division Managers.

All other agreements must be approved and signed by one of the following: by the Company's President; any Vice President; Secretary; General Sales Manager; Assistant General Sales Managers; Assistant to the Vice President of Sales Department; Manager of Dealer Sales; Manager of Industrial Sales; Manager of Operations; Managers and Assistant Managers of Territories of the Sales Department; Manager and Assistant Managers of Asphalt Sales Department; Manager and Assistant Managers of the Railway Traffic and Sales Department; Manager of Bulk, Fuel and Government Sales Division, and Manager of Purchasing Department.

Until approved and signed on its behalf as above stipulated, agreements are not binding on The Texas Company; and commencement of performance hereunder prior to such approval and signing shall in no case be construed as a waiver by The Texas Company of the foregoing requirements.

Until approved and signed on its behalf as above stipulated, agreements are not binding on The Texas Company, and commencement of performance hereunder prior to such approval and signing shall in no case be construed as a waiver by The Texas Company of the foregoing requirements.

[fol. 2542] LEASE

Agreement dated the day of ,19 , by and between THE TEXAS COMPANY, a Delaware corporation, having a place of business at (Lessor) and of (Lessee) Witnesseth:

(1)—Premises Leased. Lessor does hereby lease and permit Lessee to enter upon, use and occupy for the purposes and on the conditions herein set forth the following described property situated in the City of , County of , State of , described as follows:

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT O

together with the buildings, improvements, fixtures, equipment and facilities of Lessor now located on said premises as follows:

and such other buildings, improvements, tools, fixtures, equipment and facilities owned or leased by Lessor as may now be on said premises or as Lessor may hereafter, during the continuance of this lease, erect or place thereon.

(2)—Term. This lease shall remain in full force and effect for a period of one (1) year beginning and thereafter from year to year, subject to termination by either party at the end of the first year or any subsequent year on ten (10) days' prior written notice.

and ending

(3)—Rental. Lessee shall pay to the Lessor, as rent for the use of the above described premises:

Strike out Inapplicable Provision

(a) A sum of $ ..... per month; or,

(b) A sum for each month of the term, as follows:

For January $ .....
For February $ .....
For March $ .....
For April $ .....
For May $ .....
For June $ .....
For July $ .....
For August $ .....
For September $ .....
For October $ .....
For November $ .....
For December $ .....

The aforesaid rental shall be payable in advance, on the first day of each and every month; or

(c) A sum of $ ..... per month, plus ..... cents per gallon for each gallon of gasoline delivered to the demised premises for resale in excess of ..... gallons per month, such rental to be payable on the 10th day of each month following the month for which the rental is due.

[fol. 2543] (4)—Use. Lessee shall use the said premises and the buildings, improvements and facilities thereon primarily for the operation of a gasoline service station and the sale of automobile accessories; but in no event shall said premises be used for any unlawful or offensive purpose.

(5)—Maintenance. Lessee shall, during the term of this agreement, maintain the said premises, buildings and equipment, in good repair and in a clean, safe and healthful condition. In event of Lessee's failure so to do, the Lessor may make the necessary repairs for the account of Lessee. Lessee shall make no change, alteration or substitution in the demised premises, buildings or equipment, except such as may be necessary to enable Lessee to continue business on said premises, unless the consent in writing of Lessor be first obtained.

(6)—Licenses, etc. Lessee shall obtain all necessary licenses or permits to do business on the leased premises, which may be required by any municipal ordinance, state law or regulation, governmental authority, or otherwise, and shall pay all fees in connection therewith as well as fees imposed by reason of inspections of the leased premises or the equipment situated thereon.

(7)—Re-Delivery. Upon the expiration of this agreement or the termination thereof, Lessee shall yield up and return to Lessor the said premises, and all the said buildings, improvements, fixtures, tools, equipment and facilities in as good condition as when received by Lessee, ordinary wear and tear excepted.

(8)—Hold-over. If, at the expiration or termination of this lease or any extension thereof, Lessee should hold over for any reason, the tenancy of the Lessee thereafter shall be from month to month only and be subject to all of the other terms and conditions of this lease, in the absence of a written agreement to the contrary.

(9)—Gas, Water and Electricity. The Lessee, during occupancy of the leased premises, shall pay all charges accruing for gas, water and electricity. Upon his failure so to do, the Lessor may pay such charges and, in that event, such charges shall be added to the rental payable and shall be collectible as rent.

(10)—Lessee's Default. In event of abandonment of the said premises by Lessee, default by Lessee in the payment of rent or breach of any of the terms, covenants and conditions of this lease, or if bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings are instituted by or against Lessee, or if Lessee becomes insolvent, or if Lessee files a petition for a composition or extension under Section 74 or 77B of the Bankruptcy Act, or if any attachment, garnishment, execution, or any other legal process or proceedings is levied or instituted by anyone other than Lessor against the said premises, or any of the equipment thereon, or if Lessee sells, assigns, pledges, or mortgages the said premises, or any part thereof, or attempts to do so, or allows any lien to attach thereto, or in event of death of Lessee, Lessor may, without notice, immediately terminate this agreement and all Lessee's rights hereunder, and reenter and, in any manner, resume possession of said premises, improvements and facilities, the Lessee hereby waiving all statutory rights inconsistent herewith.

(11)—Waiver. It is agreed that the waiver by Lessor of any breach of any covenant, condition or stipulation contained herein shall not be considered to be a waiver of any subsequent breach of the same or any other covenant, condition or stipulation of this lease nor affect or prejudice any of Lessor's rights or remedies hereunder.

(12)—Leases Held By Lessor. This lease is subject to the terms and conditions of the lease, if any, between Lessor and the owner or tenant of the demised premises, and also any extension, renewal, or new lease on the demised premises; and this lease shall automatically terminate upon the termination, cancellation, or expiration of such lease or such extension, renewal, or new lease, as the case may be, depending upon which is the latest.

(13)—Notice. Notices from Lessor to Lessee shall be sufficient if placed in the United States mail, addressed to the leased premises, and any such notice shall take effect at the time of the mailing thereof. Notices from Lessor to Lessee shall also be sufficient if delivered to Lessee or left on the leased premises in any manner. Notices from Lessee to Lessor shall be sufficient if posted in the United States Mails, postage prepaid, to the Lessor's principal place of business in Lessor's sales district in which the leased premises are located.

(14)—Assignment. The lease hereby given may not be assigned, transferred or sublet, either in whole or in part, by Lessee without the written consent of Lessor. Lessor's consent, however, shall not be unreasonably withheld.

(15)—Approval and Execution by Lessor. This agreement shall not be binding upon the Lessor until approved and signed on its behalf by the Lessor's Executive Officer, Sales Manager, Assistant Sales Manager, Division Manager or Assistant Division Manager.

In Witness Whereof the Lessor and Lessee have hereunto caused their names to be subscribed the day and year first above written.

DEFENDANT EXHIBIT Q

2. Term: The term of this lease shall commence the day of , 19 , and end the day of , 19 ; provided, however, that either Lessor or Lessee shall have the right at any time during the term or any extension or renewal hereof, to terminate this lease on not less than seven (7) days' written notice to the other. If cancellation be other than at the end of a rental period, rentals for that month shall be reduced accordingly. If Lessee shall hold over after the expiration of the term with Lessor's express or implied consent, it shall be on a month to month tenancy in accordance with the terms hereof and subject to termination as above provided. This lease shall terminate forthwith upon termination of any lease which Lessor may have upon the premises covered hereby.

3. Rental: Lessee agrees to pay Lessor as rental

Said gallonage rental, if any, shall be paid as, when and in the manner specified by Lessor. Any cash rental shall be paid in full on or before the first day of the month for which it is due. Lessee shall keep on said premises accurate records of the amount, kind and grade of gasoline delivered into storage, which records shall be available to Lessor for verification and inspection at any and all reasonable times. If required by Lessor in writing, Lessee agrees to keep a true and accurate record of the gross revenue derived from all sales of merchandise and services upon the premises. Said record or statement shall be made in duplicate for each calendar month upon forms supplied by Lessor. Both copies of said record or statement shall be acknowledged before a Notary Public on or before the fifth day of each following month and immediately mailed to Lessor, at

4. Taxes and operating expenses: Lessee shall pay all taxes on products, property and improvements of Lessee placed or located upon said premises.

Lessee will conduct all operations on said premises and his business thereon in strict compliance with all laws, ordinances and regulations of governmental authorities; observe all rules of any common carrier which may deliver products thereon; pay all license fees required for the operation of said premises and for the conduct of the business thereon; pay all occupational, business excise or other taxes levied or imposed upon his operations on said premises or upon his business conducted thereon, or upon the handling, storage, withdrawal, distribution, sale or delivery of any and all products handled or sold upon said premises; and will pay all costs of handling, storing, distributing and selling products handled and sold by him, including all water, gas, heat, and electricity or other service used for his operations and in the conduct of his business.

Lessee shall have no authority to employ any persons as agents or employees for or on behalf of Lessor for any purpose, and neither Lessee, nor any other persons performing any duties or engaged in any work at the request of Lessee upon the leased premises shall be deemed to be employees or agents of Lessor, and Lessee shall be exclusively liable for the payment of any and all premiums, contributions and taxes for workmen's compensation insurance, unemployment insurance and for old age pensions, annuities, and retirement benefits now or hereafter imposed by or pursuant to Federal and State laws which are measured by the wages, salaries or other remuneration paid to such employees.

In event of Lessee's failure or refusal to pay any of the above taxes, fees or charges, Lessor may, at its option, pay the same, and the amount so paid shall become and constitute an indebtedness from Lessee to Lessor, and Lessor shall have the right to withhold and offset against the same any such sums due Lessee from Lessor.

[fol. 255] 5. Possession: Said premises shall be used solely for the purpose of conducting thereon a first-class automobile supply and service station and for the sale of gasoline, lubricating oil, greases, automobile tires, tubes, batteries, accessories, specialties and such other petroleum and other products commonly handled and sold in connection with the conduct of such business, and said premises shall be used for no other purpose whatsoever without the written permission of Lessor.

6. Repairs: Lessee shall not make any additions, improvements or alterations upon the demised premises without Lessor's prior written consent, and Lessee will at his expense keep the premises, improvements and equipment in good condition and repair and free from weeds, debris and rubbish and shall commit no nuisance or waste thereon or thereof. Lessor may, at its option, repair, paint or replace any or all of the improvements on said property. Lessee will not permit or suffer any mechanic's or materialmen's liens or any attachments, judgments or any liens or encumbrances of any kind or nature to be levied or enforced against said premises or the property hereby leased. Lessee shall return said premises, building(s), and equipment to Lessor at the expiration of the term hereof or any sooner termination of this lease in as good condition as received, reasonable wear and tear excepted.

7. Default: Lessee agrees that Lessor may at all times enter upon said premises to view and inspect the same. If Lessee fails to pay the rent as above provided, or to perform any of the covenants and conditions to be performed by Lessee hereunder, Lessor may enter upon said premises and expel Lessee therefrom, with or without process of court, and take full and complete possession thereof, and, at Lessor's option, forthwith terminate all of Lessee's rights hereunder. Waiver by Lessor of any breach by Lessee shall not be construed as a waiver of any subsequent or other breach, or bar strict enforcement of all provisions of the lease thereafter. In case Lessor should bring suit to compel performance of or recover for breach of any covenant, agreement or condition herein written, Lessee agrees to pay to Lessor reasonable attorney's fees to be added to the amount of the judgment and costs therein recovered.

8. Indemnity: Lessor shall not be liable to Lessee or to any person or persons whomsoever for any damage to property, or for injury to or death of any person arising out of or in any way connected with the possession, maintenance or operation of said premises, improvements or equipment, and Lessee hereby agrees to indemnify and save Lessor harmless from any and all loss or expense which may be incurred by it by reason of such damage or injury.

9. Assignment: Lessee shall not assign or transfer this lease or any interest therein, nor sublease the demised premises in whole or in part, without the written consent of Lessor first obtained, nor may this lease be assigned by operation of law. In the event of the bankruptcy (voluntary or involuntary) or insolvency of Lessee or any assignment by him for benefit of creditors, this agreement at the option of Lessor, shall be deemed terminated and shall not be an asset or property of the trustee in any such proceedings.

10. Notice: Any notices as provided herein may be given to Lessee by delivery in person or by registered mail addressed to Lessee upon or at the above demised premises, and any notices hereunder may be given to Lessor by registered mail addressed to it at Lessor may change its address at any time by written notice to Lessee.

11. Good Faith Deposit: Company hereby acknowledges receipt of the sum of Twenty-five dollars ($25.00) representing Good Faith Deposit, made by Lessee and it agrees to return the amount to Lessee upon expiration or sooner termination of this Lease, less any monies due Company hereunder by Lessee, at such expiration or sooner termination.

12. Cancellation of previous agreements and modifications: This lease cancels and supersedes any lease or other agreement of prior date between the parties hereto with reference to the possession of the demised premises and covers all the covenants, stipulations and provisions agreed upon by the parties hereto, and no employee, agent or representative of Lessor has authority to change, modify or alter the terms hereof and neither party is nor shall be bound by any inducement, statement, representation, promise or agreement not in conformity herewith.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused this lease to be executed the day and year first hereinabove written.

UNION OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, RETAIL DEALER GASOLINE CONTRACT

This Contract, made , 194 , between UNION OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, hereinafter called UNION, and , hereinafter called RESELLER:

Witnesseth:

1. Term and Quantity: Union agrees to sell and deliver and Reseller agrees to purchase and receive from Union during the period beginning , 194 , and ending , 194 , and from year to year thereafter until cancelled by either party at the end of any contract year upon at least thirty (30) days written notice, such quantities of gasoline as ordered by Reseller for resale at Reseller's premises at , but in no event less than the minimum quantities specified, and not to exceed, except at Union's option, the maximum quantities specified:

Minimum (Per Contract Year)	Maximum	Unit	Products
	Gallons	76 and 7600	Gasoline

This contract shall cease and terminate upon any termination of reseller's occupancy of premises above described.

2. Grade: Products shall be Union's regular commercial grades generally offered to Union's customers for similar use and sale at time and place of delivery. Union reserves the right to change or discontinue, from time to time, any such brands or grades.

3. Delivery: Union shall deliver said gasoline on Reseller's orders in fairly even monthly quantities to Reseller's premises; provided, however, that Union shall have the option of making deliveries at its convenience and keeping Reseller's storage filled to capacity. Union will not be required to make deliveries outside of business hours or on Sunday or holidays.

4. Price: Reseller shall pay Union for each delivery Union's applicable posted tank wagon price in effect at time and place of delivery.

The provisions of paragraphs numbered 5 to 11, inclusive, on the reverse side hereof are a part of this contract.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have executed this Contract.

UNION OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA

...Reseller

By

[fol. 253] 5. Payment: The purchase price of products delivered hereunder shall be paid in lawful money of the United States, without discount, at time of delivery. Upon Union's approval, however, which it may withdraw any time, payment for deliveries in any calendar month shall be made to Union by Reseller on or before the tenth day of the month next succeeding that of delivery. If Reseller shall fail to make any payment when due, such failure shall, at Union's option, be deemed a breach of the entire contract and Union may suspend deliveries hereunder until such payment has been made or may terminate this contract. Nothing herein contained shall limit the remedies of Union in the event of a breach.

6. Resale Provisions: Reseller shall not sell, offer, or advertise for sale any gasoline delivered hereunder at a price lower than Union's posted retail price, for gasoline of like grade and quality, in effect at time and for the place of resale. Reseller shall not grant any rebates, discounts or concessions, or resort to any device whereby any pur-

Reseller agrees to resell all gasoline delivered hereunder only under Union's brands and to maintain Union's brands, trade marks and names on the pumps and other facilities through which said gasoline is dispensed, and agrees not to mix, substitute or adulterate said gasoline with any other material.

7. Taxes: The amount of any tax, excise or charge now or hereafter imposed on Union by any Governmental authority upon, incident to, or as a result of the manufacture, storage, withdrawal from storage, transportation, distribution, sale or handling of the gasoline delivered hereunder or measured by the proceeds of such distribution or sale shall, unless it is specified herein that such tax is included in the prices stated, be added thereto and be paid on demand by Reseller to Union.

8. Liabilities: The obligation of the parties hereunder shall be suspended and excused:

(a) if Union is prevented from or delayed in producing, manufacturing, transporting or delivering, in its normal pre-war manner any product or products hereunder or the materials from which such product or products are manufactured or if its costs of performance are abnormally increased; or

(b) if Reseller is prevented from or delayed in taking deliveries hereunder;

because of acts of God, earthquake, fire, flood or the elements, malicious mischief, insurrection, riots, strikes, lockouts, boycotts, picketing, labor disturbances, war; compliance with any directive, order or regulation of any governmental authority or representative thereof acting under claim or color of authority; loss or shortage of products deliverable hereunder or of any part of Union's own or customary transportation or delivery facilities, or for any reason beyond Union's or Reseller's reasonable control, whether or not similar to the foregoing. Whenever such causes in Union's judgment require the restriction of deliveries, Union reserves the right in its discretion to restrict deliveries to Reseller without liability, whether or not delivering to others.

9. Breach of Contract: Time is of the essence hereof. In the event of a breach of any of the provisions of this contract, it may be forthwith terminated at the option of the party not in default. The waiver of any breach shall not be deemed to be a waiver of any other or subsequent breach of the same or other provisions hereof.

10. Entire Contract: This contract shall terminate and supersede, as of the commencement date hereof, all prior contracts between the parties covering the sale and delivery of gasoline for the use herein specified. This contract covers the entire agreement of the parties and no employee, agent or representative of Union has authority to change or modify its terms, and there are no inducements, promises, representations or warranties affecting it.

11. Assignment: This contract shall not be assignable by Reseller or by operation of law without Union's prior written consent, but otherwise shall be binding upon and shall inure to the benefit of the parties, their representatives, successors and assigns.

This information was obtained from Company's basic report of classified motor oil sales for part of the period involved, together with information obtained from reports of employee-operated, and lessee-operated stations. Sales for other retail outlets was estimated from classified motor oil sales reports for the period such reports were available. Segregation of retail motor oil sales, by States, was accomplished by use of the same formula as for gasoline.

[fol. 2561] DEFENDANTS' EXHIBIT U

RICHFIELD OIL CORPORATION, SALES CONTRACT

This Agreement, executed this day of , 19 , between RICHFIELD OIL CORPORATION, hereinafter referred to as "Seller", and hereinafter referred to as "Buyer",

Witnesseth: That

1) Seller agrees to sell and deliver to Buyer and Buyer agrees to purchase from Seller, as ordered by Buyer during the term hereof, the following petroleum products in yearly quantities not greater than the maximum nor less than the minimum amounts hereinbelow specified for the respective products, the same to be taken in fairly equal monthly quantities:

	Minimum	Maximum
Gasolines	gals.	gals.
Lubricating Oils	gals.	gals.
Greases	lbs.	lbs.

The obligation of Seller to deliver the minimum quantities above specified shall at all times be subject to Seller's right to be exercised within its sole and exclusive discretion with or without notice to discontinue, restrict and or curtail the delivery of and or to change the specifications of any product in the event of shortage of products, crude, base materials, additives, transportation, or labor and or for any reason similar or dissimilar to the foregoing. Failure of Seller to fill any order or orders by reason of the aforesaid causes shall reduce the purchase obligations of Buyer to that extent. In the event that Seller is unable to make deliveries to all of its customers by reason of any of the causes set forth in this paragraph and yet is able to make some deliveries, its failure to make deliveries in whole or in part to Buyer even while making deliveries of the same or similar commodities to other buyers or consignees or to its own bulk storage and distributing plants, agents and distributors for sale and delivery to the general public, shall not constitute a default by Seller.

2. This agreement shall commence as of the day of , 19 , and shall extend to and including the day of , 19 ; subject, however to termination by Seller at any time during the term hereof by means of a five (5) day notice in writing to Buyer.

3. The products agreed to be sold and delivered hereunder are for resale by Buyer to the retail trade. Buyer agrees not to resell any of the products delivered hereunder which bear, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand or name of Seller or which is sold through pumps or other vending equipment bearing the trade mark, brand or name of Seller, except at the price designated by Seller as the resale price of such product. Seller shall have the right to change the designated resale price of any of the products to be delivered hereunder at any time or from time to time during the term hereof by written or oral notice directed to Buyer. Attached hereto marked "Schedule A" and hereby made a part of this contract is a schedule of the products to be delivered hereunder as of the date of the commencement of this contract. Set opposite the name of each gasoline ~~listed in~~ Schedule A is a price which Seller hereby designates as the resale price of such gasoline effective at the execution of this contract and until further notice. Seller reserves the right to designate resale prices for all other products listed in said Schedule A for which prices are not designated. Seller shall have the right at any time and from time to time during the term hereof to add to the products listed on said Schedule A any other brand of gasoline, lubricating oils and greases which it may hereafter produce and manufacture and to designate a resale price therefor; and Seller shall also have the right at any time and from time to time during the term hereof to discontinue sale of any of the products listed in said Schedule A and in such event this agreement shall terminate as to such products but shall remain effective for all other purposes.

4. The prices to be paid by Buyer to Seller for the two grades of gasoline to be sold and delivered hereunder shall be the designated resale prices thereof at the time and place of delivery to Buyer, less 4c per gallon.

Prices to be paid by Buyer to Seller for products other than the aforesaid two grades of gasoline delivered hereunder shall be Seller's posted or list prices to service station dealers in effect at the time and place of delivery. Seller's posted or list prices to service station dealers in respect to such products are set forth in Schedule "A" hereof. The posted price of any such product shall be subject to change by Seller at any time and from time to time during the term hereof.

5. Deliveries hereunder shall be made to Buyer's service station at State of . All gasoline sold hereunder shall be delivered by tank truck, tank truck and trailer, or such other method of delivery as Seller shall select, and Buyer agrees to maintain storage, which shall conform with all laws and governmental regulations, into which said gasoline may be delivered.

6. In addition to the prices herein provided, Buyer shall pay Seller any and all taxes, increase in taxes or new taxes not included in the prices herein specified, on the products covered by this agreement and or on and or measured by the production, manufacture, transportation, sale, use and or other handling of said products.

7. Buyer shall pay Seller cash on delivery for all products delivered hereunder unless otherwise mutually agreed upon from time to time. No allowance of credit shall prevent Seller from returning at any time, at Seller's election, to a cash on delivery basis.

8. Failure or refusal of Buyer to comply with the terms of this agreement or to promptly make payment when due on all products delivered hereunder shall entitle Seller to suspend deliveries until any breach is remedied or payment is made, or to forthwith terminate this agreement.

9. In the event that performance on the part of the Seller of any or all of the terms of this agreement is prevented or impeded in whole or in part, or in the event that the cost of such performance by Seller is abnormally increased by reason of acts of God, acts of public administrators, war, governmental regulations or restrictions, strikes, labor disturbances, perils of the sea, riots, fires, floods, earthquakes, embargoes, inability to obtain supplies or labor, loss or shortage of producing, manufacturing or transportation facilities and/or any other cause or causes beyond Seller's control, or in the event, by means of statute, law, ordinance, order, mandate, decision, judgment, decree, rule or regulation of any governmental body, board, tribunal, court or official, whether specifically directed against Seller or Buyer hereunder or this contract or operations hereunder, or otherwise, performance hereunder is interfered with or regulated, or any loss or disadvantage is suffered by Seller due to an enforced or resultant reduction in prices or incurrence of liability or penalty under or in connection with any other contract because of the existence of this contract, performance by Seller hereunder shall be excused, and/or Seller shall be privileged to forthwith terminate this agreement without any liability whatever on its part.

10. If Buyer purchases Ethyl or Ethyl-treated gasoline hereunder, he shall sell said gasoline in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Surgeon General of the United States and other health officers. Unless Buyer complies with the terms and provisions of this paragraph, Seller shall not be obligated to sell or deliver Ethyl or Ethyl-treated gasoline hereunder.

11. Neither this agreement nor any of the rights, powers or privileges of Buyer hereunder shall be assignable by Buyer without the written consent of Seller.

12. Any demands or notices required or permitted to be served hereunder shall be deemed properly served when deposited, postage prepaid, registered, in the United States mail, addressed to Buyer at the address specified in paragraph 5 hereof, or to Seller at 555 South Flower Street, Los Angeles 13, California. In lieu of mailing, as aforesaid, such demands and notices may be personally served upon Buyer.

13. Buyer hereby acknowledges execution hereof without reliance upon any representations, warranties, promises or assurances other than those written herein.

14. This agreement terminates as of the date of commencement hereof all contracts between the parties hereto or their assignors covering sale and delivery of petroleum products to Buyer's service station described in paragraph 5 hereof.

In Witness Whereof, the parties have executed this agreement the day and year first hereinabove written.

part of a month shall be duly prorated on the basis of the rent for said month as herein specified. In addition to the aforesaid rental, Lessee shall pay to Lessor as rental for each month of the effective term hereof a sum computed by multiplying the total number of gallons of gasoline in excess of the number of gallons set forth below, received by Lessee on the demised premises during the month for which payment is being made, for resale and distribution therefrom, by the rates following, to-wit:

For the month of January	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of February	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of March	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of April	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of May	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of June	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of July	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of August	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of September	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of October	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of November	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons
For the month of December	¢ per gallon of gasoline in excess of	gallons said payments to be made on or before the tenth day of the next succeeding calendar month. In case of fractional monthly periods the number of gallons shown in the last column above will be duly prorated and the gallonage rental will be paid on the gallons of gasoline delivered in excess of such prorated amount.

Use

2. The improvements, buildings and facilities erected and located on the demised premises are designed for the operation of a gasoline service station thereon, and Lessee shall use the demised premises and property primarily for such purpose; and in no event shall said premises be used for any unlawful or offensive purpose, nor shall Lessee commit any nuisance thereon. In the event the sale of gasoline or other petroleum products upon the demised premises or the operation of a gasoline service station thereon is prevented by law or the whole, or such part of the demised premises as will render the balance thereof unsatisfactory for the operation of a gasoline service station thereon, is taken for public use, this lease shall forthwith terminate.

Maintenance

3. Lessee shall, during the term thereof, maintain the demised premises, improvements, buildings, trees, shrubs, lawns, fixtures and equipment in good order and repair and in a clean and safe condition. In the event of Lessee's failure so to do, Lessor may enter upon the demised premises and make the necessary repairs for the account of Lessee and/or may terminate this lease. Lessee shall make no material change or alteration in the demised premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment except such as may be necessary to enable Lessee to continue business on said premises, unless the consent in writing of Lessor be first obtained.

Redelivery

4. Upon the expiration or sooner termination of this agreement, Lessee shall yield up and return to Lessor the demised premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment in as good condition as when received by Lessee, damage and depreciation due to ordinary wear and use excepted; and shall pay Lessor the cost of restoring the premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment to the condition in which they were at the time when received by Lessee, damage and depreciation due to ordinary wear and use excepted, together with the value of any equipment lost or damaged beyond repair. Lessor shall not be liable to Lessee for any property left by Lessee in or on the demised premises.

Act of God

5. Should a substantial part of the improvements on the demised premises be destroyed by act of God, fire, explosion, the elements or any cause not due to the negligence, neglect or willful act of Lessee and be thereby rendered unsatisfactory for the conduct of Lessee's business thereon, Lessor shall be privileged to terminate this lease or repair the premises in which event rent payable by Lessee hereunder shall be abated for the time and to the extent that he is prevented from using the premises or any part thereof.

Utilities

6. During the occupancy of the demised premises, Lessee shall pay all charges accruing for gas, water, electricity, telephone and other public utilities, and shall not permit any liens to attach to the demised premises. Upon failure of Lessee in this respect, Lessor may, but shall not be obliged to, pay such charges and lien obligations, and add the same to the rental payable hereunder.

Default

7. Should Lessee at any time fail to faithfully and diligently comply with the terms, conditions and covenants of this lease on his part to be performed, or should Lessee abandon or vacate the demised premises, or should Lessee default in payment of rent at the time due, or should bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings under the bankruptcy laws of the United States or any state be instituted by or against Lessee, or should any attachment, garnishment, execution or any other legal proceedings be levied or instituted by anyone other than Lessor against the premises or any of the equipment thereon in any action in which Lessee is named as defendant, or should Lessee attempt to sell, assign, pledge or mortgage the said premises or any part thereof, or allow any lien to attach thereto, or should Lessee enter into a composition for the benefit of creditors, Lessor may, without notice, immediately terminate this lease and re-enter and resume possession of the premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment.

Waiver

8. The waiver of any breach hereunder shall not be deemed a continuing waiver or a waiver of any subsequent breach, whether of the same or a different provision of this agreement.

Assignment

9. This lease shall not be assignable, voluntarily or by operation of law, nor shall Lessee sublet any part of the demised premises without the written consent of Lessor first having been obtained.

Indemnity

10. Lessee agrees to indemnify and hold Lessor free and harmless from any and all claims for damage to property or injury to or death of person or persons occurring upon the demised premises or arising out of any of the operations

[fols. 2569-2570] 3-C Service Station Lease

This lease, made and entered into this day of , 19 ; by and between , herein called "Lessor," (whether one or more and when referred to by pronoun the singular neuter gender will be used), and Richfield Oil Corporation, herein called "Lessee."

Witnesseth:

That in consideration of the payment by Lessee of the rent herein specified and of the mutual covenants herein contained, Lessor hereby demises and leases unto Lessee and Lessee takes and rents from Lessor that certain real estate situated in the City of , County of , State of , described as follows:

together with all appurtenances thereunto belonging, and together also with the buildings, facilities, equipment and other improvements located thereon and listed in the inventory hereto attached marked "Exhibit A," which inventory is by this reference incorporated in this lease and made a part hereof for all purposes, and with all other improvements, if any, hereafter erected or placed thereon by Lessor.

To have and to hold the above demised and leased real estate and improvements (hereinafter referred to collectively as "premises"), and all rights, privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging, unto Lessee, its successors and assigns, for the term commencing the day of , 19 , and ending the day of , 19 , unless this lease shall be sooner terminated in a manner herein provided.

The following shall constitute the covenants of this lease, and the parties hereto agree as follows:

1. Lessee shall pay as full rental for said real and personal property during the effective term of this lease the following amounts at the following times:

All rent shall be paid in lawful money of the United States by check or draft to the order of Lessor and mailed to or to such other address as Lessor may from time to time designate in writing.

2. The improvements, buildings and facilities erected and located on the demised premises are designed for the operation of a gasoline service station thereon, and Lessee shall use the demised premises and property primarily for such purpose; and in no event shall said premises be used for any unlawful or offensive purpose, nor shall Lessee commit any nuisance thereon. In the event the sale of gasoline or other petroleum products upon the demised premises or the operation of a gasoline service station thereon is prevented by law, or the whole, or such part of the demised premises as will render the balance thereof unsatisfactory for the operation of a gasoline service station thereon is taken for public use, this lease shall forthwith terminate.

3. Lessee shall use the demised premises and improvements with due and reasonable care and on termination hereof shall deliver up said premises and improvements unto Lessor in good order and condition, damage and depreciation due to reasonable use, ordinary wear and tear, fire, storm, flood, earthquake, action of the elements, strike, riot, labor disturbances, war and unavoidable casualties and matters beyond the control of Lessee excepted. Lessor agrees to commence, within ten (10) days after receipt of notice in respect thereto from Lessee, all repairs and or replacements necessary in order to keep and maintain the leased property in a suitable condition for the operation by Lessee of a gasoline service station.

[fol. 2571] 4. Lessee shall have the right and privilege of erecting, placing, operating and maintaining on said premises all buildings, structures, improvements, driveways, tanks, containers, piping, signs, appliances and equipment of any nature on, under and above the ground that it may require or desire to use in operating, transacting and conducting on said premises the business of storing, marketing and distributing petroleum products and automobile accessories by means of a gasoline and oil filling and service station, or by other marketing methods, and by any other business incident to that of a service station; it being understood that Lessee is not hereby restricted from using said premises for any other lawful purpose. Lessee shall have the further right and privilege of painting all or any part of the property leased hereunder so long as said property is not thereby unreasonably damaged; and Lessee may make such changes as it desires to any existing structures and improvements, but any structural alterations or changes made to improvements belonging to Lessor shall become part of the real estate and may not be removed by Lessee at the end of the term of this lease.

5. At any time during the term of this lease and upon termination thereof by lapse of time or in any manner and within a reasonable time thereafter Lessee may, at its option and expense, remove from said premises any and all buildings, structures, improvements, money safes or chests, equipment, appliances or other property of whatsoever nature placed or owned by it thereon, whether or not affixed to the premises or to any improvement on the premises (except alterations made to Lessor's improvements), and after such removal shall restore the surface of the ground to its uniform and even condition, free from all excavations and debris and within said time Lessee at its option may paint out and/or otherwise remove from the premises its trade colors together with all trade signs, names and insignia, including signs and insignia belonging to Lessor, and irrespective of the manner in which said signs and insignia are attached to the premises, provided, however, that if Lessee at such time shall be in default in the payment of rents or any other charges hereunder, Lessor shall have a lien on said buildings, structures and improvements to secure payment of such rents or charges. Should Lessee fail to remove any buildings, structures and other property belonging to it located upon the demised premises within a reasonable time after such termination of this lease, title to the same shall pass to Lessor.

6. Lessee shall have the right to make proper connections with any and all water, gas and power lines and pipe lines on or serving the demised premises, and may continue the use and service thereof during the term of this lease. Lessee shall be liable for and agrees to pay all charges for water, gas, electric current, telephone and any other public utility or service used by it.

7. Lessor agrees to pay before delinquency all general and special taxes and special assessments with respect to the premises leased hereunder. Lessee agrees to pay all taxes levied and assessed or to be levied and assessed upon its own improvements and property located on said premises, it being understood that Lessee shall not be liable for any special taxes or special assessments save with respect to Lessee's own property.

8. Lessor agrees not to conduct or permit to be conducted on premises controlled by Lessor, if any, within two hundred (200) yards of the premises demised and leased, any business venture from which petroleum products other than those supplied by Lessee are sold or distributed.

9. Lessor warrants that title to the premises demised hereby is vested in Lessor, free and clear of all liens, clouds and encumbrances except and current taxes not delinquent, and that there are no municipal or other governmental restrictions, leases or other agreements with respect to said premises that would affect the use of all or any part thereof for a gasoline service station. In the event Lessor's interest in the demised premises is a leasehold interest Lessor agrees to faithfully fulfill and perform the terms of the lease to which this lease is subject so as not to cause any default of Lessor in any of the terms thereof. Lessor shall be liable to Lessee for any damages suffered by Lessee by virtue of a termination of any such prior lease, arising out of default of Lessor herein thereunder.

10. In the event Lessee shall be in default in the payment of rentals or other charges hereunder or shall otherwise breach its covenants or obligations hereunder, and shall be and remain in default for a period of thirty (30) days after notice from Lessor to it of such default. Lessor shall have the right and privilege of terminating this lease and declaring the same at an end and of entering upon and taking possession of said premises, and shall have the remedies now or hereafter provided by law for recovery of rent, repossession of the premises and damages occasioned by such default.

In the event Lessor shall breach or be in default in the performance of any of the covenants or obligations on it herein imposed, and shall remain in default for a period of thirty (30) days after notice from Lessee to it of such default, Lessee shall have the right and privilege of terminating this lease and declaring the same at an end, and or shall have the remedies now or hereafter provided by law for recovery of damages occasioned by such default.

The waiver by either party of any breach of this lease by the other, or of any right to which such party is entitled, shall not be deemed a waiver by such party in any other instance, or for any other breach or right.

In any action between the parties hereto, their successors or assigns, for a breach or for the enforcement of any of the terms or conditions of this lease, a reasonable attorney's fee, to be fixed by the court, shall be added to and be made a part of the recoverable costs in such action, in favor of the successful party.

11. If at any time during the term hereof Lessor, or if there be more than one, any Lessor, shall be indebted to Lessee on any account whatsoever, Lessee shall have the right to apply any rental accrued or accruing upon said unpaid indebtedness and Lessor agrees that the amount so applied shall constitute rental payment hereunder. In particular, but without limitation as to the foregoing, Lessee may offset against rentals payable hereunder rentals payable by Lessor to Lessee under any sublease of the property leased hereunder.

12. In the event Lessor during the term hereof receives from a third party a bona fide offer to purchase the leased premises, or any part thereof, or any holdings of Lessor of which the leased premises are a part, and shall decide to sell the same for the amount named in said offer, Lessor shall promptly give to Lessee written notice of the terms of such offer and of Lessor's willingness to sell for the price offered, and Lessee shall have the option and privilege of purchasing the premises subject to such offer at said price and shall notify Lessor in writing within ten (10) days after the date it receives notice from Lessor whether Lessee will purchase said premises for the amount specified in said offer. In the event Lessee shall not give Lessor within said ten (10) day period of Lessee's election to purchase for the amount specified in said offer, Lessor may thereafter sell said premises to the party making the offer, subject, however, to the leasehold estate and rights herein granted to Lessee. Irrespective of whether or not said premises are sold to such party, notice of any subsequent bona fide offers acceptable to Lessor shall be given to Lessee upon the same terms and conditions for acceptance or refusal, as hereinabove provided.

13. In the event of any termination of that certain Operator's Lease executed concurrently herewith, by the terms of which Lessee herein as Lessor therein subleases the premises demised hereby, Lessee shall be privileged to forthwith terminate this lease by means of a ten (10) day notice in writing to Lessor. Any notice of the aforesaid nature may be served by Lessee at any time after but not before any termination of said Operator's Lease.

14. All notices given under this instrument shall be in writing and may be given by depositing the notice in the United States registered mail, postage prepaid, enclosed in an envelope addressed to the party to be notified at such party's address as shown in this instrument, or at any other known address of any Lessor, and the date upon which such notice is so mailed shall be treated as the date of service; or such notice may be served on Lessor in person or on an officer or manager of Lessee. If there be more than one Lessor, notice to any of them shall constitute notice to all.

15. This agreement and each and all of the covenants, obligations and conditions hereof, shall inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the heirs, personal representatives, successors and assigns of Lessor, and the successors and assigns of Lessee. Although designated in the singular number as "Lessor," if there be more than one, they and each of them shall be jointly and severally bound by the obligations, conditions and covenants herein imposed. Lessee may assign this lease or sublet the premises or any part thereof without the consent of Lessor, but in the event of any such assignment or subletting Lessee shall at all times remain liable to Lessor for payment of rents and for the faithful performance of all obligations imposed upon Lessee hereunder.

16. The parties hereto agree that neither the making, execution nor delivery of this lease has been induced by any representation, statement, warranty or agreement other than those herein expressed, and that all proposals, negotiations and representations with reference to matters covered by this lease are merged in this instrument. The parties understand and agree that regardless of any partial performance or other circumstance, this lease shall not become binding upon Lessee until it has been signed on its behalf by its President, Vice President or duly authorized agent, and that no amendment or modification hereof shall be valid unless evidenced in writing and signed by one of such officers or agents.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have executed this lease the day and year first above written.

Operator's Lease

This lease, executed this _____ day of _____; 19____, between Richfield Oil Corporation, herein called "Lessor," and _____, herein called "Lessee," (whether one or more and when referred to by pronoun the singular neuter gender will be used).

Witnesseth:

That in consideration of the payment by Lessee of the rent herein specified and of the mutual covenants herein contained, Lessor hereby demises and leases unto Lessee and Lessee takes and rents from Lessor those certain premises in the City of _____, County of _____, State of _____, more particularly described on the reverse side hereof in paragraph numbered "15" hereof, together with all appurtenances thereunto belonging, and together also with the buildings, facilities and equipment embraced within the terms of the lease referred to in paragraph numbered "11" hereof, and such buildings, facilities and equipment as may be placed upon said premises by Lessor herein under and pursuant to said latter lease.

To have and to hold unto Lessee for the term commencing the _____ day of _____, 19____, and ending the _____ day of _____, 19____, unless this lease shall be sooner terminated in a manner herein provided.

The following shall constitute the covenants of this lease, and the parties hereto agree as follows:

1. Lessee shall pay to Lessor as rent for said real and personal property during the effective term of this lease the amounts set forth on the reverse side hereof in paragraph numbered "16" hereof, at the times and in the manner as in said paragraph provided.

2. The improvements, buildings and facilities erected and located on the demised premises are designed for the operation of a gasoline service station thereon, and Lessee shall use the demised premises and property primarily for such purpose; and in no event shall said premises be used for any unlawful or offensive purpose, nor shall Lessee commit any nuisance thereon. In the event the sale of gasoline or other petroleum upon the demised premises or the operation of a gasoline service station thereon is prevented by law, or the whole, or such part of the demised premises as will render the balance thereof unsatisfactory for the operation of a gasoline service station thereon, is taken for public use, this lease shall forthwith terminate.

3. Lessee shall, during the term hereof, maintain the demised premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment in good order and repair and in a clean and safe condition at Lessee's cost and expense. In the event of Lessee's failure so to do, Lessor may enter upon the demised premises and make necessary repairs for the account of Lessee and/or may terminate this lease. Lessee shall make no change, alteration or substitution in the demised premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment except such as may be necessary to enable Lessee to continue business on said premises, unless the consent in writing of Lessor be first obtained.

4. Upon the expiration or sooner termination of this agreement Lessee shall yield up and return to Lessor the demised premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment in as good condition as when received by Lessee, damage and depreciation due to ordinary wear and use excepted; and shall pay Lessor the cost of restoring the premises, improvements, buildings, fixtures and equipment to the condition in which they were at the time when received by Lessee, damage and depreciation due to ordinary wear and use excepted, together with the value of any equipment lost or damaged beyond repair.

5. Should any of the improvements on the demised premises be destroyed by act of God, fire, explosion, the elements or any cause not due to the negligence, neglect or willful act of Lessee and be thereby rendered unsatisfactory for the conduct of Lessee's business thereon, Lessor shall be privileged to terminate this lease or repair the premises, in which event rent payable by Lessee hereunder shall be abated for the time and to the extent that he is prevented from using the premises or any part thereof.

6. During the occupancy of the demised premises Lessee shall pay all charges accruing for gas, water, electricity, telephone and other public utilities, and shall not permit any liens to attach to the demised premises. Lessee shall also pay the total amount of all taxes and assessments levied or imposed against all property of Lessee located on the premises. Upon failure of Lessee in this respect Lessor may, but shall not be obligated to, pay such taxes and/or charges and add the same to the rental payable hereunder.

7. In the event Lessee shall at any time during the term hereof be in default in respect to the payment of rent herein provided or in respect to the performance of any other of the provisions hereof, or should Lessee abandon or vacate the demised premises, Lessor shall be privileged at its option to resume possession of the demised premises, with or without process of law; thereupon, at Lessor's option, this lease and all of the rights of Lessee hereunder shall forthwith terminate. In the event of such re-entry by Lessor, Lessor shall be privileged to possess and to hold all property of Lessee which may be situated on the demised premises as a pledge to secure payment by Lessee of any sum or sums which may be due or owing to Lessor by Lessee on any account or accounts whatever. The foregoing remedies shall be in addition to those now or hereafter provided by law.

8. The waiver of any breach hereunder shall not be deemed a continuing waiver or a waiver of any subsequent breach, whether of the same or a different provision of this agreement.

9. This Lease shall not be assignable, voluntarily or by operation of law, nor shall Lessee sublet any part of the demised premises without the written consent of Lessor first having been obtained. This lease shall not become an asset of the estate of Lessee but shall terminate on his death.

10. Lessee agrees to indemnify and hold Lessor free and harmless from any and all claims for damage to property or injury to or death of person or persons occurring upon the demised premises or arising out of any of the operations of Lessee, his agents or employees, thereon or thereabout during the term hereof.

11. Although this instrument is designated as a lease, it is nevertheless understood that it is in fact a sublease and is subordinate and subject to all the terms, provisions and conditions contained in that certain lease dated the day of , 19 ; by and between , as lessor, and , as lessee (to whose interest Lessor herein has succeeded). The expiration, relinquishment or termination of said lease for any cause whatsoever, or any transfer, re-assignment or relinquishment by Lessor of its interest in said lease of the demised premises shall of itself result in the termination of this lease without any notice or action whatever on the part of Lessor or Lessee herein. Any termination hereof shall be without any liability on the part of Lessor, and in the event of such termination Lessor shall be obligated only to return to Lessee any rent paid in advance hereunder, which obligation shall exist only in the event that at the time of such termination Lessee shall not be in default in respect to any of the provisions hereof.

12. In the event of any termination of that certain Operator's Sales Contract executed concurrently herewith by and between the parties hereto, covering the purchase and sale of Lessee's entire requirements of certain petroleum products for resale from the premises demised hereby, Lessor shall be privileged to terminate this lease by means of a five (5) day notice in writing to Lessee.

13. Any demands or notices required or permitted to be served hereunder shall be deemed properly served when deposited, postage prepaid, registered, in the United States mail, addressed to Lessee at the address of the demised premises, or to Lessor at 555 South Flower Street, Los Angeles 13, California. In lieu of mailing, as aforesaid, such demands and notices may be personally served upon Lessee.

14. This agreement shall not be binding upon Lessor until executed by a duly authorized officer or agent of Lessor and a fully executed copy hereof delivered to Lessee.

In witness whereof, the parties have executed this lease as of the date first hereinabove written.

[fol. 2573] 3-C Operator's—Sales Contract

This agreement, executed this day of , 19 , between Richfield Oil Corporation, hereinafter referred to as "Seller," and , hereinafter referred to as "Buyer," (whether one or more and when referred to by pronoun the singular neuter gender will be used).

Witnesseth: that

1. Seller agrees to sell and deliver to Buyer and Buyer agrees to purchase from Seller, during the period commencing , 19 , and ending , 19 , Buyer's entire requirements of the following automotive petroleum products for resale from the service station hereinafter mentioned, provided, however, that in no event shall Buyer purchase and receive during any calendar month of the term hereof less than the minimum quantities specified below:

	Minimum
Gasolines	gals.
Lubricating Oils	gals.
Greases	lbs.

2. The products agreed to be sold and delivered hereunder are for resale by Buyer to the retail trade. Buyer agrees not to resell any of the products delivered hereunder which bear, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand or name of Seller or which is sold through pumps or other vending equipment bearing the trade mark, brand or name of Seller, except at the price designated by Seller as the resale price of such product. Seller shall have the right to change the designated resale price of any of the products to be delivered hereunder at any time or from time to time during the term hereof by written or oral notice directed to Buyer. Attached hereto marked "Schedule A" and hereby made a part of this contract is a schedule of the products to be delivered hereunder as of the date of commencement of this contract. Set opposite the name of each gasoline listed in said Schedule A is a price which Seller hereby designates as the resale price of such gasoline effective at the execution of this contract and until further notice. Seller reserves the right to designate resale prices for all other products listed in said Schedule A for which prices are not designated. Seller shall have the right at any time and from time to time during the term hereof to add to the products listed on said Schedule A any other brand of gasoline, lubricating oils and greases which it may hereafter produce and manufacture and to designate a resale price therefor, and Seller shall also have the right at any time and from time to time during the term hereof to discontinue sale of any of the products listed in said Schedule A and in such event this agreement shall terminate as to such products but shall remain effective for all other purposes. Seller reserves the right at any time or from time to time to change the specifications of any product to be sold and delivered hereunder.

2. The prices to be paid by Buyer to Seller for Seller's Ethyl or First Structure Gasoline and Seller's Hi-Octane or Second Structure Gasoline shall be Seller's designated resale prices thereof at time and place of delivery to Buyer, less 4c per gallon. Should Seller elect to market a Third Structure Gasoline, the price therefor shall be Seller's designated resale price thereof at time and place of delivery to Buyer, less 5c per gallon. Seller shall have the right to change its said designated resale prices at any time or from time to time during the term hereof by written or oral notice directed to Buyer.

Prices to be paid by Buyer to Seller for products other than gasoline delivered hereunder shall be Seller's posted or list prices to service station dealers in effect at the time and place of delivery. Seller's posted or list prices to service station dealers in respect to such products are set forth in Schedule "A" hereof. The posted price of any such products shall be subject to change by Seller at any time and from time to time during the term hereof.

4. Deliveries hereunder shall be made to Buyer's service station at _____, _____ State of _____. All gasoline sold hereunder shall be delivered by tank truck, tank truck and trailer, or such other method of delivery as Seller shall select, and Buyer agrees to maintain storage, which shall conform with all laws and governmental regulations, into which said gasoline may be delivered.

5. In addition to the prices herein provided, Buyer shall pay Seller any and all taxes, increase in taxes or new taxes not included in the prices herein specified on the products covered by this agreement and or on and or measured by the production, manufacture, transportation, sale, use and or other handling of said products.

6. Buyer shall pay Seller cash on delivery for all products delivered hereunder unless otherwise mutually agreed upon from time to time. No allowance of credit shall prevent Seller from returning at any time, at Seller's election, to a cash on delivery basis.

7. Failure or refusal of Buyer to strictly comply with the terms of this agreement or to promptly make payment when due on all products delivered hereunder shall entitle Seller to suspend deliveries until any breach is remedied or payment is made, or to forthwith terminate this agreement.

8. Seller shall be privileged at any time and from time to time during the term hereof to paint in its colors and insignia the buildings and equipment constituting the service station mentioned in paragraph numbered "4" hereof. In the event of any termination of this agreement prior to the expiration date set forth in paragraph numbered "1" hereof Buyer shall forthwith pay to Seller a sum equal to the total of all monies expended by Seller in performing such painting during the two (2) year period preceding such termination.

9. In the event that performance on the part of the Seller of any or all of the terms of this agreement is prevented or impeded in whole or in part, or in the event that the cost of such performance by Seller is abnormally increased by reason of acts of God, acts of public administrators, war, governmental regulations or restrictions, strikes, labor disturbances, perils of the sea, riots, fires, floods, earthquakes, embargoes, inability to obtain supplies or labor, loss or shortage of producing, manufacturing or transportation facilities and/or any other cause or causes beyond Seller's control, or in the event, by means of statute, law, ordinance, order, mandate, decision, judgment, decree, rule or regulation of any governmental body, board, tribunal, court or official, whether specifically directed against Seller or Buyer hereunder or this contract or operations hereunder, or otherwise, performance hereunder is interfered with or regulated, or any loss or disadvantage is suffered by Seller due to an enforced or resultant reduction in prices or incurrence of liability or penalty under or in connection with any other contract because of the existence of this contract, performance by Seller hereunder shall be excused and/or Seller shall be privileged to forthwith terminate this agreement without any liability whatever on its part. Failure of Seller to fill any order or orders by reason of the aforesaid causes shall reduce the purchase obligations of Buyer to that extent. In the event that Seller is unable to make delivery to all of its customers by reason of any of the causes set forth in this paragraph and yet is able to make some deliveries, its failure to make deliveries in whole or in part to Buyer, even while making deliveries of the same or similar commodities to other buyers or consignees or to its own bulk storage and distributing plants, agents and distributors for sale and delivery to the general public, shall not constitute a default by Seller.

10. Buyer agrees to comply with all laws, statutes, and ordinances of all governmental authorities.

11. Neither this agreement nor any of the rights, powers or privileges of Buyer hereunder shall be assignable by Buyer without the written consent of Seller.

12. Any demands or notices required or permitted to be served hereunder shall be deemed properly served when deposited, postage prepaid, registered, in the United States mail, addressed to Buyer at the address specified in paragraph 4 hereof, or to Seller at 555 South Flower Street, Los Angeles 13, California. In lieu of mailing, as aforesaid, such demands and notices may be personally served upon Buyer.

13. In the event by means of statute, law, ordinance, order, mandate, decision, judgment, decree, rule or regulation of any governmental authority, board, tribunal, court or official, whether specifically directed against either party hereto or this contract or the 3-C transaction of which this contract is a part, or operations hereunder, or otherwise, performance hereunder is interfered with or regulated, or any loss or disadvantage is suffered by Seller due to an enforced or resultant reduction in prices or incurrence of any penalty under or in connection with any other contract because of the existence of the contract or said 3-C transaction, Seller may forthwith terminate any or all instruments constituting said 3-C transaction.

14. Buyer hereby acknowledges execution hereof without reliance upon any representations, warranties, promises or assurances other than those written herein.

15. This agreement terminates as of the date of commencement hereof all contracts between the parties hereto, or their assignors, covering sale and delivery of petroleum products to Buyer's service station described in paragraph 4 hereof.

In witness whereof, the parties have executed this agreement the day and year first hereinabove written.

It was further stipulated that all objections to questions propounded to the said witnesses shall be reserved by each of the parties, save and except any objections as to the form of the questions propounded.

It was further stipulated that if the witnesses should be instructed not to answer questions propounded by counsel, in the absence of the Notary Public, it shall be deemed that the Notary Public has so instructed the witnesses to answer, but that the witnesses still refuse to answer.

[fol. 2621] FRANCIS S. OLAINE, a witness called on behalf of the plaintiffs, being first duly cautioned and sworn by the Notary Public to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, testified as follows:

Direct examination.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Will you state your name?
A. Francis S. Olaine.
Q. Your address?
A. 225 Bush Street, San Francisco.
Q. Your present position?
A. Analyst, Distribution Department.
Q. What is the nature of your duties in connection with that position?
A. Well, the basic function of the Distribution Department is to arrange for the distribution of Petroleum products to points where they are required and when they are required and at the lowest practicable distribution costs.
Q. How long have you held that position?
A. Six years in the analyst capacity, and——
Q. Have you served in other capacities previously?
A. Yes. In distribution work I have been with the Company twenty-five years.
Q. You are acquainted, of course, with the distribution system of Standard Oil in the states generally known as the Western Area? I refer to the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, and Arizona, and also New Mexico.

[fol. 2622] Mr. Hall: Well, pardon me a minute, Mr. Thrody. As disclosed by our Answer in this case, the Standard Oil Company of California does not distribute in the State of New Mexico and has no dealers in the State of New Mexico. So, I think that is out. I am sure it is out as far as this witness is concerned.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. With the exception of the State of New Mexico then, you are acquainted with the distribution setup of Standard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In these other states I have mentioned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are the various refineries located?

A. There are three of them in California: at Richmond, at Bakersfield, and at El Segundo.

Q. Do these refineries provide the source of gasoline for those States referred to in the Western Area, with the exception of New Mexico?

A. Not entirely. We also obtain gasoline from a refinery at Salt Lake City and from a refinery at El Paso, Texas.

Q. The crude oil which is used in the three refineries you have referred to, which are owned by Standard, could you tell us where said crude originates from with respect to each of those?

A. No. I am not qualified to answer that question.

Q. Well, I understand your knowledge begins after the refinery?

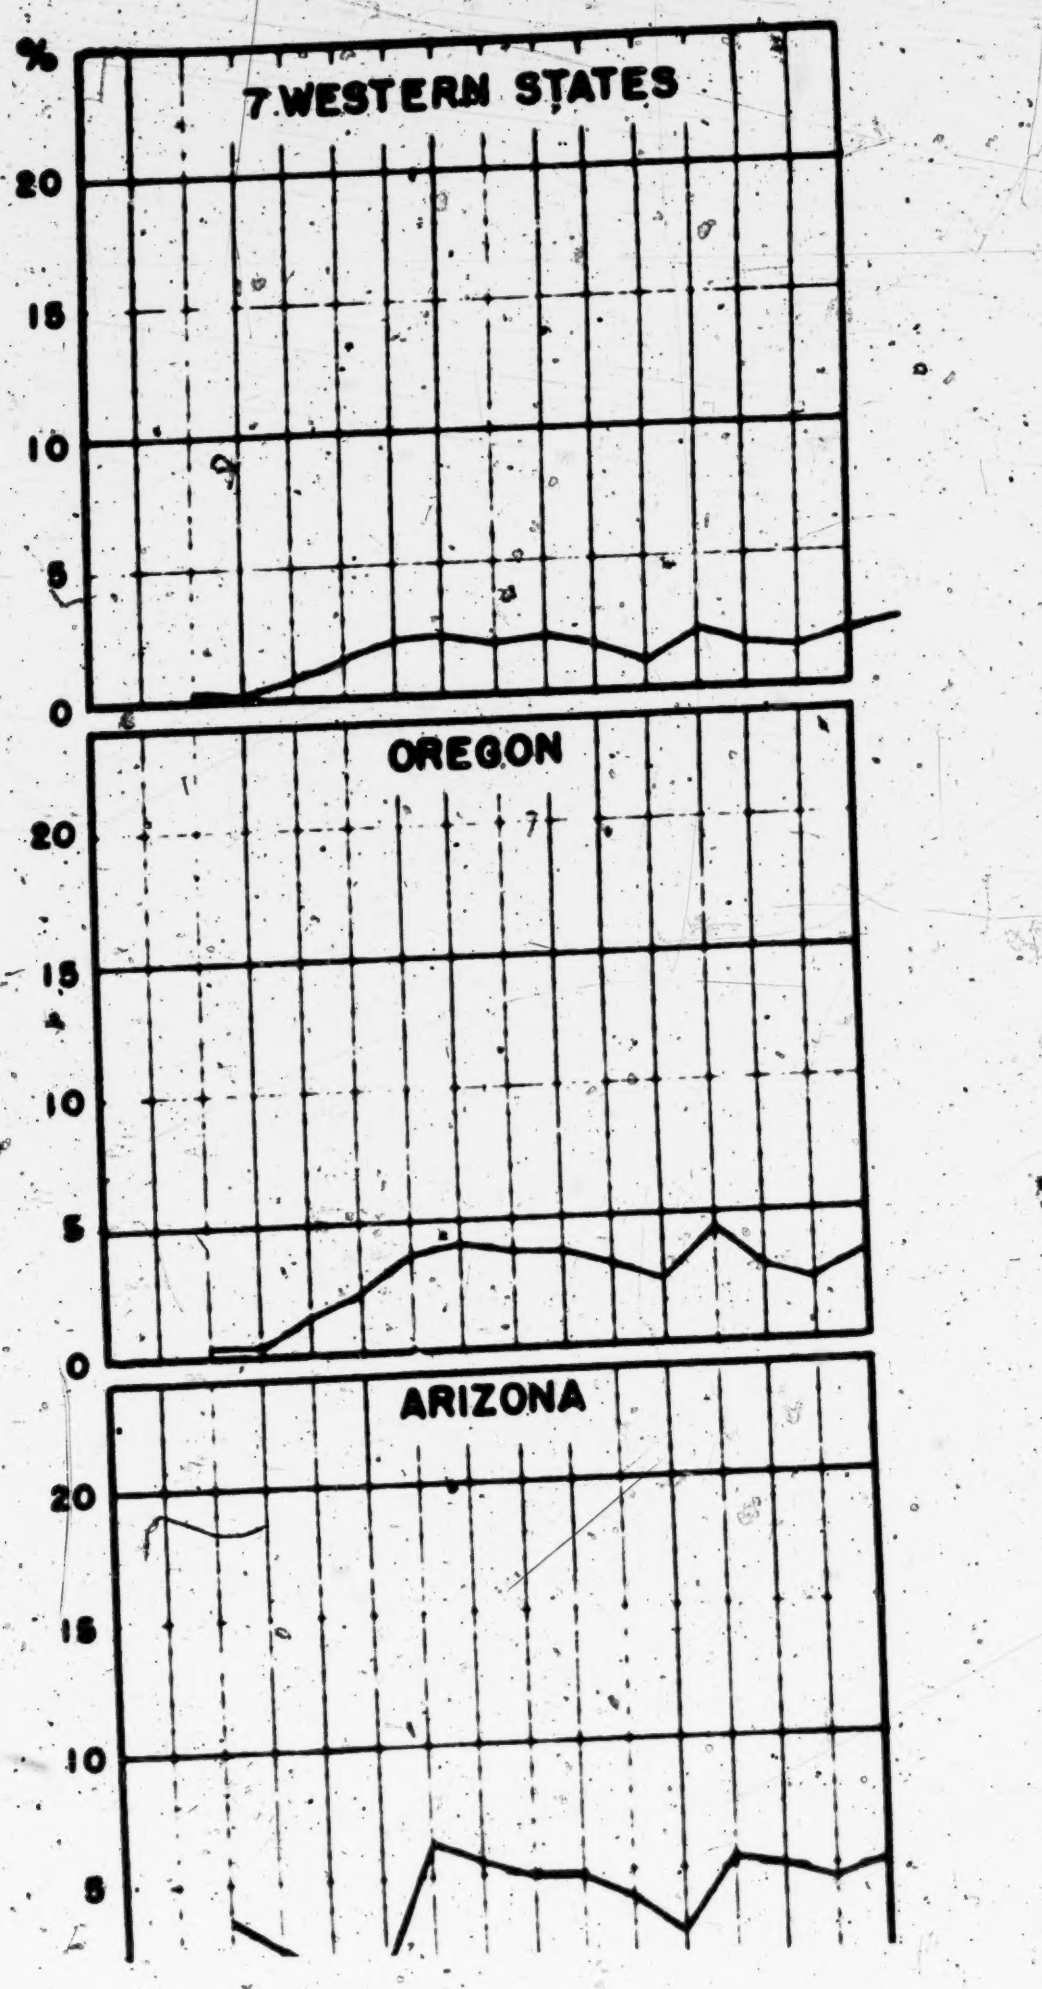
A. Yes. Generally speaking, when the products are in finished form and in distribution for our bulk plants.

[fol. 2623] Q. Now, in the marketing area that is referred to in these seven states is there any general pattern of distribution which is followed—do you have certain distribution areas?

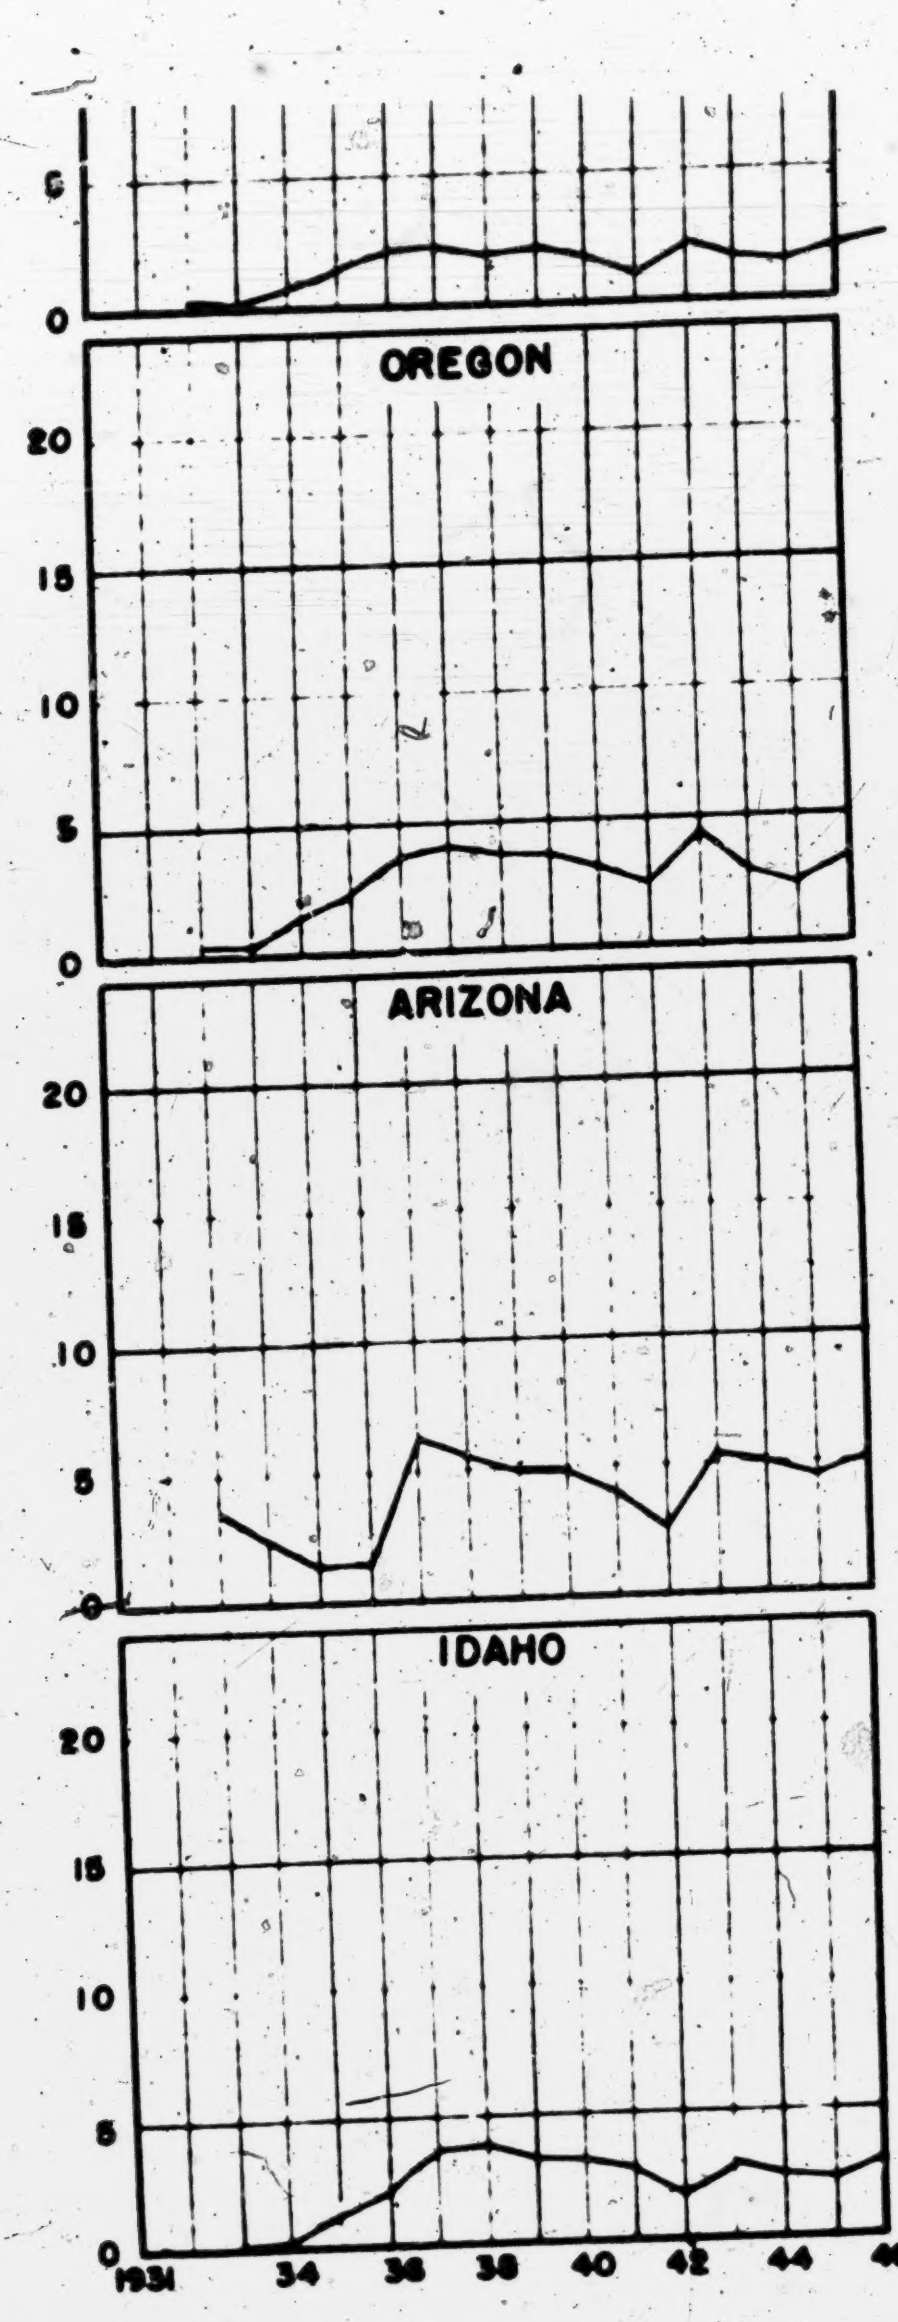
A. Yes. As indicated on the map, we have approximately twenty-four.

Q. Twenty-four?

A. Twenty-three that are numbered, and there are two carrying the same number because they are from the same source.



Q. I think you better refer to the map. Will the Reporter mark this map for identification?



(The said map was marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit A for Identification.)

Q. Could you tell us who prepared this map (referring to Exhibit A.)?

A. I prepared it.

Q. And it does represent the various distributing areas of the seven western states?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you indicate to us the distributive areas?

A. There are twenty-three marked——.

Q. You said there are twenty-four.

A. The reason for the twenty-four is that these two areas here (indicating) are supplied direct from Richmond by tank car and truck, and we use the same number because——

Mr. Hall: The witness has just been referring on Exhibit A for Identification to the areas which are marked "2".

Mr. Thrody: That is correct.

[fol. 2624] Q. Could you indicate to us, Mr. Olane, the distributive areas that are supplied by your Richmond refinery?

A. Well, I can. I will refer to them by the source of their supply. For instance, this area here as indicated on these accompanying sheets here (indicating).

Q. I think for the record it might be better to refer to the number.

A. Distributive Area No. 11 is supplied from terminals at Sacramento, Napa and San Rafael.

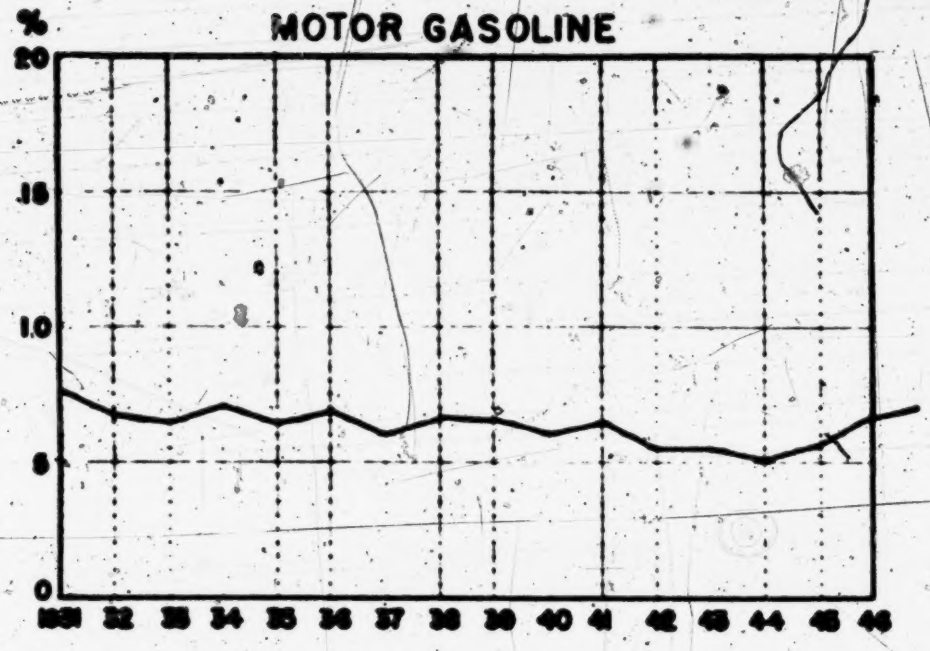
Q. Now, each of these terminals you refer to in Distributive Area No. 11 receive their gasoline from the refinery——

A. By barge.

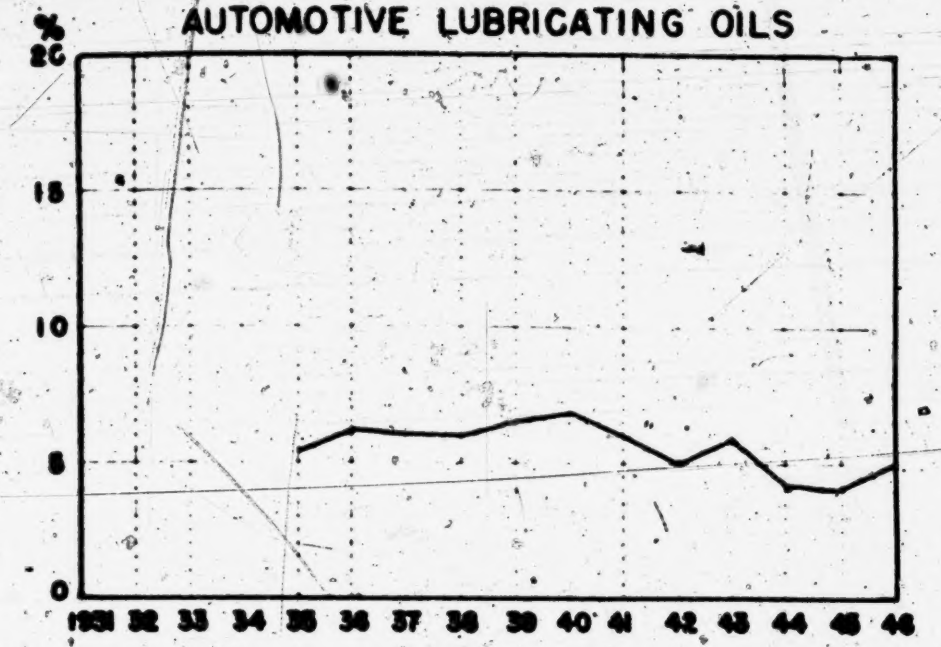
Q. —by barge?

A. Each of these three marine terminals, and they in turn redistribute by tank car and by tank truck into the area marked No. 11.

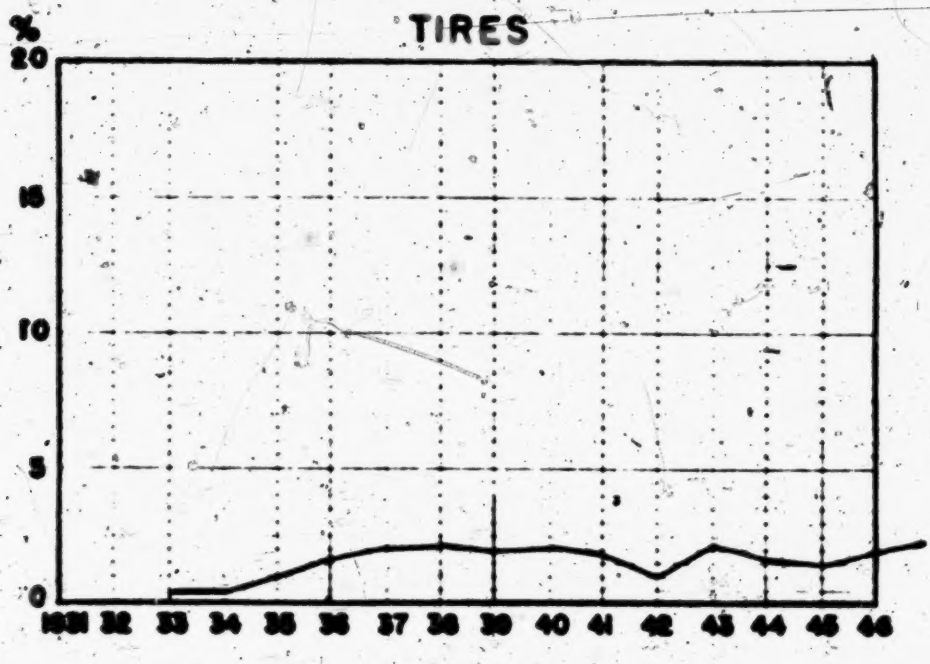
Mr. Hall: I think you can shorten this a great deal, Mr. Thrody, if I may make a suggestion.



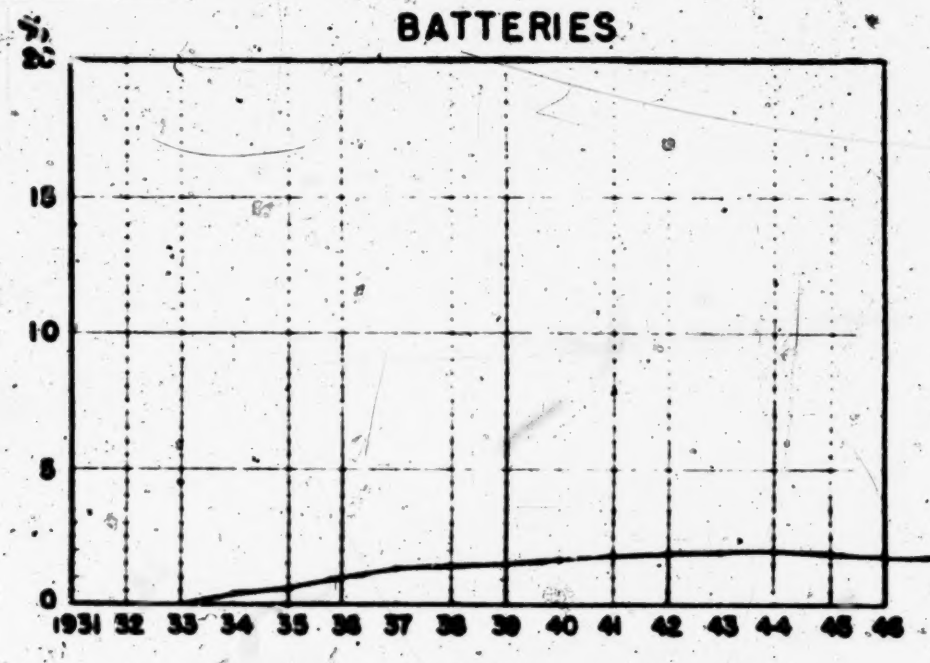
Mr. Thrody: Please do so.



Mr. Hall: By reference to the explanatory sheets that the witness has provided which with respect to each of the numbered districts shows the point from which the products originate and how they pass to the bulk plants.



Mr. Thrody: Yes. I see. With respect to No. 11, that is precisely the information we developed.



Q. All right. Can you generalize with the statement you have before you, Mr. Olane, on the distribution outlets of these various distributive areas; is there any common uni[fol. 2625] form pattern as far as the general procedure of distribution in each distributive area, or are the problems of distribution peculiar to each area?

A. ——

Mr. Hall: Now, that isn't clear to me, that question, Mr. Thrody. I will interpose an objection to the form of the question.

Mr. Thrody: I will withdraw the question.

Mr. Hall: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Mr. Olane, with respect to Distributive Areas Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, you have indicated they are supplied from the Richmond refinery, is that correct?

A. 1 and 2 are the Richmond refinery,——

Q. Oh.

A. —and 3 is the Bakersfield refinery; and 4 is the El Segundo refinery.

Q. And in those cases do I understand the supply is directly from the refinery itself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the means of transporting from the refinery, in the instance of Area No. 1, you have indicated by barge, tank cars and/or tank trucks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who owns those tank cars and those barges and tank trucks for Area No. 1, or for all distribution from the refineries?

A. We do not, as I understand it, own the tank cars. They are a lease arrangement with which I am not entirely familiar.

Q. You have them under lease from the—— [fol. 2626] A. From the tank car company.

Q. But they are under your direction and control?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You dispatch those cars and so on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How is the gasoline, and so, distributed from the refineries picked up at the—is there some section, some particular division of the refinery that dispenses the gasoline?

A. Well, in each case the—there are loading racks for the tank cars and loading racks for the tank trucks, and, of course, the barges at Richmond are loaded over the wharf.

Q. Now, are these tank cars and these tank trucks—are they manned by personnel of Standard?

A. Well, in speaking of tank cars manned, how is the term used?

Q. By the personnel.

A. We simply load the tank cars—our personnel load them, and also the tank trucks and also the barges.

Q. The tank cars, and they are handled by the railroad, they also like any other shipment of goods?

A. That is right.

Q. And the tank trucks, do you have your own fleet of tank trucks?

A. We hire commercial tank trucks, and we also have our own motor tank trucks.

Q. At all times though the tank trucks are under your jurisdiction and control—you dispatch them and you know at the time the approximate time of departure and the approximate time of arrival?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2627] Q. They leave the loading tank rack, and they are conveyed where in each area? You say in connection with the group here, No. 1——

Mr. Hall: If you are going to use that, hadn't it be marked as an exhibit—marked Exhibit A-1 for Identification?

Mr. Thrody: Yes. Will you mark this?

(The document entitled "Bulk Distribution—Map Exhibit 'A' " was marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1 for Identification" and is attached hereto.)

Q. After they leave the loading rack of the refineries, they are conveyed by these various methods to what points—what will be the ultimate destination in these areas be? First, destination from the refinery, and then the ultimate destination.

Mr. Hall: Just a minute. What do you mean by "they"?

Mr. Thrody: I am referring to the tank cars and tank trucks. They are dispatched from the refinery to—where would they go in these various areas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you address yourself, Mr. Olane, to the first group of distributive areas, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, again, and tell us the steps in the distribution of gasoline from the refineries to the ultimate service stations in those particular areas? Now, you indicate here that the gasoline leaves the refinery by tank cars. Can you trace it through the various steps from the refinery to the service stations?

A. Well, I can only trace it as far as the bulk plants as indicated on this explanation here (Referring to Exhibit A-1).

Q. After the tank trucks and tank cars referred to there—after they leave the refinery, they place the gasoline in bulk——

A. Plants.

Q. —plants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are these bulk plants owned by Standard Oil?

A. Well, I don't know that I am qualified technically to answer that question. We speak of all of these points shown as our bulk plants, but whether they are actually owned, I don't know that I am qualified to——

Mr. Hall: They all belong to Standard Oil Company of California, if you want that stipulation.

Mr. Thrody: Fine.

[fol. 2629] Q. How are the orders placed by the bulk plant operators? Do you receive the orders from them or do you give them a ready supply?

A. Well, there are two systems; where bulk plants are supplied directly from the refineries, the bulk plants——

Q. I am referring only to that group.

A. Yes. The bulk plants place their orders directly on the refineries. We have a distribution department office at the Richmond refinery and at the El Segundo refinery, and these orders are sent directly to them and they arrange for the shipment from the refineries.

Q. From the bulk plants, how is the gasoline placed into the distribution channels, the movement of the stock from the bulk plants?

A. Well, that is beyond our jurisdiction.

Q. How is the gasoline sold? What are these various bulk plant operators; are they employees of Standard?

A. Well, there again I am not fully qualified on that. They may be or they may not. I am not familiar with just what——

Q. Do they buy the gasoline on consignment or do they buy or is it all Standard—does Standard have title to that gasoline in the bulk plants?

Mr. Hall: That is a legal conclusion. We will object on that ground.

A. I am sorry. I am not qualified to answer that. We arrange to see that these bulk products are supplied to these bulk plants, but I am not qualified to say just what the [fol. 2630] selling and——

Mr. Hall: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Then as I understand, Mr. Olane, then it is your testimony on this first group that the gasoline is shipped directly from the refineries to the various bulk plants?

Mr. Hall: And, if I may first interrupt, you are referring to Exhibit A-1 and to the Distributive Areas Nos. 1 to 4, inclusive, is that correct?

Mr. Thrody: That is correct.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell us how many bulk plants are located in each of these distributive areas?

A. No, sir, I cannot. I would have to determine that.

Q. Are the dots on Plaintiff's Exhibit A for Identification —the dots in each of these areas, black dots, do they refer to the location of the various bulk plants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They——

A. Now, I might qualify that. That map was issued back in July and there may be some stations there that have been closed or there may have been a few that may have been opened, but otherwise they are approximately the marketing plants throughout these various states.

Q. Is there any set delivery time for gasoline from the refineries to the bulk plants, to each of the bulk plants? Do you have a regular pattern, a regular schedule?

[fol. 2631] A. Well, from Richmond to these points they are supplied in Distributive Area No. 1 by barge. Barges operate on a twenty-four hour basis, and in some cases they may make delivery at one time at night and at other times during the day. In connection with delivery by tank car and tank trucks, generally speaking that would be a day time delivery. I mean, the cars might be put in at any time but they will be unloaded during the day time.

Q. On the barges, where it is indicated the barges are used, that is continuous shipments from the refinery—you say, it is over a twenty-four hour period?

A. In Distributive Area No. 1 those barges operate in San Francisco Bay here on a twenty-four hour basis.

Q. Then the movement and flow of gasoline through barges is continuous over the twenty-four hour period each day?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hall: Well, now, wait a minute. That was with respect to Area No. 1 only.

Mr. Thrody: That is the only one that refers to barges?

Mr. Hall: Oh, no.

A. There is a considerable number of them wherein there are barges.

STIPULATIONS REGARDING THE TAKING OF DEPOSITIONS

It is hereby stipulated by and between plaintiff and defendants, by their respective attorneys, that depositions of

Mr. Hall: Barges on the Columbia River,——

Mr Thrody:

Q. But only as far as the barges on No. 1,——

A. Distributive Area No. 1.

[fol. 2632] Q. And then what is the time of loading for tank cars on Areas Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4? Is that continuous or is that just during certain hours of the day?

A. That is during the normal working hours of the day at the refineries.

Q. Now, that is so with respect to each of these areas referred to in the first category, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4?

A. With respect to tank cars.

Q. Tank cars, that is what I understand. You mean by that that the deliveries are made every day to——

A. (Interposing) The loading of tank cars. We have a five day work week at the refineries. In other words, there is no loading, generally speaking, on Saturday, and, of course, none on Sunday or on holidays. But during the normal working hours, why, tank cars are loaded every day.

Q. So, for five days each week then tank cars will be leaving for these various bulk plants?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that correct—somewhere in these various areas, in the areas to which you have referred, 1, 2, 3, and 4?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the schedule for loading of tank trucks?

A. I am not familiar with the tank trucks loading schedule because I believe in some cases they operate beyond the normal eight hour working day and they may operate until later on in the evening. I am not familiar with just what those schedules are.

Q. Would they load every day?

[fol. 2633] Mr. Hall: Whereabouts, Mr. Thrody?

Mr. Thrody: I am referring to the particular four distributive areas, 1, 2, 3, and 4.

Mr. Hall: Where generally the products are coming directly from the refineries to?

Mr. Thrody: That is all.

Q. The testimony you have given refers only to this category?

A. Yes.

Q. Every day then tank trucks will be——

A. (Interposing) Dispatched, yes.

Q. Those tank trucks and tank cars will go directly to the bulk plants in each of those areas referred to?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Each day?

A. Yes, sir, substation bulk plants in those areas.

Q. Is there any established routine or delivery schedule for each bulk plant? By that I mean, for instance, every Thursday does "Bulk Plant X" receive a delivery of gasoline, or is it only in pursuance of the orders placed by them?

A. That is right, in pursuance of the orders placed by them. There is no specific day or time that these orders are to arrive.

Q. So, each bulk plant would not necessarily receive a daily shipment?

A. Oh, no, sir—no, sir.

Q. Do you know of the capacity of each of—the gasoline capacity of each—refining capacity of each of the refineries?

[fol. 2634] A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you have a breakdown on the types of petroleum products, the classifications of various types of petroleum products distributed by you? In the industry is there any general recognized classification of petroleum products?

A. Well, I don't know just exactly how to answer that question. Petroleum products will cover a very considerable number.

Q. Are they referred to sometimes as package goods and sometimes as bulk goods?

A. Oh, yes, sir. That is what we have in this sheet.

Q. This refers to—only to——

A. (Interposing) Bulk products.

Q. And by bulk products——

Mr. Hall: Just a minute. When counsel said "this," he was referring to document which has been marked Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1 for Identification.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. In preparing Exhibit A-1 for Identification, you used the term "bulk distribution." What is meant by that term?

A. Bulk distribution is meant to apply on those products that are moved from the refineries in tank cars, tank trucks,

Civil Action No. 6159-Y

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiffs,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a Corporation, and Standard Stations, Inc., a Corporation, Defendants

Be It Remembered, that on Tuesday, the 9th day of March 1948, at 2:00 o'clock p. m., and Wednesday, the 10th day of March, 1948, at 9:00 o'clock a.m., pursuant to stipulation between counsel for the respective parties, at Room 1712, Standard Oil Building, 225 Bush Street, San Francisco, California, personally appeared before me, Edith Goewey, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Francis S. Olaine, L. M. Bussert, and Harry T. Hays, witnesses called on behalf of the plaintiffs herein.

W. A. Thody, Esquire, and Lawrence W. Somerville, Esquire, Special Assistants to The Attorney General, appeared as attorneys for the plaintiffs.

Messrs. Lawler, Felix & Hall, represented by John M. Hall, Esquire, and Messrs. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, rep-[fol. 2620] resented by Henry G. Hayes, Esquire, appeared as attorneys for the defendants.

The said witnesses, having been by me first duly cautioned and sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in the above-entitled cause, did thereupon depose and say as hereinafter set forth.

It was stipulated between counsel for the respective parties that the Notary Public, after administering the oath to the witnesses, need not remain further during the taking of these depositions.

It was further stipulated that the said depositions should be recorded stenographically by Harry A. Cannon, a competent official shorthand reporter and a disinterested person, and thereafter transcribed by him into longhand typewriting, to be read to or by the said witnesses, who, after making such corrections therein as may be necessary will subscribe the same.

and barges, and in tankers. Now, we are referring to the entire sheet there, I presume?

Q. Yes.

A. That covers all of those types of transportation handling what we refer to as bulk products.

Q. Does the term "bulk products"—or "bulk distribu-[fol. 2635] tion" also refer to products other than gasoline?

A. Yes, sir. Refers to gas oils or other products that would be handled by these means of transportation, handling them in bulk form.

Q. Could you list them? What is embraced by "gas oil"?

A. Well, in our company we have products known as Standard diesel fuel, Standard stove oil, Standard furnace oil.

Q. Now, in—do all of the items go to the bulk plants?

Mr. Hall: You mean, all of the items he referred to in his previous answer?

Mr. Thrody: All the items referred to in the previous answer.

A. Not necessarily. There will be some bulk plants that will carry one or two grades of motor gasolines, possibly one grade of these gas oils I have just mentioned. Other plants will carry all grades of these various products.

Q. In respect to those classifications referred to in your previous answer, will the bulk plants have facilities for segregation in individual tanks, or will they have separate tanks for it?

A. They will have separate tanks. For example, a bulk plant that handles two grades of motor gasoline and one grade of gas oil, there will be three tanks, one for each grade of motor gasoline and one for the gas oil.

Q. Are lubricating oils included in the bulk distribution group?

A. Well, there are very few of these bulk plants that have bulk storage facilities for handling lubricating oils. Generally speaking, these bulk plants receive their lubricating [fol. 2636] oils in package goods. That is generally speaking, of course, in this entire area (indicating) with all of these various bulk plants.

Q. And by "package goods" you are referring to—I would like to introduce or have marked for identification, the discussion marked "Package Goods Distribution—Map Exhibit 'B' ". Will you mark this "B-1 for Identification"?

(The statement entitled "Package Goods Distribution—Map Exhibit 'B'" was marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit B-1 for Identification.")

Q. Did you prepare this?

A. Yes, sir, I prepared this statement with respect to the map.

Mr. Thrody: Will you mark this map for identification?

(The map relating to Exhibit V-1 was marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit B for Identification.")

Q. Will you tell what this represents?

Mr. Hall: Counsel refers to the document just marked for Identification "Plaintiff's Exhibit B."

A. There are four identified distributive areas that are marked "A," "B," "C," and "D," which show the approximate areas that are served by the Richmond refinery, the El Segundo refinery, and the Willbridge and Point Wells Distribution Terminals.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. You prepared these?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your official capacity as Analyst in the Distribution Section?

[fol. 2637] Mr. Hall: He prepared them at our request, Mr. Thrody. I dont think that falls within his official duties, but they were prepared by him because of his knowledge of the subject matter.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. In reference to your testimony to the Distributive Areas 1, 2, 3, and 4 referred to in Exhibit A-1, in every instance does the gasoline go from the refinery only to bulk plants or in some instances does it go to marine terminals?

A. In some instances it goes to marine terminals insofar as District No. 1 is concerned, and in District—no, that is all—District No 1.

Q. Could you tell us what a marine terminal is?

A. That is a bulk plant that has facilities to receive bulk stock by barges and/or tankers, and also has facilities for redistributing that stock by tank cars and/or tank trucks.

Q. It is not necessarily a larger storage facility than a regular bulk plant?

A. Yes, sir, they would have larger facilities than the so-called bulk plants which are located at inland destinations and receive stocks by tank cars and/ tank trucks only.

Q. Do you know the capacity of this marine terminal which is supplied in Distributive Area No. 1 referred to in Exhibit A-1?

A. No, I do not have the information available here with respect to the tankage facilities at the various marine terminals in Distributive Area No. 1.

Q. Is there a standard size for the capacity of the vari-[fol. 2638] ous bulk plants? Is there any uniform standard as to size? I assume there are large bulk plants and small bulk plants?

A. Yes, there are. Very definitely it varies with the size of the communities, the area which the bulk plant serves. I am not qualified to say there is a uniform measure for those plants. I know that in a great many of them there are certain size tanks that are of a certain capacity that generally are used, but they will vary from bulk plant to bulk plant.

Q. In Distributive Area No. 1, referred to in Exhibit A-1, do you know of the size of any of the bulk plants in that area?

A. Well, the number of points that are located in Distributive Area No. 1, I can presume from my—just my experience in handling shipments to those places that there are bulk plants that have tanks that are approximately 463 barrels capacity. That is known as a 10½ by 30 foot tank. We have a great many of those throughout our entire distributive areas, so I am quite certain there are tanks of that size in these bulk plants.

Q. What are these bulk plants used for?

A. They are used to receive bulk products in large quantities for redistributing, over which we have no jurisdiction, in small quantities to their particular marketing area.

Q. Are they used for storage purposes?

A. Well, yes. That is why they are there, for storage purposes, so they can stock from those tanks.

Q. On a permanent basis?

A. Yes, sir, on a permanent basis.

[fol. 2639] Q. Or is it storage for—in connection with the distribution and the subdistribution?

Mr. Hall: Your question is not clear, Counsel. I am going to object to it on the grounds it is vague and uncertain, it calls for a conclusion of the witness, speculation and conjecture.

Mr. Thrody: In the placing of these bulk plants, was there any study made as to the particular advantages of one location over another?

Mr. Hall: Referring to the number of plants generally or in any particular?

Mr. Thrody: In general—in, well, in general.

A. Well, the bulk plants are not under the jurisdiction of the Distribution Department, and we do not determine their location, but no doubt the department that handles that puts in adequate study in determining the geographical location of a bulk plant, for example, to serve their particular trade that is available in that area.

Q. I understand from your testimony then its principal function is for redistribution?

A. The bulk plants?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. I refer to now in exhibit marked for identification A-1 to the second category of distributive areas, Area No. 5, and Area No. 6. I notice that you have indicated that these areas are supplied by tank cars and/or tank trucks from the Salt Lake City refinery—Salt Lake City refinery of the Utah [fol. 2640] Oil Refining Company, is that correct?

Mr. Hall: No, that is not correct, Counsel. If you will read the question.

(The record was read.)

Mr. Hall: That is not what A-1 shows. A-1 shows that Distributive Area No. 5 is supplied from the Salt Lake City refinery of the Utah Oil Refining Company, and that Distributive Area No. 6 is supplied from the El Paso refinery of the Standard Oil Company of Texas.

Mr. Thrody: That is correct.

Q. Referring to Distributive Area No. 5, can you describe the manner in which the bulk goods are supplied from the Utah Oil Refining Company to the bulk plants indicated on the map in that particular area?

A. We set up standing instructions, standing order instructions at the Salt Lake refinery and the stations that are shown in that area marked "No. 5" are instructed to send their orders to Salt Lake for filling, and upon receipt of those orders then the Salt Lake refinery ships the bulk stocks back to the bulk plants.

Q. In Area No. 5 referred to will the tank cars and tank trucks load at the Utah Oil refinery at Salt Lake City or are there sub-terminal points?

A. Well, I don't know that I am fully qualified to answer that. My understanding is that they load at the Utah Oil Refining Company. Now,—and that is at Salt Lake City, and they have tank truck loading and tank car loading facilities, and are shipped directly from the refineries, I under- [fol. 2641] stand, but I am—I have never been to Salt Lake City and I can't say I am fully qualified technically to say just exactly what that layout is there.

Q. Is that gasoline received from the Utah Oil Refining Company purchased by Standard?

A. I am not fully qualified to answer that. We are informed as to the quantity that is available to us there for reshipment into this distributive area and we arrange to see that that quantity is not over-shipped over any given period of time.

Q. Is that pursuant to a contract?

A. Well, there again I am not familiar with just what the arrangement is with the Utah Oil Refining Company. As the Distribution Department, we receive information indicating that volume that is available for shipping.

Q. Is there a guaranteed volume available to you, a guaranteed supply?

Mr. Hall: I think that calls for the conclusion of the witness—is objected to on that ground.

Mr. Thrody: What is the volume?

A. I am sorry, I am not in a position to say just exactly what that is at this time. I don't know. But it is sufficient to take care of the distribution.

Q. What determines the volume?

Mr. Hall: You mean, that is the volume that is shipped out of the refinery at Salt Lake?

Mr. Thrody:

Q. What determines the volume of gasoline made avail- [fol. 2642] able to you for shipment through Distributive Area No. 5?

A. Well, that is determined by orders from—whatever rangement it is—contract—or such as it is. I'm not miliar with just what that is.

Q. You do not know—do I understand your testimony be that you do not know whether the—strike that.

Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. Are each of the dots referred to in Exhibit A in Distributive Area No. 5 bulk plant locations?

A. Yes, as far as I know. I might make this qualification. There may be an occasional one in this district, in istributive District No. 5, and in others, other districts at happen to be shown there that may just receive package stocks. That is a marketing plant map.

Q. Well, confine——

A. Generally speaking, those are bulk plants, all of those ints in District No. 5.

Mr. Thrody: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. In Area No. 5 do you know how the bulk plants are erated, either by Standard personnel or by some other rangement?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you know ~~how often~~ shipments are made out the Utah Oil refinery in, first, tank cars to the various lk plants?

A. No, sir, I do not. There are quite a number of stations in there, and I would presume that—— [Vol. 2643] Q. By "stations" you refer to bulk plants?

A. I mean bulk plants.—that deliveries—shipments, ther, out of Salt Lake refinery are possibly made daily.

Q. But you cannot say?

A. I cannot state that definitely, no, sir.

Q. What is the situation with respect to tank trucks?

A. That would be the same situation as far as I am ncerned. I cannot definitely state that it is done daily.

Q. Do you know how shipments are made? Are they ade pursuant to orders from the various bulk plants?

A. Yes, sir. The orders are placed by the bulk plants ith the Salt Lake refinery and they are shipped.

Q. Are they placed directly with the Utah Oil Refining Company or are they placed with a Standard representative?

A. Our standing order instructions are placed directly with Utah Oil Refining Company. I might have to double check that to be absolutely certain, but I believe that to be the procedure.

Q. Are all types of bulk goods distributed from the Utah Oil Refining Company to these various bulk plants?

Mr. Hall: You mean—may I have the question, please?

(The record was read.)

Mr. Hall: You mean, Mr. Thrody, the category that he previously referred to as gasoline, stove oil, diesel oil, furnace oil?

Mr. Thrody: That is right.

[fol. 2644] A. They have, I believe—I would have to double check this—both grades of motor gasoline and certain grades of the gas oils, but I can't state definitely.

Q. Are there any lubricating oils?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will you address your remarks now, Mr. Olane, to Distributive Area No. 6 as referred to in Exhibit A-1 for Identification; do you know what arrangements have been made by Standard Oil Company of California with the Standard Oil Company of Texas for the supply of bulk goods for Distributive Area No. 6?

A. We are informed as to the volume that is available to us at El Paso and we gauge our distribution accordingly. We don't enter into the arrangements as to the volume that is to be available there at El Paso. We are told as to what is going to be available to us, but we gear our distribution accordingly.

Q. Is that a fixed amount quarterly or annually or——

A. Well, it is a fixed amount, but it may vary from month to month or quarter to quarter. That depends on their production activities at El Paso.

Q. Do you know what determines that other than——

A. (Interposing) No, I don't. No.

Q. Will the demand of the various bulk plant operators in the bulk plants located in Distributive Area No. 6 have any relationship to that volume?

Mr. Hall: He said already he doesn't know, Mr. Thrody, [fol. 2645] what does regulate that amount that is available. I don't object to you asking him questions within his province. I don't think he should be called upon to speculate.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Is it within your knowledge that Standard of Texas is able to supply all of your needs?

A. No, I am sorry, I couldn't say as to that.

Q. Do you know whether or not the supply arrangement with respect to Area No. 6 is worked out pursuant to a contract?

A. No, I am not familiar with that.

Q. Are the tank cars referred to in your discussion of Area No. 6 tank cars under the jurisdiction and control of Standard of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is the same situation true with respect to fuel trucks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any knowledge as to a schedule of deliveries made from the El Paso refinery to the bulk plants in Area No. 6?

Mr. Hall: That is not clear to me.

Mr. Thrody: Strike the question.

Q. Are tank cars loaded regularly from the El Paso refinery to supply the bulk plants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many days per week?

A. Well, I can't definitely state. The tank cars are loaded every working day, but—well, I just can't make that definite statement. The shipments are regularly made from El Paso into District No. 6.

Q. What do you mean by "regularly made"?

[fol. 2646] A. Well, these stations have their instructions to place their orders for bulk products on the El Paso refinery, and the El Paso refinery has instructions from us to supply these stations. So, depending on the volume of the orders going in there will indicate how much is being shipped from the El Paso refinery.

Mr. Hall: In referring to—may I ask the witness this?

Mr. Thrody: Yes.

Mr. Hall: In referring to "stations," do you mean "bulk plants"?

A. Bulk plants, pardon me.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Are there any instructions to the bulk plants that they should place their orders on regular intervals on a weekly basis, on a monthly basis, or pursuant to any set period?

A. The bulk plants have instructions to place their orders for bulk stocks on the El Paso refinery as they require replenishment of bulk stocks.

Q. Is it customary not only with respect to bulk plant operators, generally, that they place orders for replenishment of bulk goods when their supplies reach any, their reserves reach any particular level; that is, is it customary for them to wait until they are half empty or third empty or quarter empty?

A. Well, I can't say that there are any specific instructions as to exactly when they are to place their orders in relation to the inventory that they have on hand in their tanks. That will be governed by their volume that is moving [fol. 2647] through those tanks which will vary from time to time, and——

Q. Is there any recognized established dealing in the industry with respect to replenishing their reserves after it reaches a particular level?

A. I can't say as to that. That will be governed to some extent on the location of the bulk plant and the length of time that it takes their bulk stocks to come from their supply source or refinery source.

Q. Insofar as Area No. 6 is concerned, do I understand your testimony here again to be that you have no knowledge as to the distribuiton methods employed after the bulk plant?

A. That is correct. Until the stock arrives at the bulk plant only.

Q. I should like now to direct your attention, Mr. Olane, to the third category of your breakdown on Exhibit A-1 for Identification entitled "Bulk Distributive Areas Supply by Distribution Terminals of the Standard Oil Company of California." You have referred there, Mr. Olane, to distribution terminals. What do you mean by that designation?

A. Those are terminals that receive bulk products from the refineries by barge and/or tanker and have facilities to receive these products, store them, and reship them by tank car and/or tank trucks to bulk plants.

Q. Well, how is the gasoline distributed from the distribution terminals to these bulk plants? Is there any general way or does that vary?

Mr. Hall: Pardon me, just a moment, Mr. Thrody. Doesn't [fol. 2648] that appear from Exhibit A-1 for Identification?

Mr. Thrody: I think that only refers to the distribution terminals, or is this—off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. Mr. Olane, I refer you to your—the third category under Exhibit A-1 and ask—and specifically as to Distributive Area No. 8—Distributive Area No. 8 you have indicated is supplied by tank trucks from Moss Landing. What do you mean by that statement?

A. I mean, the bulk plants in Distributive Area No. 8 are supplied.

Q. Are supplied from the distribution terminal?

A. At Moss Landing.

Q. At Moss Landing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Thank you. In your discussion of the other distributive areas under this category, namely, Distributive Areas Nos. 7 to 23, inclusively, do you indicate that the gasoline is supplied from the refinery to the particular distribution terminals referred to under the discussion of each of those areas and then in turn supplied by each or by such distributive area to bulk plants?

A. Distribution terminals to bulk plants by tank trucks and/or tank cars in the respective distributive areas.

Q. In some instances you have discussed transportation by tanker. I refer specifically to your discussion, "Distributive Area No. 20" in Exhibit A-1. Point Wells, I assume, is the distributive area—is the distributive center or [fol. 2649] distributive terminal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that particular distribution terminal is supplied by barge from the refinery, is that correct?

A. It is supplied by tanker from the refinery.

Q. No—or barge.

A. Well, the area—the bulk plants in Area No. 20 are supplied from Point Wells by tank cars, tank trucks and/or barges from Point Wells, but——

Q. By that you mean the terminal plants—the bulk plants.

A. Are supplied, but Point Wells is supplied by tanker from Richmond and/or El Segundo.

Q. Are those tankers operated by Standard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Referring generally, Mr. Olane, to the general distribution of bulk products throughout the area indicated or area set forth by you in your Exhibit A for Identification, do you have any—to your knowledge do you know of the number of tank trucks either owned, operated, or leased by you?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you know of the number of tank cars which you use in this overall area?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you know the number of tankers used by you in your general distribution in this area?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Is there a fleet of tankers used exclusively for coastal distribution?

A. In our tanker fleet there are various tankers that are [fol. 2650] used in supplying these various bulk terminals up and down the Pacific Coast.

Q. They are used exclusively for that distribution—strike that.

Mr. Hall: Pardon me—off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Can you state, Mr. Olane, approximately how many tankers are used constantly for distribution of bulk products in the Pacific Coastal trade for the United States markets?

Mr. Hall: You mean, say, during the year 1946, or something like that, because——?

Mr. Thrody: Continuously.

Mr. Hall: It differed during—the situation was entirely different during the war, you know.

Mr. Thrody: Presently used.

Mr. Hall: Well, I don't want him to state presently. This case takes only up to '45. Well, that is all right. You can answer the question.

A. No, I cannot. I am not in a position to answer that question specifically, because I don't know just how many tankers are in that particular trade.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. In the area referred, covered by Exhibit A, do you know of the total number of bulk plants used for the distribution of bulk products?

Mr. Hall: Well, pardon me. That would be a counting of all the dots on Exhibit A, wouldn't it? I have no objection.

[fol. 2651] A. Offhand I can't answer that question, because——.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. If we were to count the dots on this map, would that give us an accurate portrayal of the number of bulk plants?

A. No, sir. There may be some points on there where plants have been closed, and I did notice one there—in connection with war activities there was some Camp so-and-so indicated there. We may have had temporarily a plant, but it has now been closed.

Q. Was this accurate as of July 1947, at the time of its preparation?

A. Well, I don't know the exact reason for the preparation of that particular map at that time. So, I can't say that that accurately portrays the number of bulk plants that we have under discussion here.

Q. This is substantially accurate, you would say, with the minor exceptions that you have referred to?

A. Yes, I would say that is substantially accurate, but——

Mr Hall: And the map you have been referring to in the last preceding questions and answers is, of course, Exhibit A for Identification, is that correct?

Mr. Thrody: That is correct.

A. Yes.

Q. I direct your attention now, Mr. Olane, to the map prepared by you and marked for identification Plaintiff's Exhibit B, and the statement prepared by you and previously identified by you as Exhibit B-1. Mr. Olane, what goods are embraced in your designation "Package Goods [fol. 2652] Distribution" as referred to in Exhibit B-1 for identification?

A. Well, they would be the products that these bulk plants do not have in bulk storage and therefore must receive these particular products in what we refer to as package form, that is, in iron barrels or cans and cases or other types of containers.

Q. What are those products?

A. Well, they could be at some one—at an individual bulk plant, for example, that does not have a sufficient volume of one grade of motor gasoline business to warrant a bulk tank, it could receive that particular product in iron barrels.

Q. What is the product—what are the products?

A. That would vary from bulk plant to bulk plant. I mean, I couldn't give you a list of products.

Q. Of those package goods, which types are normally sold through service station dealer outlets?

A. I am not in position to answer that one.

Q. Is RPM can oil generally known as a package goods?

A. It is generally known as a package goods.

Mr. Thrody: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. Do you have a breakdown of the types of products covered under the term "package goods"? Are lubricatng oils considered package goods?

A. Generally speaking, they are considered package goods. The only places where they would not be considered package goods would be a few exceptionally large bulk [fol. 2653] plants where there is sufficient business to warrant that these bulk plants receive lubricating oils by tank cars and/or tank trucks.

Q. Are lubricating oils packaged in large drum containers considered package goods.

A. Large drum containers? I presume——

Q. Twenty gallon or forty-two gallon.

A. Fifty-three gallon barrels are, generally speaking, the general size of the lubricating barrels.

Q. Is there any fixed limit on what is a package goods; for instance, is over fifty-three gallons considered bulk and under fifty-three gallons considered package goods?

A. Well, under fifty-three gallons would be the barrels and the cans and the smaller types of containers. But containers that would be over fifty-three gallons, I'm not familiar with that.

Q. Well, under fifty-three, is that considered package goods?

A. That would be considered package goods, yes, sir.

Q. I refer you, Mr. Olane, to the first group in Plaintiff's Exhibit B-1 for Identification entitled "Package Goods—Supplied by California Refineries—." Is there a packaging plant at Richmond refinery?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there another packaging plant at the El Segundo refinery?

A. El Segundo?

Q. El Segundo refinery.

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 2654] Q. Do they package lubricating oils?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And greases?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hall: Where are you referring to now?

Mr. Thrody: The first group.

Mr. Hall: Both Richmond and El Segundo?

Mr. Thrody: Yes.

Mr. Hall: Your last two questions weren't clear as to whether you were talking about El Segundo or Richmond. Were you talking about both?

Mr. Thrody: I was talking about both.

Q. Do they package at Richmond?

A. They package both the lubricating oils and greases at Richmond, and the lubricating oils at El Segundo, and I am not too certain as to the greases at El Segundo. That is something I cannot make a definite statement on.

Q. Now, on Distributive Area No. A—I am referring to Exhibit B for Identification—you state that this area is supplied by box cars or package trucks from the Richmond refinery. What are the destinations of those shipments from the Richmond refinery. Do they go directly to the bulk plant operators?

A. Yes, sir. They go directly to the bulk plants.

Q. Are shipments made pursuant to orders placed by those bulk plant operators?

A. The orders are placed by the bulk plants.

[fol. 2655] Q. Are box cars loaded daily at the Richmond refinery for package goods for shipment into Area A?

A. They are loaded during the regular working week, and I presume that there is enough business in the way of package goods to say definitely they are loaded daily. But there could be days when no package cars might be shipped.

Q. Are package goods of this character even sent to the accessory warehouses in this area?

A. I cannot answer that. I am not familiar with that phase of it.

Q. You do not know whether the bulk plant operators——

Mr. Hall: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Coming to Distributive Area No. B in Exhibit B-1 for Identification, do I understand from your previous statement that all types of lubricating oils, with the exception of minor greases are packaged at El Segundo refinery?

Mr. Hall: Well, I think his previous statement was that he was uncertain about the packaging of greases at El Segundo. So, I don't think—I think the question should be reframed.

A. May I ask this, too. I would like to qualify that. When you said all brands or all grades of lubricating oil, there may be some particular types of lubricating oil that may not be filled at the El Segundo refinery. I am not qualified to say definitely on every one of the lubricating oils.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Do you know what types are packaged at El Segundo?

A. No, sir, I do not.

[fol. 2656] Mr. Hall: You mean types of lubricating oil?

Mr. Thrody: Types of lubricating oil.

A. No, I do not.

Q. Are shipments made from the El Segundo refinery of lubricating oils to all of the bulk plants within Distributive Area No. B, as reflected by Exhibit B for Identification, from the El Segundo packaging plant?

A. Yes. There may be a few of the bulk plants that do not have warehouses and do not handle package goods. They only handle bulk stocks. There are a few of those scattered through our entire area as shown on this exhibit.

Mr. Hall: Exhibit B?

A. Exhibit B.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Are all the dots indicated on Exhibit B in Marketing Area or Distributive Area B designations for bulk plants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is this an accurate designation of such bulk plants; have there been any changes since you——?

A. There may have been some changes and some of those plants may have closed down; there may have been some, a few, where a new plant opened.

Q. But this is substantially accurate?

A. This is substantially accurate, yes, sir.

Q. Coming up to Distributive Area No. C, as referred to in Exhibit B-1 and as represented by Exhibit B, is there a packaging plant located at Willbridge——

[fol. 2657] A. (Interposing:) Certain of the——

Q. —or is that just a distributive terminal?

A. That is a terminal and they fill certain of their bulk products in packages. Certain bulk products are filled in iron barrels and shipped out with other package goods to these bulk plants in Distributive Area C.

Q. What is the source of the products from—what is the source of the products at Willbridge—the source of the merchandise?

A. The bulk products are received in Willbridge by tanker from the refineries and then at the Willbridge terminal they are filled into iron barrels. Now,——

Q. Of all sizes?

A. No. Just into iron barrels.

Q. What size?

A. Well, generally they are fifty-three gallon barrels, fifty-two gallon or fifty-five gallon barrels.

Q. Is there any smaller packaging done at Willbridge?

A. No, they do not do any of the small packaging at Willbridge. The small package goods for Willbridge and also used by Willbridge for redistribution to these bulk plants in Distributive Area C are received from Richmond in box car lots.

Q. Are they sent directly from Willbridge to the bulk plant locations? Directly to the bulk plant locations shown in Distributive Area C?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I refer your attention to Distributive Area D, as indicated in Exhibit B-1 and as reflected by Exhibit B. Will you explain the nature of the operation conducted at Point [fol. 2658] Wells?

A. Bulk products are transported from the refineries by tanker to Point Wells, and at Point Wells they have facilities for filling iron barrels of these various bulk products; and with regard to the lubricating oils, they have a lube blending plant there which receives the bulk stocks from the refinery by tanker. These are base lubricating oils and they are blended there in the lube blending plant, and various grades of lubricating oils are made at Point Wells and they are also packaged at Point Wells.

Q. Is all the packaging at Point Wells—strike that.

A. Possibly I could clarify that.

Q. Just a second. Are the lubricating oils received from the refinery by barge kept separate from the lubricating oils which are blended?

A. The lubricating oils are received from the refinery by tanker rather than by barge, as you just mentioned, and these are base lubricating oil stocks and are segregated at Point Wells and then put in their mixing packaging operation up there and placed into barrels and other packages. Now, other package stocks are also received directly from Richmond in box car lots at Point Wells, greases and various other package stocks that are only manufactured at Richmond, and these are warehoused at Point Wells and then are sent out to these bulk plants in Distributive Area D along with packages that are packaged at Point Wells from bulk products at that point and lubricating oils at that point.

Q. Is there any particular size container—strike that. [fol. 2659] Are all sizes of packaging—is the packaging performed at Point Wells done in all types of containers or is just a certain limited size?

A. I cannot answer that question, because I am not familiar with the entire packaging setup with respect to lubricating oil packaging done at that point and I don't know that it applies on all grades of lubricating oils referred in Distributive Area D. Certain of the lubricating oils no doubt come from Richmond in box car lots in packages.

Q. When you refer to box car lots, does that mean large containers or——

A. No, I mean barrels or in smaller containers than barrels which are in boxes or cases, or that is, cans and other smaller types of containers.

Q. Directing your attention now, Mr. Olane, to the small lubricating RPM containers as used in automobiles, small quart containers, do you know where the packaging of that small goods is performed?

A. No, I cannot state that that is performed at Point Wells. I don't know to the extent that that lube blending plant has been completed for its packaging operations.

Q. Point Wells does package small containers, small RPM containers?

A. Well, I can't definitely state that. I know they package the barrels and I believe they handle the smaller containers but I cannot state definitely on that.

Q. Do you know whether or not Willbridge packages small containers?

A. Definitely not. Willbridge does not.

[fol. 2660] Q. Do you know whether or not Richmond packages small containers?

A. Yes, sir, Richmond does.

Q. On these box car lots which emanate from the Richmond refinery to Point Wells by tanker—is that what it is, tanker box car lots, too?

A. No. They go by rail.

Q. By rail?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that also include small RPM containers?

A. It would include the small RPM containers if Point Wells does not handle that type of packaging. That is what I am not clear on. If they do, they would not be shipped from Richmond. They could come up from Richmond by tanker in the base stocks and the lube blending plant would handle the packaging in the small containers. I am not certain about the small containers. I am not familiar with that detail of the operation with that lube blending plant at Point Wells.

Q. You state, Mr. Olane, you are employed in the Distribution Division?

A. Distribution Department.

Q. Distribution Department of Standard Oil of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you tell me approximately how many personnel are employed in that division?

Mr. Hall: In that department, you mean?

Mr. Thrody: In that department.

A. I believe at the present time there are twenty-nine. I am not absolutely certain as to that exact number.

Q. What is the area covered by—the area of distribu- [fol. 2661] tion covered by the Department? Do you handle international shipments, distribution of international shipments or solely domestic shipments that you are concerned with?

A. We are concerned with domestic shipments. We do not handle the distribution on international—or foreign shipments, I presume? We have a Foreign Trade Department that handles that foreign trade phase of it.

Q. The states indicated in Exhibit A, that covers the total area of your distribution?

A. No, it does not cover the total area. We handle the distribution of the entire area in that exhibit.

Q. In addition what other area?

A. The Territory of Alaska, and Hawaii, is a part of our domestic distribution.

Q. The principal function of the Department is the distribution of bulk goods from the refineries to the bulk plants?

Mr. Hall: No. That is not what he said, Mr. Thrody.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. What is its principal function?

A. The distribution of petroleum products in the quantities desired and at the points desired from our refineries and other sources of supply, and at the lowest practicable distribution cost. Now, that would cover bulk products and package products.

Q. Does the function of the Department cease at the bulk plant level?

A. Yes, sir. We arrange to see that the bulk products [fol. 2662] and the package products get to the bulk plants, and that is the extent of our jurisdiction.

Q. What department would handle the distribution after, from the bulk plant level to the consumer level?

A. That would be the Marketing Department.

Q. Are there any peculiar problems of the Standard Stations, Inc., aside from the Standard of California, which you would handle?

A. We have in our distribution activities—we don't handle the distribution with respect to the Standard Stations. That is all beyond the bulk plant. Our own operations take up to this bulk plant and from there on out it is Marketing.

Q. Do you have any figures on the overall capacity of all of the bulk plants?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Mr. Thrody: Off the record.

Mr. Hall: Is that all with this witness?

Mr. Thrody: Yes.

Cross-examination.

Mr. Hall:

Q. It is true, is it not, Mr. Olane, that the Distribution Department is responsible for the efficient and economical overall distribution of the Company's petroleum products, both bulk and package?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And to that end it is the duty of the department, is [fol. 2663] it not, to see that supplies of products will be placed economically where and when they are needed for ultimate distribution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is true, is it not, that Standard Oil Company of California has no refineries outside the State of California—none that you know of?

A. Yes, sir, that is true.

Q. That is true?

A. That is correct.

Q. The only refineries that Standard Oil Company of California has are located in the State of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those refineries are located at Richmond, Bakersfield, and El Segundo?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in preparing the maps which have been marked Plaintiff's Exhibits A and B for Identification you had in mind a distinction between bulk and package goods, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, take the map which is marked Plaintiff's Exhibit A for Identification. Will you tell us what the bulk ones are, the transit of which that map was designed to illustrate?

A. The products?

Q. The bulk products.

A. The bulk products—the names of the particular bulk products?

Q. Which that map was designed to illustrate the transit of,

A. Well, that covers Chevron Gasoline, Standard Diesel Fuel, Standard Furnace Oil, and Standard Stove Oil.

[fol. 2664] Q. There is a further qualification with respect to that map, is there not; namely, that it was designed to show the transit of those products in a fluid state by either tanker or barge or tank car or truck and trailer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not designed, was it, to show the transit of lubricating oil in drums, was it?

A. No, sir.

Q. When one of the fluids that you have described is put in some kind of a container, like a drum, then it becomes package goods, the transit of which is designed to be illustrated by the map which is marked Plaintiff's Exhibit B for Identification?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, directing your attention to package goods for a moment and directing your attention to the point on Exhibit B for Identification which is marked "Willbridge" near the City of Portland in Oregon, from what source does Willbridge get the package goods which are sent out to the bulk plants from Willbridge?

A. Certain of the products move by tanker from the refineries to Willbridge, and they are packaged at Willbridge, and other package goods are received by Willbridge by box car lots.

Q. I see. Now, the stock that comes to Willbridge from a refinery by water would come from both Richmond and [fol. 2665] El Segundo, or just Richmond?

A. No, it would be Richmond and El Segundo.

Q. Now, directing your attention to Point Wells, which is near Seattle and is shown on the map which is Exhibit B for Identification, will you tell us again the source of the package goods that are sent out to the bulk plants from Point Wells?

A. Certain of the products are received from the refineries by tankers and are filled in containers at Point Wells, and other package goods are received from Richmond in box car lots.

Q. Do any of the package goods go to either Willbridge or Point Wells in box cars from El Segundo?

A. No, sir, not to my knowledge.

Q. Do any of the package goods to Willbridge or Point Wells go to those points from the refinery at Bakersfield?

A. No, sir. There are no shipments of package goods out of Bakersfield refinery. They have no packaging facilities at that point.

Q. Is it true that commodities that come to Point Wells and are there packaged, which you have described as coming from the refineries, would come from both El Segundo and Richmond?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hall: That is all.

Mr. Thrody: That is all, Mr. Olane.

Francis S. Oliane.

[fol. 2666] 9:00 O'clock A. M., March 10, 1948, 1712 Standard Oil Bldg., San Francisco, California

L. M. Bussert, a witness called on behalf of the plaintiffs, being first duly cautioned and sworn by the Notary Public to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, testified as follows:

Direct examination.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Will you state you full name for the record?

A. Leonardo Money Bussert.

Q. What position do you occupy with Standard Oil of California?

A. Manager, Operations Department, Marketing.

Q. How long have you held this position? Under this specific title.

A. Four days.

Q. In what capacity——

A. (Interposing:) Prior to that Assistant General Manager, Marketing Operations.

Q. Previous to that?

A. Well, that position was held for four years, that title.

Mr. Thrody: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. How long have you been associated with the Company?

A. Thirty and a half years.

Q. In what capacities?

A. Various capacities, from the present backwards, being Assistant District Manager, Assistant District Sales Man-[fol. 2667] ager, Superintendent of Sales, Special Agent.

Q. That is sufficient. Could you tell us what the function of the Marketing Division is or the Marketing Department?

A. Could I go off the record for an explanation, first?

(Off the record:)

A. As I understand it, the function of the Marketing Department is to market or take to the points of retailer and consumer usage the products to be offered for sale.

Q. Does the Marketing Department have various component divisions?

A. It does.

Q. Could you name some of them?

A. Wholesale Division, Retail, Standard Stations, Operations.

Q. Could you tell me what the function of the Operations Division is within the Marketing Department?

A. To supervise functionally all bulk plants and directly certain other bulk plants; supervise functionally certain accessory warehouses and directly operate other warehouses; to operate directly certain terminal operations and functionally supervise others; to take care of the required engineering pertaining to the Marketing Department's operations; to take care of the classifications of labor; to establish proper wage scales.

Q. That is sufficient. We are primarily interested here in distribution, marketing problems, rather than engineer-[fol. 2668] ing problems. Approximately how many people are employed in the Marketing Department?

A. Something over 3,000.

Q. And approximately how many people are employed in the Operations Division?

A. Well, just generally speaking, 500 in Operations.

Q. Do those 500 people operate out of San Francisco, or are you decentralized?

A. We are decentralized.

Q. Do you have divisions, or is the area broken down, the Marketing Area for Standard, broken down geographically or functionally?

Mr. Hall: Just a minute; let me have that question back.

(The record was read.)

Mr. Hall: That still isn't clear to me. Maybe it is to the witness. Are you talking about the whole company or the Marketing Department or the Operations Division of the Marketing Department?

Mr. Thrody: I will rephrase the question.

Q. Is the Operations Division—you say it is decentralized—is it divided to handle problems, to handle its assignments on a geographical basis or is it decentralized functionally? Do I make myself clear?

A. No, sir, you do not.

Q. Administratively how is the Operations Division set up?

A. It is set up into areas so that supervision can be given adequately and competently to an area that is best served from a certain location. I'd call it geographically and functionally, both.

[fol. 2669] Q. Do you have the personnel assigned through the territory, the Marketing Area, covered by Standard Oil or covered by the Operations Division?

A. I do not understand your question.

Q. Well, for the various localities you say you have this broken up?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have men assigned in charge of a particular area—are you broken down into districts?

A. Yes.

Q. Into zones?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe just briefly how that is broken up; what is it, on a state basis?

A. It is not on a state basis. It is on areas considered the easiest for supervision from the central location.

Q. How many such areas do you have for supervisory purposes?

A. I think it is divided differently for Operations than it is for Sales. Which do you wish?

Q. For Operations.

A. Eleven areas.

Mr. Hall: How many was that?

A. Eleven.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Could you describe briefly the administrative setup for each or for a single area? Do you have an area manager?

A. With respect to San Francisco and operations there, we have a superintendent whose headquarters are in Oakland. He has suitable assistants on the staff. They are responsible for the district operation of two loading racks [fol. 2670] and one plant in Oakland, one plant in San Francisco, and functionally responsible for the engineering and operations of an area from King City to the Oregon line, from the Pacific Ocean to a meandering line, generally speaking, coming down about 150 miles east of the ocean.

Q. Is that a typical setup for each of the eleven districts?

A. There is no typical setup. They are divided in areas consistent with the best administration.

Q. And the problems with respect to each area would be peculiar to that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you say the Operations Division is charged with the functional distribution—or functional marketing——

A. Function operations.

Q. —functional operations——

A. Of the engineering.

Q. —does that refer to marketing or is that——

A. To marketing only.

Q. Could you describe what you mean by the functional operation?

A. In addition to the previous organization there are two managers within the area served by this operational office. They are primarily interested in the sales of products. All plants except those previously mentioned are under their personal direction. When they want repairs to the plants or to facilities of the Company, they make a request on the operational superintendent that he do such repairs.

Q. When you refer to "plants", you mean the bulk plants?

[fol. 2671] A. I do.

Q. Do you have any figures on the total number of bulk plants?

A. Exactly, no, but it is something in the order of 700.

Q. 700?

A. Scattered in the seven Western States, Alaska, and Hawaii, and the Mid-Pacific area.

Q. Does that 700 include that outside——

A. Yes.

Q. How many of the 700?

Mr. Hall: Let the witness answer.

Mr. Thrody: I'll finish the question.

Q. Does the 700 figure include also the bulk plants located outside of the confines of the United States, those located within the territory?

A. Yes.

Q. Approximately how many of that 700 are located outside of the United States?

Mr. Hall: You mean, Continental United States?

Mr. Thrody: Continental United States.

Mr. Hall: Just a minute; is this Continental in your phraseology Alaska, which is the northern part of the Continent, or is Alaska, Honolulu, Hawaii, considered Continental? Why don't you reframe your question?

Mr. Thrody:

Q. How many are located in Alaska, Hawaii, and Mid-Pacific?

A. About 28 in Alaska, 16 or 18 in Hawaiian Islands, and three other points in the Pacific. I might mention the three in the Mid-Pacific are not owned by the Company. They [fol. 2672] are only operated.

Q. Is there—those bulk plants located within the Continental United States, is there any classification made by you as to size?

Mr. Hall: Just a minute, please. Speaking of Continental United States, are you including Alaska?

Mr. Thrody: Yes, including Alaska.

Q. Of the remaining 651 within the seven states enumerated by you is there any classification as to size of those bulk plants?

A. No. In the sense that they are graded one to the other with respect to size, you mean? It that what you are after?

Q. Do you have large bulk plants and small bulk plants located in those seven states?

A. We do.

Q. In the industry and in your experience what is the capacity of what you consider a large bulk plant?

A. Capacity meaning what?

Q. The storage capacity.

Mr. Hall: You mean, storage capacity for bulk products?

Mr. Thrody: For bulk products.

A. Would you restate your original question again?

Mr. Thrody: Will you read it, please?

(The record was read.)

A. We have one over a million and a third barrels of storage, which is large.

Q. And what would be the capacity of some of your smaller?

[fol. 2673] A. 800, 1200, 1600 barrels bulk storage.

Q. For the purposes of the record, what is a barrel?

A. 42 gallons.

Q. The bulk plants located within the seven states which you have referred to, are all of these owned by Standard Oil?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they all operated by Standard Oil?

A. No.

Q. Could you describe the various methods of operation of these bulk plants?

A. Company operation and wholesale distributor operation.

Q. Could you differentiate the two types?

A. The Company operation is conducted entirely by personnel on Company payroll.

Mr. Hall: Pardon me a moment. You mentioned the word "Standard." You referred, of course, to Standard Oil Company of California, did you not?

Mr. Thrody: That is correct. Would you read the question and answer?

(The record was read.)

A. Wholesale distributor plants are operated by an individual appointed to operate that plant wherein he supplies all labor. Title to the plant remains with the Company.

Q. Are any bulk plants owned by Standard Stations, Inc.?

A. No.

Q. Approximately how many of the bulk plants located [fol. 2674] within the seven states are Company operated?

A. I haven't looked at the records for sometime, and the answer is completely a guess—probably 200 to 250.

Q. Then the remaining portion would be wholesale——

A. Distributor.

Q. —wholesale distributor?

A. Yes.

Q. Of the latter type, the wholesale distributors, are there various ways of operating those plants or do they all fit into the common pattern?

A. They fit into a common pattern.

Q. And the wholesale operator——

Mr. Hall: Wholesale distributor.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. —wholesale distributor, you indicated that title to the physical properties belongs to the Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who owns the gasoline?

A. The Company.

Q. The Company. How is the gasoline furnished to such wholesale distributors, on a consignment basis?

A. No, sir. Title remains with the Company.

Q. Could you describe to us what the function of each of these bulk plants is?

A. To receive and store bulk and package petroleum merchandise, warehouse same, which is then redistributed to its ultimate consumer or proximate ultimate consumer from those plants.

Q. Can you describe how the bulk goods are redistributed from the bulk plants to the ultimate consumer?

[fol. 2675] A. By means of bulk tank trucks, iron barrels, and customers who may call at the plant to have their containers filled or they picking up petroleum merchandise which is not bulk.

Q. What types of bulk products are handled from bulk plants?

A. Small and large, are you speaking about?

Q. I am referring to products, gasoline, lubricating oils.

A. Gasolines, kerosenes, thinners, solvents, gas oils, heating oils——

Q. Which of such products——

Mr. Hall: Wait a minute; let him finish.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Is that all?

A. —and in some exceptional cases other products that might be stored in the bulk, exceptional meaning only in the sense that a demand for that particular product is such that it would be handled in bulk.

Mr. Hall: Did your question call simply for bulk products?

Mr. Thrody: Yes.

Q. Are there other products, other than bulk products, that are marketed through the bulk plants?

A. Yes.

Mr. Hall: Wait a minute; that calls for the conclusion of the witness. You said marketed through—it is my understanding that the bulk plants do not market anything.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. That are redistributed from the bulk plants.

A. As previous- indicated, petroleum merchandise—products.

Q. Do you mean in addition to those products—do you [fol. 2676] mean there are products in addition to those enumerated by you in your previous answer—are there other products other than the ones that you have listed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What are they?

A. Petroleum merchandise which is in the category that we call greases and lubricants.

Q. Is there any general classification for those?

A. I have given it. Petroleum merchandise.

Q. Would the term "package goods"?

A. Synonymous to a large degree.

Q. Which of these products that you have just listed are redistributed ultimately to service stations?

A. Gasolines, thinners, solvents, kerosenes, diesel oils, and petroleum merchandise.

Q. What is the manner in which bulk products and petroleum products are redistributed from the bulk plants to the ultimate consumers?

A. I previously answered that. Repeating——

Q. (Interposing) I do not mean—your answer referred to trucks, iron barrels, and so on. Are they distributed directly to service stations from bulk plants or is there some intermediate step?

A. Directly to them.

Q. Directly to service stations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What service stations do you supply from bulk plants? Do you supply service stations of all types? May anyone place an order?

[fol. 2677] A. We deliver to Standard Stations, Chevron dealers, and other accounts regularly handling our merchandise.

Q. May other accounts——

A. (Interposing) —and to such other orders as may come to us.

Q. On the other accounts referred to in your previous answer, can you indicate to us the type of accounts you refer to?

A. Agricultural, industrial, commercial, and private.

Q. Are those orders placed pursuant to a contract, or——

A. (Interposing) No, sir.

Q. —or would they be spot sales?

A. Usually spot sales.

Q. May anyone come to a bulk plant and purchase—any service station come to a bulk plant and purchase its requirements of the products normally sold by you to service stations?

A. Limited. The service station not handling our gasolines would not come to us for gasoline because he would not have the designation of the gasoline that he purchased from us on his pumps. So, he could not resell it under the State law without having some designation on his pumps as having that brand of product in them. He could come and get thinners if he wanted.

Q. Are the bulk plant operators accountable to any particular person within the Marketing Department?

A. They are to a branch manager who is their supervisor.

Q. Is the branch organization you refer to the same type of organization you referred to in your earlier testimony [fol. 2678] with respect to the eleven districts?

A. No. It is a subsidiary supervisory force under the district manager.

Q. You have mentioned both branch managers and district managers. How many districts managers are there?

A. 14.

Q. 14?

A. Yes.

Q. Are these marketing districts?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hall: Did you confine that question to Continental United States?

Mr. Thrody: The seven states.

A. The seven states—13 then.

Q. These are marketing districts?

A. Yes, sir, in our nomenclature.

Q. Are they synonymous with the sales districts?

A. I thought that is what you meant by marketing.

Q. Is the word marketing district and sales district synonymous, the designation—the Company's designation?

A. We do not districtize the field. We have areas for which they supervise, but it is not put out as an absolute district, and we call them a sales district, but there is no specific delineation through rigid things that pertain constantly. They can be changed as conditions may require.

Mr. Thrody: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. You indicate, Mr. Bussert, that these sales districts [fol. 2679] or marketing districts are broken down into various component branches?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Approximately how many branches are there in each sales district?

A. It varies in accordance with the size of the sales district, the supervision required.

Q. What is the largest number of branches in the 13 sales districts, approximately?

A. The answer is from memory and approximately 12.

Q. And approximately the smallest number of branches in a particular sales district?

A. 6.

Q. Now, as I understand your testimony, each of the bulk plant operators is accountable to a branch manager?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the branch manager in turn accountable to some central officer or authority?

A. The district manager.

Q. For the activities of the bulk plant operations?

A. The district manager.

Q. And the district manager in turn would make reports concerning the operations of these bulk plants to whom?

A. To the centralized officials in San Francisco.

Q. In the Marketing Department?

A. In the Marketing Department.

Q. What division of them?

A. Pertaining to the subject at hand, either to the General Manager of Marketing Wholesale or Retail or to the [fol. 2680] Manager of Marketing Operations.

Q. Now, each individual bulk plant service a particular area within each branch, I suppose—is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any accepted number of accounts which each bulk plant will service or do they vary from bulk plant to bulk plant?

A. They vary.

Q. What determines the location of a bulk plant?

A. The density of business in an area that can best be served when it is sufficient to maintain bulk storage at a centralized location or an effective location.

Q. Do I understand from your testimony that the demand placed upon the individual bulk plant would govern its location or relocation?

A. Plus the effects of transportation.

Q. You mean, Mr. Bussert, that the transportation problems would also be a factor in the location of the various bulk plants, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who determines the area of supply for each bulk plant—would that be the branch manager?

A. Is "supply" the word you meant or distribution?

Q. The area of distribution for each bulk plant.

A. Surveys conducted by branch manager, district manager, and home office would determine the areas to be served.

Q. Would the branch manager be empowered to readjust a zone or an area of servicing of a particular bulk plant?

[fol. 2681] A. No, sir.

Q. Under whose authority would such a change be made?

A. Joint authority, usually vested in the manager of Operations.

Q. On the adjustment of the number of accounts to be supplied by a bulk plant, would that likewise have to——

A. (Interposing) There is no adjustment made for the number of accounts.

Q. Is each bulk plant operator empowered with the authority to serve as many accounts in his geographical area as he may supply within the limits of his supply?

A. Yes.

Q. How are the orders placed with the bulk plants?

A. Mail form and personal contact.

Q. How are deliveries made? You have indicated by trucks, iron barrels and containers in your previous answer. Are those trucks owned by the bulk plant operator or by the—strike the question. Under whose authority are deliveries made from the bulk plant or by whom are deliveries made.

Mr. Hall: Now, there are two—I think you should reframe your question.

Mr. Thrody: I am sorry. Strike it.

Q. How are deliveries made from the bulk plants?

A. As previously indicated, by trucks, iron barrels and containers.

Q. With respect to the trucks, which you have referred [fol. 2682] to in your previous answer, would they be the trucks of the bulk plant or the trucks of the dealer or recipient of the merchandise?

A. By it, and the wholesale distributor plant—by the trucks owned by the wholesale distributor.

Q. On the company operated bulk plants, do they have a fleet of trucks which are part of it, which are owned by the Company and by—as a part of the bulk plant?

A. One or more as required.

Q. In your answer you have distinguished the delivery services for wholesale distributors. Do I understand your testimony to be that the trucks in those instances are owned by the individual appointed by the Company to operate the bulk plant?

A. I did—that is correct.

Q. What remuneration does the wholesale distributor receive?

A. Commission rates.

Q. Commission rates?

A. Applicable to the product delivered.

Q. Based upon, generally, on gallonage as far as gasoline and lubricating oils are concerned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With respect to the greases and other package goods, how would that commission——

A. (Interposing) By weight or unit.

Q. By weight or unit.

Mr. Hall: That isn't clear to me, Mr. Thrody, whether you are referring to both the operators of the Company [fol. 2683] operated plants and to wholesale distributors in your previous question.

Mr. Thrody: This question, I think the record will indicate, will refer solely to wholesale distributors who are individually appointed operators as distinguished from Company operated bulk plants.

Mr. Hall: You so understood, Mr. Bussert?

A. I did.

Mr. Thrody: Is there any other distinction between the operators of the Company operated bulk plant and the wholesale distributor bulk plant which occurs to you as being significant at this time insofar as the distribution of their products to the consumer are concerned?

A. No, sir.

Q. How are the orders from Chevron Stations placed with the bulk plant operators?

A. In the same manner as anybody else places an order.

Q. Are separate records maintained for Chevron Stations —for sales to Chevron Stations?

A. All records are maintained of the purchases individually by every person.

Q. Those records are maintained by the bulk plant operator?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those records in turn transmitted either to the district office or to the central office, or copies thereof transmitted in such a manner?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which, copies or the originals?

[fol. 2684] A. Copies.

Q. To whom are they transmitted?

A. To the Company accounting officers for accounting purposes.

Q. In San Francisco?

A. No, in the district.

Q. In the district?

A. Yes.

Q. Are such records or compilations from such records in turn forwarded to San Francisco?

A. Summarizations of the records are transmitted.

Q. Which would indicate volumes for separate stations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does the Operations Division or, to your knowledge, the Marketing Department negotiate the lease agreements and Contract agreements with Chevron Stations?

A. Operations do not; Marketing, Wholesale, Retail, does.

Q. Marketing, Retail Department, does?

A. Yes.

Q. In negotiating a new Chevron contract or lease for a new Chevron station, does the retail branch confer with the Operations Division?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is made solely upon their own volition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What then is the relationship between the Chevron station and the bulk plant operator?

A. That of a customer.

Q. Are you acquainted with the types of agreements [fol. 2685] signed by the Chevron operators?

A. I am not.

Q. Do the Chevron operators look to the bulk plant operators for ready source of supply?

A. They do.

Q. Who determines whether the bulk plant operators have a ready source of supply?

A. Distribution clerk.

Q. When the supply in a bulk plant becomes dangerously low, what steps would be taken or are taken to correct such a situation?

A. Stocks are automatically—bulk stocks are automatically kept up to an operating level by the Distribution Department.

Q. Could you describe what you mean by an operating level?

A. To the best of our ability, not less than half a tankful is maintained at any time.

Q. Are orders for replenishment from the bulk plants placed by the operators themselves?

A. They are.

Q. Orders are received by them in response to their specific request for——

A. (Interposing) Yes,——

Mr. Hall: Just a minute; let the witness answer.

A. —They are advices as to the amount of product on hand. They are not orders. They are advices to the Distribution Department of the amount of stock that they have on hand, and the Distribution Department noting that automatically replaces the supply to keep it up.

Q. When are orders made? Are they made on a regular [fol. 2686] schedule?

A. Advice is sent once a week.

Q. On any particular day in the week?

A. It varies in certain sales districts so as to take advantage of load distribution at central supply points and make distribution.

Q. And then, as I understand your testimony, after the advice is received, then the orders—strike that. To whom are the advices sent by the individual bulk plant operator?

A. The centralized distribution offices.

Q. What is the relationship of the centralized distribution offices to the districts and branches you have previously referred to?

A. Solely for the matter of maintaining supply.

Q. Then actually the operator, the bulk operator merely advises of the supply on hand and based upon such information the merchandise is sent to him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you say that applies to all types of products which ultimately are used in service stations of the list you referred to—petroleum products?

A. Yes.

Q. In your previous testimony you referred to the fact that gasoline, kerosenes, thinners, and greases were ultimately used by service stations?

A. Yes.

Q. Then the supply of each of those products as maintained by the bulk plant operators is handled in similar [fol. 2687] manner with the use of advices?

A. Yes. That is, the supplies are maintained by means of advices to the Distribution Department of his stock on hand and his requirements.

Q. Now, are the requests—the orders of all Chevron stations handled in the same manner?

A. Identical.

Q. To your knowledge are there any Chevron Stations who have not signed formal agreements with the Company?

A. I have no knowledge of that.

Q. Are you acquainted with the bulk plant operations in the State of Utah and in the southeastern portion of the State of Idaho?

A. To a limited degree.

Q. Are the operations of the bulk plants in those areas peculiar in any way insofar as redistribution of products generally is concerned?

A. Not to my knowledge any different from any other bulk plant.

Q. Are you acquainted with the operations of the bulk plant operators in the eastern portion of the State of Arizona?

A. To the same degree that I am with all others.

Q. Is there anything peculiar insofar as the redistribution operations——

A. (Interposing) Not to my knowledge.

Q. —in that portion or in that area? With respect to the first area I have mentioned, in the State of Utah, and in the southwestern portion of Idaho, is there a ready source of supply for gasoline for the bulk plants?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2688] Mr. Thrody: That is all.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Mr. Bussert, are you acquainted with the packaging operations performed at Point Wells in the State of Washington?

A. I am.

Q. Will you briefly describe the products which are packaged at that operation?

A. Any product handled in bulk at that point will upon order be packaged into iron barrels.

Q. What is the size of iron barrels you refer to?

A. Approximately 53 gallons.

Q. Is there any packaging performed at that point for smaller goods; specifically, the RPM lubricating oil in quart cans?

A. There is not.

Q. Are there any other points, other than the Richmond packaging plant, which packages RPM in quart cans?

A. There are no points under the supervision of Marketing Operations Department that packages RPM in other than five gallon cans or iron barrels.

Q. Other than Richmond?

A. I specifically do not know the conditions at El Segundo. They may package them down there. You limit to Richmond, and I didn't know El Segundo.

Mr. Thrody: That is all.

Cross-examination.

Mr. Hall:

Q. It is a fact, is it not, Mr. Bussert, that there are very few bulk plants located outside of California but near [fol. 2689] the border of California that make deliveries inside of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those bulk plants are located at Cave Junction, Oregon, Lakeview, Oregon, Reno, Nevada, Minden, Nevada, Tonopah, Nevada, Parker, Arizona, and Yuma, Arizona?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What would be the proportion of the distribution from those seven bulk plants into California compared with the total distribution by the Marketing Department in California?

A. Practically infinitesimal. I would say a very small fraction of one per cent.

Q. It is true, is it not, that certain bulk plants located in California but near the borders of the State distribute products to small areas outside of California in other states?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And those bulk plants are located at Crescent City, California, Cedarville, California, Litchfield, California, Tahoe City, California, Tallac, California, Laws, California, Shoshone, California, and Blythe, California; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What would be the proportion of products distributed from those eight bulk plants outside of California compared with the total distribution of all bulk plants in California?

A. Likewise I would say that is an exceptionally small amount.

[fol. 2690] Q. Would you say that likewise was a fraction of one per cent?

A. I would. This is not from specific study, but I know as a fact that it is a very small portion of one per cent, or, of a per cent.

Q. Well, you would say it is then a small fraction of one per cent, is that your answer?

A. Yes.

Q. You were asked by Mr. Thrody if the gasoline was furnished to the bulk plants, and I believe he was referring to the wholesale distributor plants, on consignment, and your answer was that, "the title remained in the Company"; you recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, now, it is correct that the title remains in the Company, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But is that not characteristic of a sale on consignment that the title to the product remains in the consignor anyway?

A. I think it is.

Mr. Hall: That is all.

Mr. Thrody: I would like permission to ask two questions on the subject you brought out.

Mr. Hall: Oh, sure.

Redirect examination.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Mr. Bussert, is it not a fact that administratively you are set up to redistribute gasoline according to districts and branches?

[fol. 2691] Mr. Hall: I think that has already been asked and answered, Mr. Thrody, in his previous answer as indicated.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Is that not your testimony?

A. Distribution is effected to keep all plants supplied with products. Administratively, in districts, as far as being able to designate where it went.

Q. My question is on your administrative setup, your overall organization pattern—it is based upon districts and branches within districts, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. And those districts in many instances would overlap state lines, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Then in your distribution of these products from bulk plants, you are primarily concerned with the districts rather than state sales areas, is that correct?

A. The question is a little confusing to me.

Q. The sales districts you have referred to, in many instances will overlap state lines, is that correct?

A. In some instances.

Q. Do the sales districts covering the State of California overlap state lines?

A. Slightly.

Q. Do you know the volume of gasoline and other bulk goods handled by the bulk plant at Reno?

A. I do not.

Q. Is it a large bulk plant or a small bulk plant?

[fol. 2692] A. Medium size—mediumly small.

Q. Approximately what size?

A. Size being indicated by what, the amount of bulk storage they have there?

Q. Yes, capacity.

A. Relatively small.

Q. Approximatey what would it be?

A. Probably of 1600 barrels there.

Q. What is the approximate capacity at Minden?

A. Probably 1200 or 800 barrels.

Q. At Parker?

A. Let's see, they're 800 or 1200 barrels.

Q. And the other four bulk plants that ship into California?

A. Relatively—approximately the same size.

Q. Which was—approximately?

A. 1200 to 1600 barrels.

Q. In your testimony that this—the combined distribution of the seven bulk plants located along the borders, in Nevada, which ship into California——

Mr. Hall: Wait a minute; two are in Oregon, three in Nevada, and two in Arizona.

Mr. Thrody: —the eight bulk plants located outside the State of California which ship into the State of California, is your testimony that the amount or the volume is infinitesimally small?

Mr. Hall: Well—just a minute, now—all right.

[fol. 2693] Mr. Thrody: I am just interested with respect to what——

A. Yes.

Q. You mean "small" as compared to what?

Mr. Hall: Just a minute; that has been asked and answered because he has compared that volume with the entire volume distributed in California.

Mr. Thrody: In California?

A. Yes.

Mr. Hall: From both inside California and outside California.

Mr. Thrody:

Q. Now, with respect to your testimony on the operations of the bulk plant at Crescent, can you give us an approximation of the size——

Mr. Hall: That was Crescent City.

Mr. Thrody: Yes, Crescent City—the size of that bulk plant?

A. Either 1200 or 1600 barrels.

Q. And Cedarville?

A. Either 800 or 1200 barrels.

Q. Blythe?

A. I think 1200 barrels.

Q. Tallac?

A. Either 800 or 1200 barrels.

Q. Laws?

A. I think 1200 barrels there.

Q. And likewise when you say this was small you are referring to a comparison with the total sales within the State of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hall: Well, now, wait a minute. My question related to total distribution.

Mr. Thrody: I am sorry.

[fol. 2694] Mr. Hall: Total distribution from bulk plants inside of California. You so understood?

A. Yes.

Mr. Thrody: I am sorry.

A. Having in mind you asked the same question.

Mr. Thrody: I am sorry. May the record read as compared with the total distribution within the State of California from bulk plants located within the state of California, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Mr. Thrody: That is all.

Mr. Hall: That is all.

L. M. Bussert.

[fol. 2695] Harry T. Hays, a witness called on behalf of the plaintiffs, being first duly cautioned and sworn by the Notary Public to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, testified as follows:

Direct examination.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Will you state your name for the record?

A. Harry T. Hays.

Q. What is your address, please?

A. My home address or——?

Q. Your business address?

A. 225 Bush Street, San Francisco.

Q. What is your present position?

A. Manager of Sales Equipment Division, Marketing Department, Standard Oil.

Mr. Hall: That is Standard Oil Company of California?

A. Of California.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. How long have you held that position, Mr. Hays?

A. It will be three years in July.

Q. Have you had any previous experience in the Standard Oil organization, the Marketing Department, prior to that?

A. Thirty-two years.

Q. Now, with respect to the Sales and Equipment Division of the Marketing Department, what are its functions?

A. The function of the Sales Equipment Division is to pass on operating equipment used in the operations of the wholesale and Retail Departments of the Company, as to its [fol. 2696] value. In other words, to keep up with all of the new equipment coming on the market.

Q. By equipment, what do you mean?

A. Operating equipment, machinery, pumps, compressors; all of those, in addition to the operation of so-call accessory warehouses.

Q. What are your duties in connection with that?

A. The procurement, warehousing, and distribution.

Q. Does the scope of your duties include supervision over all of the accessory warehouses?

A. Functional supervision.

Q. You are familiar with the operations generally of all of the accessory warehouses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Hays, referring to what has been marked "Plaintiff's Exhibit C for Identification", can you tell us whether this sheet was prepared under your direction by you?

A. It was.

Q. Does it represent an accurate account of the location of the accessory warehouses?

A. It does.

Q. That includes all of the warehouses under the jurisdiction of Standard Oil Company, Standard Stations, Inc.?

Mr. Hall: That is all the accessory warehouses.

A. This is accessory warehouses only.

Mr. Sommerville: Yes.

Mr. Hall: Don't you want to ask him if it accurately describes the areas as served by each of the accessory warehouses?

[fol. 2697] Mr. Sommerville: Yes.

Q. Does this accurately describe the areas served by each of the warehouses?

A. Yes.

Q. This list?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Coming now to the staff of your Sales and Equipment Division, how many employees are in charge of the warehouse operations—are employed in the operations?

A. In the operation of the warehouses?

Q. Yes.

A. Not including my office?

Q. Not including your office.

A. Actually in the warehouses?

Q. Yes.

A. As of our last payroll, I believe it was 72.

Q. 72?

A. Directly.

Q. Are those employees centrally located here in San Francisco?

A. No.

Mr. Hall: Didn't he say it was 72 exclusive of the central office location?

A. Exclusive of my office.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. To what extent are Standard Oil of California and Standard Stations, Inc., engaged in the sale and distribution of automotive accessories?

Mr. Hall: Well, now, I want to reserve an exception with respect to automotive accessories, the objection to testimony with reference to automotive accessories being that such [fol. 2698] testimony is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. May it be deemed, Mr. Sommerville, that that exception and objection shall stand to all questions that you may put relating to automotive accessories as distinguished from tires, tubes, batteries? It will be so stipulated?

Mr. Sommerville: It will be so stipulated. Would you like the question read back?

A. Yes.

(The record was read.)

A. They handle the same line of accessories. In other words, the Standard Oil dealer has remarketed through the dealer the same line that is marketed through the Standard Stations.

Q. Is there a separate organization to handle the marketing of Standard Stations, Inc., than the organization for Standard Oil Company of California?

Mr. Hall: Just a minute, now; with respect to tires, tubes, and batteries, and accessories?

Mr. Sommerville: Yes.

Mr. Hall: The question is not intelligible to me. Maybe it is to the witness.

Mr. Sommerville: Let me reframe my question.

Q. Does Standard Oil Company of California supply Chevron Stations with tires, tubes and batteries?

A. Yes.

Q. Does Standard Oil Company of California act as a [fol. 2699] distributor of automotive accessories to Chevron dealers?

A. It does.

Q. Does Standard Oil Company of California act as a distributor of tires, tubes and batteries to Standard Stations, Inc.?

A. From our accessory warehouses, yes.

Q. Does Standard Oil Company of California act as a distributor of automotive accessories to Standard Stations, Inc.?

A. It does.

Q. Does the Sales and Equipment Division of Standard Oil Company of California maintain an organization with respect to Standard Stations, Inc., and to Standard Oil Company of California?

Mr. Hall: Well, now, just a minute; that is not intelligible. Read the question, please.

Mr. Sommerville: Let's reframe that.

Q. On sales of automotive accessories, that is, inclusive of tires, tubes, batteries, and other accessories, is there a separate organization handling that separate from the Standard Oil Company of California?

A. No.

Q. Sales to Standard Stations, Inc., then would be under your jurisdiction?

A. That is right.

Q. And the staff to which you had testified——

Mr. Hall: Just a minute; may I have the last question read?

(The record was read.)

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Does Standard Oil Company of California sell to all [fol. 2700] types of Chevron dealers irrespective of the—I will reframe that. Does Standard Oil Company of California sell the full line of accessories, including tires, tubes, batteries, to Chevron operators irrespective of the type of contract which they have with Standard Oil Company?

A. I am not in a position to answer that.

Q. Can you say——

Mr. Hall: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Is it your understanding that all Chevron dealers to whom you distribute automotive accessories are under TBA contract?

A. That is correct.

Q. What is meant by TBA contract?

Mr. Hall: Well, now—just a minute. That calls for a conclusion of the witness and calls for that which is not the best evidence. It is objected to as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. The contract speaks for itself. The Government has contracts, forms of contracts, and also forms of TBA contract.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Under the TBA contracts you supply Chevron operators with accessories in addition to tires, tubes and batteries, do you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the sales arrangements made with the Chevron dealers, is it true that volume—discounts are—discounts for volume are granted?

Mr. Hall: Well, now, discount for volume of what?

[fol. 2701] Mr. Sommerville: Of automotive accessories.

A. May I clarify that? My work, my department is to distribute on orders from a dealer when authorized by the Marketing Sales Department. I am not familiar with the agreements between the Sales Department and the dealers.

Q. Mr. Hays, how are orders placed by Chevron operators on accessory warehouses?

A. They have a form 629—I think it is—two forms, one for tires, tubes and batteries, and another form for so-call automotive accessories—that is mailed to the accessory warehouse within the territory served, and the shipment is made from that order directly to the dealer.

Q. Is the procedure the same with respect to orders originating from Standard Stations, Inc?

A. It is.

Q. How is the merchandise sent to the dealers, Chevron dealers?

A. (No response.)

Q. That is, method of transportation. How are the orders billed?

A. The orders, when they are received, they are shipped whichever is the fastest and most economical method, all through common carrier.

Q. How is the billing done for such merchandise purchaser?

A. The warehouse receiving the order makes out in turn the 800A. That is a billing invoice.

Q. Are any sales of automotive accessories made on consignment to Chevron operators?

Mr. Hall: Are you distinguishing between tires, tubes [fol. 2702] and batteries on the one hand, and accessories on the other?

Mr. Sommerville: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. Are tires and tubes sold to Chevron operators or are they distributed on consignment?

A. On consignment.

Q. Are batteries distributed to Chevron operators on consignment?

A. On consignment.

Q. With respect to tires, tubes and batteries, has that policy of consignment been in effect for a period of time, or——

A. (Interposing:) It was in effect prior to the war, and at the time that the manufacturer of those products was restricted consignment was eliminated because we did not have anything to put out on consignment. We were operating on a very—what we called an allocation, so, we had to distribute the best we could, and the dealer bought them on his regular purchases.

Q. Are automotive accessories, other than tires, tubes, and batteries, distributed to Chevron operators on consignment?

A. No.

Q. With respect to tires, and tubes, sold on consignment to the Chevron dealers, are shipments sent without specific orders from the dealers?

A. No.

Q. In every event then an order must originate from the Chevron dealers?

A. That is correct.

Q. There is no policy with respect to keeping a minimum stock on hand in Chevron stations?

A. A minimum stock?

[fol. 2703] Q. Yes. Of tires and tubes.

A. Yes. When the dealer sells, he is supposed to replace his consignment, place an order for replacement of the consigned stock which he has sold.

Q. Is that true with respect to the batteries also?

A. Yes.

Q. Referring now to the eight accessory warehouses listed in Exhibit C, are these warehouses utilized for distribution of products other than automotive accessories?

A. There are only two which—not—no—let me correct that. It is only automotive accessories. I was thinking you were referring to petroleum products or something of that nature.

Q. What is the arrangement of the distribution covered by each warehouse?

Mr. Hall: May I have that read, please?

(The record was read.)

Mr. Sommerville: I think the exhibit covers that. I would like to go on to another question.

Mr. Hall: You withdraw the question?

Mr. Sommerville: I withdraw the question.

Q. What is the nature of the inventories of tires and tubes in each of these warehouses?

Mr. Hall: Well, now that isn't—I just object to that as unintelligible and too vague to call for any definite answer.

[fol. 2704] Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Mr. Hays, is there not a fixed policy to keep certain stocks of tires and tubes on hand in accessory warehouses?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that policy?

A. Well, I would say the same as any other business, when your stock is depleted you replace it. You maintain a given stock.

Q. How many days supply of tires, tubes, are normally kept on hand?

A. That depends on our supply. We are given—we order monthly and maintain our stocks.

Q. During the period of wartime shortages tires and tubes had been moving in and out of the warehouse?

A. In one door and out the other.

Q. What is your policy with respect to inventories of batteries?

Mr. Hall: Policy with respect to what?

Mr. Sommerville: To inventories or to supplies which will be kept on hand in warehouses.

A. Well, the batteries is something that cannot be stored for any length of time, so we try to keep in one month's supply mostly.

Q. Is there any Company policy for keeping on hand any minimum supplies of automotive accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries?

A. We endeavor to maintain not to exceed a three months stock.

Mr. Hall: You meant warehouses, Counsel?.

Mr. Sommerville: That is correct, at the warehouses.

[fol. 2705] Q. Who determines the size of the supplies that are kept on hand?

Mr. Hall: At the warehouses?

Mr. Sommerville: At the warehouses.

A. From the projected marketing movement.

Q. Is the determination of the stock of accessories determined by each warehouse manager or by a centralized authority?

A. That varies. Certain things are ordered from my office here.

Q. What are those things?

A. At the present time it is tires and tubes and batteries and a few accessory items which are, you might say, on quota.

Q. What are those items?

A. Well, there is tires and tubes and batteries; seasonal items such as antifreeze, tire chains, car heaters and coolers. Well, those are the principal things. I couldn't enumerate them all here, but there are probably not over fifteen to twenty items.

Q. With respect to automotive accessories other than tires, tubes, and batteries, is this merchandise retained in the original packages received from suppliers at the warehouses?

A. Well, some we break the packages and place in bins, because it's shipped in broken packages, less than full packages. Everything else is retained in the full package, where a full package can be shipped.

Q. What are some items that might be placed in bins?

A. Well, we have some, let's say, miniature lamps, spark [fol. 2706] plugs, battery cables, small accessories.

Q. How are tires received in the accessory warehouses?

A. Either through—mostly through railway carload; some points highway truck transportation.

Q. How are batteries received in the accessory warehouses?

A. The same.

Q. How are tires stocked in the accessory warehouses?

Mr. Hall: Just a minute; what do you mean by stocked?

Mr. Sommerville: I was going to add—that is, are they kept on sidings in the railroad tracks, are they actually placed in warehouses, or are they immediately moved out to the——

A. (Interposing:) They are immediately unloaded from the cars when they are received and are stored in the warehouses.

Q. With respect to tires, would the movement out of the warehouse be immedate after receiving a shipment?

Mr. Hall: That question is not clear. I don't know what you mean by that. I object to it; it is unintelligible.

Mr. Sommerville: I will withdraw that.

Q. What is average turnover of those tires received in carload lots?

Mr. Hall: What do you mean by turnover?

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. After a carload of tires is received at an accessory warehouse, how long is it before that carload lot moves out of the warehouse to fulfill the orders of your dealers?

Mr. Hall: Now you are referring to tires and tubes?

[fol. 2707] Mr. Sommerville: Yes.

A. Well, up until the last few months they had gone out probably within a week because we had been on allocation and we hadn't been able to procure tires enough to meet the demand, and so they had gone right out.

Q. Has there been a similar situation with respect to batteries?

A. The same, yes.

Q. Has there been any analogous situation with respect to any other auomotive accessories?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you name some of the principal items of that situation?

A. The principal thing—lamps, fuses, battery cables, fan belts—many of those things which were on allocation all during the war, and they were all back ordered and shipped immediately as they were received.

Q. Frequent delays then have been encountered in fulfilling orders on all of these items?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Does Standard Oil Company of California, own and operate each of these warehouses?

A. Yes.

Q. And the personnel employed in each of these warehouses is under the supervision of the Sales and Equipment Division of——

A. (Interposing) No. I said my function was directing it, but it comes under the location organizations. For instance, Los Angeles, the actual operation is directed [fol. 2708] by our manager in Los Angeles, and different places.

Q. He would be an employee of Standard Oil Company of California?

A. Yes.

Q. And the warehouse employees would be employees of Standard Oil Company of California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In ordering supplies of tires and tubes for these warehouses, am I correct in my understanding that you are responsible for placing orders on the Atlas Supply Company or manufacturers?

A. That is right.

Mr. Hall: Wait a minute—"Atlas Supply Company or manufacturers"?

A. On Atlas Supply Company.

Mr. Hall: Then as I understand it, the witness has answered your question that with respect to Atlas Supply Company and not with respect to manufacturers.

Mr. Sommerville: That is right.

Q. Mr. Hays, who decides on the type or the amount of merchandise to be stocked in each of these warehouses?

A. That is decided by a committee, of which I am a member, together with the merchandising departments.

Q. By "merchandising departments"——

A. (Interposing) Those responsible for the actual selling.

Q. The warehousing manager in each of these districts, [fol. 2709] here, would he be a member of that committee?

A. No.

Q. What are the various brands of merchandise stocked in the warehouses, accessory warehouses?

Mr. Hall: You are calling for the brands and not for the description of the merchandise itself, is that correct?

Mr. Sommerville: That is right.

A. Mostly Atlas, although the merchandise which we procure through Atlas, it comes under its own brand. For instance, head lamps, spark plugs.

Q. Do accessory warehouses handle other than Atlas tires and tubes?

A. No.

Q. Do accessory warehouses handle other than Atlas batteries?

A. Not at the present.

Q. Do accessory warehouses handle other than Atlas fan belts?

A. We have some which we were unable to get from Atlas during the restricted period and we bought from other sources, yes.

Q. Whenever supplies are available from Atlas Supply Company would other brands be stocked?

A. Not of the same merchandise.

Q. How is the merchandise received into the warehouses?

Mr. Hall: The question isn't——

Mr. Sommerville: (Interposing:) Well, let's put it this way.

Q. Do shipments of tires and tubes come directly from [fol. 2710] the manufacturer?

A. They are shipped directly from the manufacturer, yes.

Q. Do shipments of batteries come directly from the manufacturer?

A. They do.

Q. Do shipments of the principal other items of automotive accessories come directly from the manufacturers?

A. From the manufacturer.

Q. Are there ever interwarehouse shipments made?

A. May I ask, do you mean between the manufacturer and our warehouses?

Q. No, I mean——

Mr. Hall: He means, from one accessory warehouse to another accessory warehouse.

A. Oh, yes. Adjustment of stocks at times.

Mr. Sommerville: What determines the necessity for interwarehouse transfer?

A. Well, it may be that they—one fellow would over-estimate their requirements and another under-estimate it, and it would be just balancing our stock. They would be running short and one would take from this warehouse over to another district.

Q. Are orders of the warehouses for supplies of Atlas tires placed directly with the manufacturers of those tires or through Atlas Supply Company?

A. Through Atlas Supply Company.

Q. Is that true with respect to batteries?

A. It is.

[fol. 2711] Q. Is that true with respect to the principal other items of automobile accessories?

A. That is right.

Mr. Hall: You meant, of course, the other accessories that are procured through Atlas? He has testified that some of the accessories, other than tires, tubes and batteries, came from other manufacturers than Atlas.

Mr. Sommerville: That is my understanding.

Q. Have manufacturers of accessories, automotive accessories, negotiated directly with you or with anyone in your division concerning distribution through your warehouses?

A. Yes. We have—there are manufacturers calling on us to interest us in their lines and things like that.

Q. Have you accepted their lines in some instances?

A. We have.

Q. Have you accepted their lines, the lines of any manufacturers, covering accessories that might be supplied by Atlas?

A. They may be a similar line but it isn't identically the same product.

Q. Have you required manufacturers of any automotive accessories to make arrangements for distributing their product through your warehouses under the Atlas brands?

Mr. Hall: May I have that question read, please?

(The record was read.)

A. Well, I have to answer that this way. We naturally wish to feature the Atlas brand, and, for instance, Champion Spark Plug are now placing their plug in an Atlas trade [fol. 2712] mark carton.

Q. Why do you seek to market under the Atlas brand?

Mr. Hall: That is objected to as calling for the conclusion of the witness, and incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

Mr. Sommerville: The witness stated that naturally they wished to feature the Atlas brand.

Mr. Hall: You are calling for the conclusion of the witness nevertheless. The objection is also predicated upon the thought that it is quite immaterial as to their reasons. The question is what they do, not why they do it.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Do you distribute automotive accessories under the Atlas brand? Now, I am referring to accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries.—pursuant to any agreement with Atlas Supply Company?

A. Oh, yes. Not under Atlas brand.

Mr. Hall: What was the answer? Did I get that right? Would you read the question back, Mr. Reporter?

(The record was read.)

A. It would be "no" then, because we are not in a position to market anything under Atlas brand that doesn't come from Atlas. That is Atlas' trade mark.

Mr. Sommerville: Well, what I mean to say is that do——

Mr. Hall: Why don't you ask him if he has a contract with Atlas?

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. You have a contract with Atlas Supply Company [fol. 2713] covering automotive accessories?

Mr. Hall: Not "covering" because if there is a contract the contract speaks for itself. Now, as a part of your demand for production under Rule 34 in this case you have requested, as I recall it, the Atlas contract. That is going to be furnished to you. Now, the contract speaks for itself. So don't ask this witness as to conclusions as to what the contract contains or his interpretation of the contract.

Mr. Sommerville: I will be satisfied with another question here.

Q. Are there any conferences held with representatives of Atlas Supply Company concerning distribution of automotive accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries under the Atlas brand name?

Mr. Hall: Would you read that question, please?

(The record was read.)

Mr. Hall: Are you inquiring as to the practice, Mr. Sommerville?

Mr. Sommerville: Yes.

A. The only thing we would consult with Atlas on, if we decided we would like to market a certain thing that is presented to us, would be to ask Atlas if they will be interested in marketing this product under their name, telling them who the people are. They would make any arrangements or anything of that nature.

Q. What is the relationship of Atlas Supply Company to [fol. 2714] Standard Oil of California?

Mr. Hall: What do you mean by "what is the relationship?"

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Does Standard Oil Company have any ownership in the stock of Atlas Supply Company?

Mr. Hall: Is that your question?

Mr. Sommerville: Yes.

A. I only from hearsay understand that.

Mr. Hall: I don't want you to give any hearsay.

Mr. Sommerville: We don't want any hearsay. Can you state of your own knowledge?

A. To my knowledge I have never seen an agreement.

Q. Are there any officers of the Atlas Supply Company who are also officers of Standard Oil?

Mr. Hall: I have no objection if the witness knows. Do you know the answer to that question?

A. Yes. One of our officers is an officer of the Atlas Supply Company.

Mr. Sommerville: Who is that officer?

A. That is Mr. E. J. McClanahan, Vice President charge of Marketing.

Q. Are any employees of Atlas Supply Company on the payroll of Standard Oil Company within your knowledge?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know what position Mr. McClanahan has with Atlas?

Mr. Hall: That is objected to as incompetent, irrelevant [fol. 2715] and immaterial.

Mr. Sommerville: It shows integration between the operations, between the Atlas Supply Company and Standard Oil Company.

Mr. Hall: That is not within the pleadings.

Mr. Sommerville: May he be permitted to answer subject to objection?

Mr. Hall: Subject to objection, yes.

A. He is a director.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Do you know what period of time the present contract between Atlas Supply Company and Standard Oil Company of California covers?

Mr. Hall: Just a minute; the contract will speak for itself. You're calling for the terms of a contract.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Is Standard Oil Company of California the sole distributor for Atlas Supply Company?

Mr. Hall: That is objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and not within the pleadings.

Mr. Sommerville: I would like that answer subject to that objection.

Mr. Hall: I don't think you are entitled to go into that. That has no possible relation to anything which you complained of in this case.

Mr. Sommerville: I think that has a bearing upon the interstate character of the arrangement in question. It shows control from start to finish over the automotive acces- [fol. 2716] sories in question; control from the common source.

Mr. Hall: I don't think it shows any such thing. It can't possibly show any such thing. In the second place, you haven't pleaded it.

Mr. Sommerville: It has a bearing upon the interstate commerce it pleaded it had. If Atlas Supply Company——

Mr. Thrody: And the motive.

Mr. Hall: Motive for what?

Mr. Thrody: For the whole observation in this thing.

Mr. Sommerville: If Atlas Supply Company——

Mr. Hall: Read the question to the witness. If the witness can answer, it can go in under my objection.

(The record was read.)

Mr. Hall: Subject to my objection.

A. Within our marketing territory.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. By that you mean the seven western states, California, Washington, Oregon, Arizona, Nevada, Idaho, and Utah?

A. With the exception of Utah and Idaho, in which Atlas supplies are marketed by the Utah Oil Company.

Mr. Hall: Utah Oil Refining Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sommerville:

Q. Mr. Hays, who manufactures Atlas tires and tubes and from what factories do you receive shipments?

Mr. Hall: Well, now, wait a minute; that question is [fol. 2717] double barrel. Why don't you spread it out?

Mr. Sommerville: O.K.

Q. Who manufactures Atlas tires and tubes?

Mr. Hall: You mean——

Mr. Sommerville: Distributed through your accessory warehouses?

A. Through our accessory warehouses—United States Rubber Company.

Q. From what factories do your accessory warehouses receive shipments?

Mr. Hall: Tires and Tubes, you mean?

Mr. Sommerville: Of tires and tubes.

A. Los Angeles.

Q. Are shipments received from any other factories of tires and tubes?

Mr. Hall: At the accessory warehouses?

Mr. Sommerville: At the accessory warehouses.

A. Only when there might be something, that they're ordered through Los Angeles but might come from some other source, through the many cities, through the other factories. That may be the case where they couldn't fill it there.

Q. Who manufactures Atlas batteries distributed through your accessory warehouses?

A. There are several: Auto-Lite, Solar and others.

Q. Where is that located?

A. Oakland. Solar, Los Angeles, and—it slipped my mind for a moment—one of the major battery companies [fol. 2718] here.

Q. Are any——

A. It just slipped my mind for a moment. It's a major company.

Q. Let me ask an additional question. Are any Atlas batteries distributed through your accessory warehouses received from the factories located outside of the State of California?

A. Only at times, which would apply the same as the factory, the local factory, and they might have to ship that which they were unable to obtain, but that is exceptional.

Q. Who manufactures Atlas spark plugs distributed through accessory warehouses?

A. Champion Spark Plug.

Q. From what factories do you receive shipments of those spark plugs?

A. They come from the eastern states. I believe it's Jersey; come from various factories—we don't know where—when we place an order where they would be shipped from. It's an eastern shipment.

Q. What manufacturer or manufacturers manufacture battery cables distributed through accessory warehouses?

A. Well, there have been several. When we place an order for Atlas, they may come from different manufacturers.

Q. Located outside of the State of California?

A. Outside the State of California, yes.

Q. What manufacturers manufacture fan belts distributed through your accessory warehouses?

A. That would be the same thing.

Q. What manufacturers produce oil filters distributed [fol. 2719] through your accessory warehouses?

A. They come from the east also. Some manufacturers are the same as—Atlas are not tied up with any one manufacturer.

Q. From what manufacturers are shipments of waxes, polishes, and other chemicals received by your accessory warehouses?

A. Various manufacturers.

Q. Located throughout the United States?

A. Throughout the United States.

Q. Is that true also of radiator caps?

A. Yes.

Q. Oil filter elements?

A. Yes.

Q. And automotive accessories we have not named specifically?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you receive Atlas tires and tubes into the accessory warehouses on consignment?

A. No.

Mr. Hall: You mean, on consignment from Atlas?

Mr. Sommerville: Yes.

Mr. Hall: Or from manufacturers?

Mr. Sommerville: No.

Q. How are orders placed on Atlas Supply Company by accessory warehouses?

A. Through a regular ordering form which we have.

Q. Does title to automotive accessories supplied by Atlas [fol. 2720] Supply Company to your accessory warehouses pass at the time shipment is made to those warehouses?

A. Passes to Standard Oil.

Q. To Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Q. That you know?

A. Well, I would say it does when they are received in the warehouse, yes.

Q. Do you have any knowledge of whether or not title vests in Atlas Supply Company from the manufacturer?

Mr. Hall: That is objected to as calling for the conclusion of the witness.

Mr. Sommerville: I agree.

Q. With respect to the forms on which this merchandise is ordered, are they placed directly with Atlas?

A. With the local representative of Atlas here in San Francisco.

Q. And is a copy of that—does a copy of that form go to the central office of Standard Oil Company of California?

A. Goes to the accounting office for the billing.

Q. Are records maintained with respect to the amount of accessories, merchandise, including tires and tubes and batteries, by each Chevron station, Chevron dealer?

Mr. Hall: Will you read that, please?

(The record was read.)

Mr. Hall: You mean, inventory records?

Mr. Sommerville: No. Records of sales, purchases by [fol. 2721] Chevron dealers.

Mr. Hall: You mean, does each dealer that buys tires, tubes and batteries and accessories keep a record of what he buys?

Mr. Sommerville: Does the Company keep a record of all sales made to Chevron dealers of automotive accessories, including tires, tubes and batteries?

A. Well, yes, for billing purposes.

Q. Are records kept for the purpose of granting discounts for volume sales?

A. For volume sales, yes.

Q. Do you know what those discounts are?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Going back, Mr. Hays, you stated that at times manufacturers will approach you or other representatives of the Company concerning your distributing their automotive accessories, and you testified sometimes—that you sometimes accepted their line and that it might be a similar line to the Atlas line. Could you clarify that further? What do you mean by similar line?

A. Well, I would say this, it may be a car polish. Now, each motorist has his preference to a certain type of car polish that he might need. Car-Nu people, they have another one; and for certain types of polishing the public wants a soft polish, or a harsh polish, or some other kind, liquid wax or hard wax, or something like that.

Q. Do you stock polishes other than Atlas polishes in accessory warehouses?

A. Yes.

[fol. 2722] Q. In those instances in which these polishes are stocked there would be some peculiar appeal to the consumer over the Atlas brand?

A. That is right.

Q. Referring now to Exhibit C for Identification, you indicated here that the San Francisco warehouse services dealers in Northwestern Nevada, also the Lakeview District in Southern Oregon. Can you state approximately the amounts that are sold to those districts outside of California?

Mr. Hall: Amounts of what over what period?

Mr. Somerville: Amounts of tires and tubes.

A. No.

Q. Accessories?

A. No.

Mr. Sommerville: I think that is all, Mr. Hays. Thank you very much.

Cross-examination.

Mr. Hall:

Q. Is it correct that substantially all the requirements of tires and tubes furnished to the eight accessory warehouses listed in Exhibit C are furnished from factories in California?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it correct that substantially 100% of the batteries furnished to the accessory warehouses shown in Exhibit C are furnished from California factories?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I think you said that the practice, except for the war period, had been to consign tires and tubes to the [fol. 2723] dealers that took the tires and tubes from the accessory warehouses?

A. That is right.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. And is the same thing true with respect to the batteries?

A. With respect to the batteries.

Q. You said that the distribution from the accessory warehouses to the dealers would be entirely by common carrier, is that right?

A. Entirely, yes, sir.

Q. And the methods of transport by the common carrier would be parcel post or Railway Express or freight, is that correct?

A. Would be either by railway freight, highway transport freight, parcel post, or American Railway Express.

Q. When the tires and tubes arrive at an accessory warehouse, are they sorted out and records made of the types and sizes?

A. Oh, yes, and checked against the shipping—bills of lading, and stacked separately by sizes.

Q. Is the same thing true with respect to batteries?

A. Yes.

Mr. Hall: That is all.

Mr. Somerville: That is all.

Harry T. Hays.

[fol. 2724] UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Northern District of California,
City and County of San Francisco, ss.

I hereby certify that on the 9th day of March, 1948, at 2:00 o'clock p. m., and on the 10th day of March, 1948, at 9:00 o'clock a. m., before me, Edith Goewey, a Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, at Room 1712, Standard Oil Building, 225 Bush Street, San Francisco, California, personally appeared, pursuant to stipulation between counsel for the respective parties, Francis S. Olane, L. M. Bussert, and Harry T. Hays, witnesses called on behalf of the plaintiffs herein; and W. A. Thody, Esquire, and Lawrence W. Sommerville, Esquire, Special Assistants to The Attorney General, appeared as attorneys for the plaintiffs, and Messrs. Lawler, Felix & Hall, represented by John M. Hall, Esquire, and Messrs. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, represented by Henry G. Hayes, Esquire, appeared as attorneys for the defendants; and the said Francis S. Olane, L. M. Bussert, and Harry T. Hays being by me first duly cautioned and sworn to testify the whole truth, and being carefully examined, deposed and said as appears by their depositions hereto annexed.

And I further certify that the said depositions were then and there recorded stenographically by Harry A. Cannon, a competent official and disinterested shorthand reporter, appointed by me for that purpose and acting under my direction and personal supervision, and were transcribed [fol. 2725] by him; that the depositions are a true record of the testimony given by the said witnesses.

And I further certify that the exhibits hereto attached and marked for identification "Plaintiff's Exhibit A-1," "Plaintiff's Exhibit B-1," and "Plaintiff's Exhibit C," and the exhibits accompanying the depositions and marked for identification "Plaintiff's Exhibit A," and "Plaintiff's Exhibit B," are the exhibits referred to and used in connection with the depositions of said witnesses.

And I further certify that the said depositions have been retained by me for the purpose of securely sealing them in an envelope and directing the same to the Clerk of the Court as required by law.

And I further certify that I am not of counsel or attorney for either or any of the parties, nor am I interested in the event of the cause; I further certify that I am not a relative or employee of or attorney or counsel for either or any of the parties, nor a relative or employee of such attorney or counsel, nor financially interested in the action.

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and official seal at the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, this 25th day of March, A. D. 1948.

Edith Goewey, Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California.

Dealer Agreement

This agreement, dated the day of , 193 , by and between Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," and , hereinafter called "Dealer";

Witnesseth:

Company hereby appoints its Dealer to operate Company's service station and any other facilities in connection therewith, located at in the City of State of , upon the following terms and conditions:

1. Company hereby sells to Dealer and Dealer buys from Company all of Dealer's requirements of gasoline used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer in the conduct of his business on the above described premises.

2. Deliveries shall be made at the above mentioned location on orders of Dealer by tank truck in fairly even monthly quantities at the prices hereinafter specified.

3. It is agreed that the products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be Company's regular commercial brands of Standard and Standard Ethyl Gasolines. Dealer shall, however, have the right to purchase from Company hereunder and Company agrees to sell and deliver to Dealer such quantities of Company's Flight brand of gasoline as Dealer may order from time to time, Company to be obligated to deliver said product, however, only during such time or times as the same is being marketed by Company generally at point of delivery.

4. The price which Dealer shall pay Company for deliveries of gasoline hereunder shall be Company's posted tank truck price to Dealer's class of trade generally at time and place of delivery for the particular brand of gasoline involved.

5. Company agrees to sell to Dealer, and Dealer agrees to buy and stock at said location during the life of this contract, in quantities sufficient to meet the demand therefor, all of Dealer's requirements of lubricating products, and Dealer agrees to diligently promote the sale of said products. The price which Dealer shall pay Company for deliveries of lubricating products hereunder shall be Company's posted list price therefor at time and place of delivery for the particular product, type and class of delivery involved.

6. Any and all products delivered to Dealer hereunder and resold by Dealer shall be resold at not less than Company's posted retail price therefor at time and place of delivery, and said products shall not be advertised, offered for sale, or sold at a lower price.

7. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option. If at any time Dealer shall fail to make any payment due hereunder, such failure shall, at Company's option, be deemed by Company to be a breach of the entire contract and Company may suspend deliveries until such payment has been made or may terminate this contract. No such suspension or termination shall however affect any obligation of Dealer hereunder.

8. Any tax imposed by any governmental authority upon or measured by the production or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, or upon, incident to, or as a result of the transaction in this agreement provided for shall, if payable by the Company, be added to the price specified herein and shall be paid by the Dealer to the Company at the time of and in addition to payment of the purchase price herein provided.

9. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition; and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees that the colors, brands, trade-marks, or trade brands appearing on the equipment at the premises above described, or which may hereafter be placed thereon by Company or on Company's order, will not be removed therefrom.

10. Dealer agrees to push diligently the sale of all products and goods delivered to Dealer hereunder, and to use his best efforts to increase the sale thereof. Dealer shall not adulterate or substitute such products or goods with any other products whatsoever.

11. Dealer agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the company against all claims for damage to property, or injury or death to persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

12. In the event of the breach of any clause hereof, or if Dealer in the opinion of Company does not fully perform Dealer's obligations hereunder, Company may revoke this agreement forthwith.

13. Dealer agrees to conduct all operations hereunder in strict compliance with all the laws, ordinances and regulations of governmental authorities. Dealer further agrees to conduct said operations in a manner best suited for the preservation of Company's property of whatever kind and nature, the furtherance of the sale of Company's products and the promotion of public good will towards the Company. If is understood and agreed that Dealer in the performance of this agreement is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of this agreement. It is further understood and agreed that Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees, [fol. 2767] and that all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer undertakes and agrees that he will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under the Federal Social Security Act and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

14. Company, in its uncontrolled discretion, may at any time change the brand name or any distinctive designation of any of its products. Should Company do so, this contract shall be deemed to cover the product of the new name and/or designation to the same extent as if said name or designation was specifically set forth herein.

15. It is understood and agreed that the product or products covered by this contract will be sold to the public as the product or products of Company under Company's regular trade-marks and brands for such product or products. Dealer is not to use, in connection with the sale and/or advertisement for sale of said product or products, any trade-mark, trade name or color scheme other than those regularly used by Company for such product or products, unless expressly consented to in writing by Company. Upon written notice from Company or upon any termination of this contract, Dealer shall discontinue the use, in any manner, of Company's trade-marks, trade names and/or color schemes.

16. This agreement shall be operative from and after the day of 19 , and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first 6 months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year by giving to the other at least 30 days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agreement shall terminate forthwith upon the termination of any lease which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement.

17. Dealer shall pay to Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, in advance, on the 1st day of each and every month during the life of this Agreement commencing on the day of 193 , the sum of Dollars ( ).

18. This agreement shall not be assignable without the written consent of Company first had and obtained.

19. Until further notice from Company, all payments to be made and notices to be given by or to Company hereunder shall be made or given by or to Standard Stations, Inc., as the case may be.

20. The waiver of any breach of any provision hereof shall not be deemed to be a waiver of the breach of any other provision or provisions hereof, or of any subsequent or continuing breach of such provision or provisions.

21. In the event Company is prevented from or hindered in making deliveries hereunder due to fire, riot, labor disturbances, earthquakes, war, acts of any government (whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal), accident, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities or supplies, shortage of products deliverable under this contract due to a shortage in the available supply of crude oil, or any cause beyond its control whether similar to the foregoing causes or not, the obligation of Company to make deliveries during the period of such disability shall be suspended.

22. This Agreement as of the date of commencement hereof shall terminate and supersede that certain agreement between Dealer herein and Company or Standard Stations, Inc., its predecessor in interest, respecting the demised premises dated the day of 193 .

[fol. 2774] Dealer Agreement

This Agreement, dated the day of , 19 , by and between STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," and , herein called "Dealer";

Witnesseth:

Company hereby appoints its Dealer for the sale of petroleum products and other merchandise marketed by Company at in the City of County of State of upon the following terms and conditions:

1. Company agrees to sell to Dealer, and Dealer agrees to buy from Company and stock and offer for sale all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer in the conduct of his business on the premises herein described. The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils and other petroleum products currently sold at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc. in Dealer's vicinity, and Dealer agrees not to store, handle, distribute, or sell any other brand or brands of petroleum products at or from the station.

2. Deliveries of gasoline shall be made at the above mentioned location on orders of Dealer by tank truck in fairly even monthly quantities.

3. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products purchased by Dealer shall be Company's posted price for the same or similar products to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity at time and place of delivery.

4. Any and all petroleum products sold to Dealer hereunder and sold by Dealer shall be sold at not less than Company's authorized retail price therefor at time and place of sale and said products shall not be advertised, offered for sale, or sold at a lower price.

5. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging the trade for gasoline or lubricating oil sold to Dealer hereunder, it is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval.

6. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option. If at any time Dealer shall fail to make any payment due hereunder, such failure shall, at Company's option, be deemed by Company to be a breach of the entire contract and Company may suspend deliveries until such payment has been made or may terminate this contract. No such suspension or termination shall however affect any obligation of Dealer hereunder.

7. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to or as a result of the transaction herein provided for or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectable of payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

8. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at is discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees that the colors, brands, trade-marks, or trade brands appearing on the equipment at the premises above described, or which may hereafter be placed thereon by Company or on Company's order, will not be removed therefrom.

9. Dealer agrees to push diligently the sale of all products and goods delivered to Dealer hereunder, and to use his best efforts to increase the sale thereof. Dealer shall not adulterate or substitute such products or goods with any other products whatsoever.

10. Dealer agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property, or injury or death to persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

11. In the event of the breach of any clause hereof, or if Dealer in the opinion of Company does not fully perform Dealer's obligations hereunder, Company may revoke this agreement forthwith.

12. Dealer agrees to conduct all operations hereunder in strict compliance with all the laws, ordinances and regulations of governmental authorities. Dealer further agrees to conduct said operations in a manner best suited for the preservation of Company's property of whatever kind and nature, the furtherance of the sale of Company's products and the promotion of public good will towards the Company. It is understood and agreed that Dealer in the performance of this agreement is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his physical conduct in the performance of this agreement. It is further understood and agreed that Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and that all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer undertakes and agrees that he will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under the Federal Social Security Act and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

[fol. 2775] 13. Company, in its uncontrolled discretion, may at any time change the brand name or any distinctive designation of any of its products. Should Company do so, this contract shall be deemed to cover the product of the new name and/or designation to the same extent as if said name or designation was specifically set forth herein.

14. It is understood and agreed that the product or products covered by this contract will be sold to the public as the product or products of Company under Company's regular trade-marks and brands for such product or products. Dealer is not to use, in connection with the sale and/or advertisement for sale of said product or products, any trademark, trade name or color scheme other than those regularly used by Company for such product or products, unless expressly consented to in writing by Company. Upon written notice from Company or upon any termination of this contract, Dealer shall discontinue the use, in any manner, of Company's trade-marks, trade names and/or color schemes.

15. This agreement shall be operative from and after the ..... day of ....., 19 , and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first 6 months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year by giving to the other at least 30 days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agreement shall terminate forthwith upon the termination of any lease which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement, or upon the termination of any sublease between Dealer and Company covering said premises.

16. This Agreement shall not be assignable without the written consent of Company first had and obtained.

17. Until further notice from Company, all payments to be made and notices to be given by or to Company hereunder shall be made or given by or to Standard Stations, Inc. as the case may be.

18. The waiver of any breach of any provision hereof shall not be deemed to be a waiver of the breach of any other provision or provisions hereof, or of any subsequent or continuing breach of such provision or provisions.

19. If Company is prevented from or hindered in making deliveries hereunder due to fire, riot, labor disturbances, earthquakes, war, acts of any government (whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal), accident, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities or supplies, shortage of products deliverable under this contract due to a shortage in the supply of crude oil produced in the State of California, or any cause beyond its control whether similar to the foregoing causes or not, the obligation of Company to make deliveries during the period of such disability shall be suspended.

20. This Agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof, terminate all prior Dealer and Agency Agreements between Dealer and Company respecting the premises covered by this Agreement.

16. This agreement shall not be assignable without the written consent of Company first had and obtained.

17. The waiver of any breach of any provision hereof shall not be deemed to be a waiver of the breach of any other provision or provisions hereof, or of any subsequent or continuing breach of such provision or provisions.

18. If Company is prevented from or hindered in making deliveries hereunder due to fire, riot, labor disturbances, earthquakes, war, acts of any government (whether foreign or domestic, federal, state, county or municipal), accident, total or partial failure of transportation or delivery facilities or supplies, shortage of products deliverable under this contract due to a shortage in the supply of crude oil produced in the State of California, or any cause beyond its control whether similar to the foregoing causes or not, the obligation of Company to make deliveries during the period of such disability shall be suspended.

19. This Agreement shall, as of the commencement date hereof terminate all prior Dealer and Agency Agreements between Dealer and Company respecting the premises and subject matter covered by this Agreement.

[fol. 2780] Dealer Agreement

Dated , 19

1. STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, a corporation, hereinafter called "Company," agrees to sell to .....,

hereinafter called "Dealer," and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at .....

The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity.

2. Deliveries shall be made in Company's customary manner. The price Dealer shall pay Company for petroleum products hereunder shall be Company's posted price to its dealers generally at time and place of delivery hereunder for the particular product and type of delivery involved. Terms shall be net cash at time of delivery, except at Company's option.

3. The products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trade-marks or brands for such products and shall not be sold, or offered for sale, at prices lower than Company's authorized retail prices therefor at time and place of sale. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging the trade for gasoline or lubricating oil sold to Dealer hereunder, it is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval. Company shall be excused from making deliveries hereunder while prevented from or hindered in doing so in its customary manner due to causes beyond its control. Whenever such causes require that deliveries of any product hereunder be restricted, Company reserves the right to restrict deliveries of such product to Dealer proportionately with restrictions on deliveries of such products to other comparable dealers in Dealer's vicinity.

4. Dealer shall pay to Company for the use of Company's facilities on said premises, as follows:

5. This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing , 194 , and ending , 19 , and from year to year thereafter; provided, however, either party may terminate this agreement at the end of the first 6 months of any contract year, or at the end of any such year, by giving to the other at least 30 days prior thereto written notice of its intention to so terminate this agreement. Notwithstanding the foregoing, this agreement shall terminate forthwith upon the termination of any lease [fol. 2781] which Company may have upon the premises covered by this agreement, or upon the termination of any sublease between Dealer and Company covering said premises.

6. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property (including Dealer's property), or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about the said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

7. In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing herein contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contribution and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

8. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as a result of the transaction herein provided for, or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for.

9. This agreement shall not be assignable without the prior written consent of the Company. The waiver by Company of any default by Dealer shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver of such default or the waiver of the de-

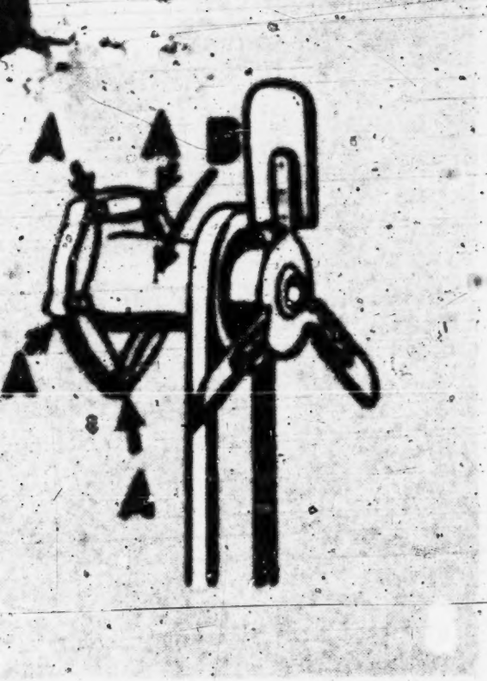
Radiator Hose

INSTALLATION PROCEDURE

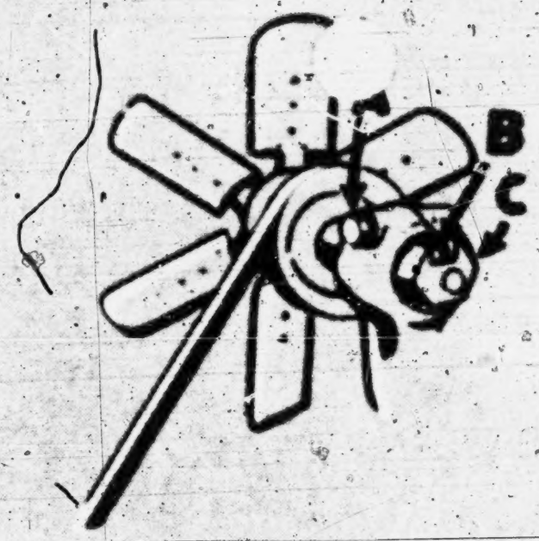
Opposite each car model listed in the specification section, are the lengths for both the upper and lower hose. Check these specifications against the connection on the car, then remove the clamps and hose. If only the upper hose is to be replaced, a part of the water must be drained, but if the lower hose is to be replaced, drain all the water.

Cut replacement hose from a three-foot length of the correct diameter, being certain that the length agrees exactly with the old one removed from the car.

Make certain the pipes leading from radiator and motor are clean. Scrape off all accumulation of rust and grease. Slip hose over the pipes and check the hose clamps. It is usually best to install a new clamp when replacing hose.



ATLAS MOLDED CURVED RADIATOR HOSE



On many of the late model cars the regular type radiator hose cannot be used because it would buckle at the sharp bends necessary for proper installation and stop circulation of the cooling system.

Atlas Curved Radiator Hose because of its molded construction will not collapse or buckle. Made in various sizes and curvatures for proper installation regardless of the shape required. Correct size for car model can be determined from specification section.

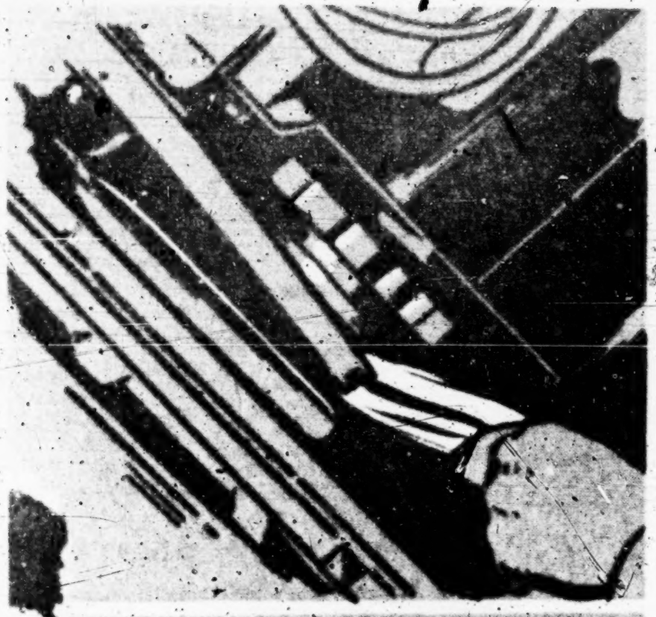
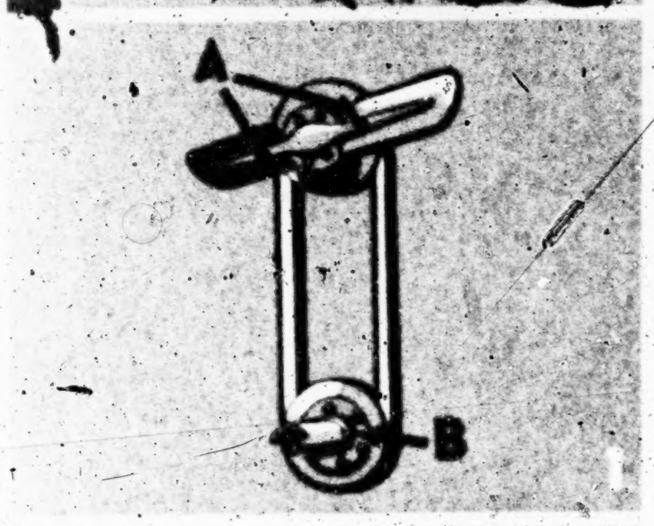
The eccentric type of adjustment. Loosen bolts A and turn pump to raise or lower fan. This same adjustment is used on Packard cars equipped with a dual belt assembly.

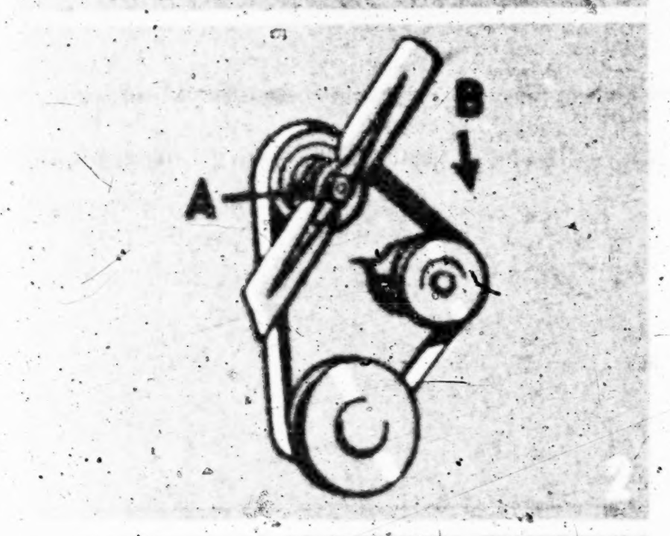
9 Another type of eccentric adjustment. Loosen bolt A which holds the sleeve enclosing shaft, loosen bolt B and turn nut C to raise or lower assembly. This adjustment is used on Pierce-Arrow cars equipped with a dual belt assembly.



10 Another type of post adjustment similar to Illustration 7. Fan rests on post B enclosed in sleeve. Loosen bolt A to raise or lower assembly. Letter C shows shroud adjustment. Loosen nuts and raise or lower shroud to prevent fan blades from touching it.



Test fan belt for proper tension. Must be loose enough to permit deflection of at least 1 inch.



NOTE: That part of the illustrations showing different methods of removing fan blades should be referred to only when it is absolutely necessary to remove the blades. Under no circumstances are the blades to be removed until you are satisfied that the belt cannot be applied without this operation.

Place folded rag under fan belt to help work it onto pulley.

1 Letter A shows the two nuts to be removed if it is necessary to remove blades. Letter B shows the nut which holds the crank stub. On some model cars this stub projects so far that it must be removed to apply the belt. To remove stub, set punch or screw driver against nut and tap with hammer.

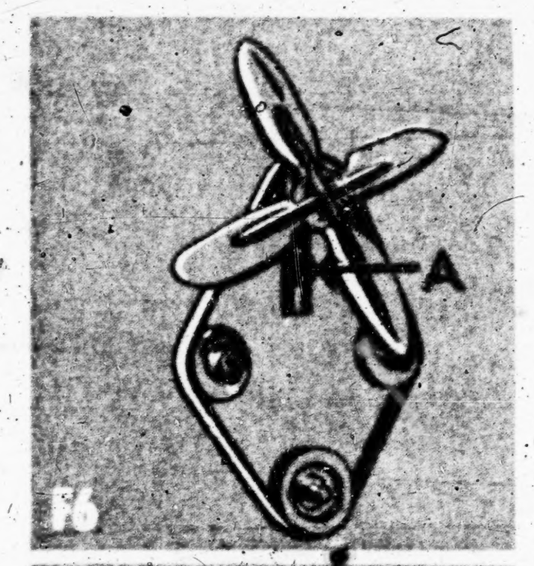
2 Shows the three-pulley drive with generator arm adjustment. Letter A indicates nut on outside of fan. If necessary to remove fan blades, first remove cotter pin and nut. Letter B shows adjustment on arm. Loosen nut and raise or lower generator for proper tension.

3 Showing another three-pulley is for reference only when it is necessary to remove the fan blades on a fan of this type. The arrows point to nuts to be removed.

4 Shows the split-pulley type of adjustment. Loosen nut A and turn fan forward or backward to open pulley. The flanges of the pulley will separate and belt will drop into groove allowing removal from lower pulley.

5 A popular two-pulley assembly that is easy to adjust. Loosen nut at A and raise or lower entire fan assembly.

INSTALLATION PROCEDURE

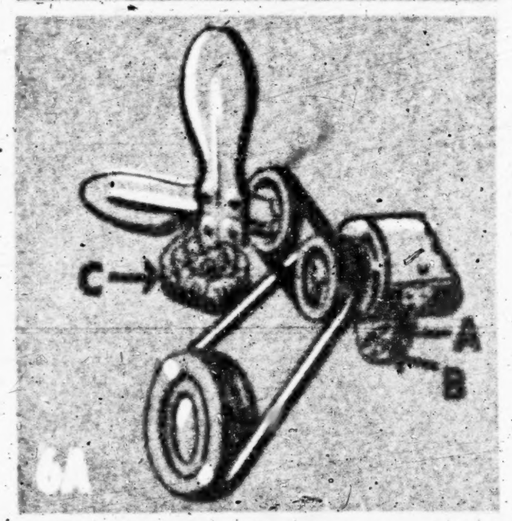


Following illustrations demonstrate the various types of fan belt assemblies. The reference charts include a code number which refers to the illustration covering installation.

F6 Assembly in this illustration is for a Ford V8 and is raised or lowered by loosening nut A. On Lincoln Zephyr, Mercury and some Ford V8 Models, the fan blades are located on drive shaft; however, adjustment is still made at nut A. 1942 V8 equipped with two belts. To adjust loosen three nuts at point A.

6 Entire fan assembly is raised or lowered by loosening nut A. Several variations of this adjustment are in use.

6A Shows assembly on 1941 and 1942 6 cyl. Ford. Loosen bolts A and B to release tension on both belts. Unfasten clips on distributor cap C to remove generator belt. 1942 fan blades are located on water pump pulley, and for 1941 on drive pulley.



7 Known as the post adjustment. The fan assembly rests on a post set in a sleeve. To adjust loosen bolt A and raise or lower entire assembly. On some model cars the generator rests on a post at the top of the motor.

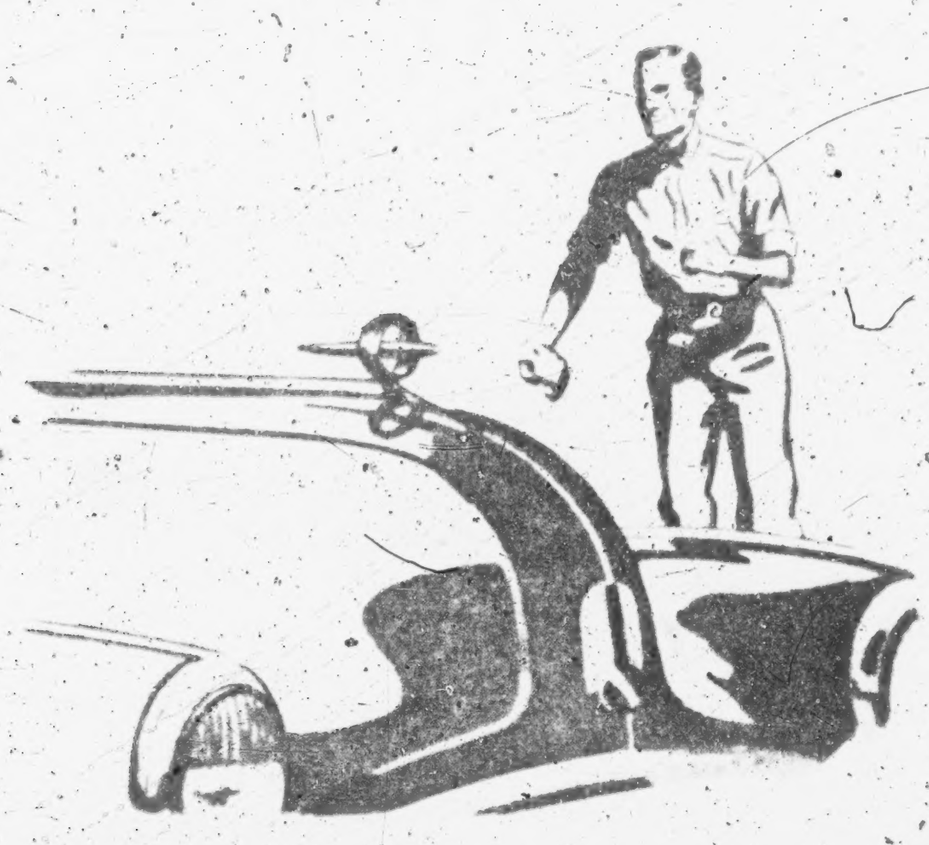
At all times, avoid touching equipment with dirty hands, or putting tools and equipment away without wiping.

When dispensing gas and water, stand well back from the car and keep the hose away from your clothes.

When checking oil, avoid rubbing against fender.

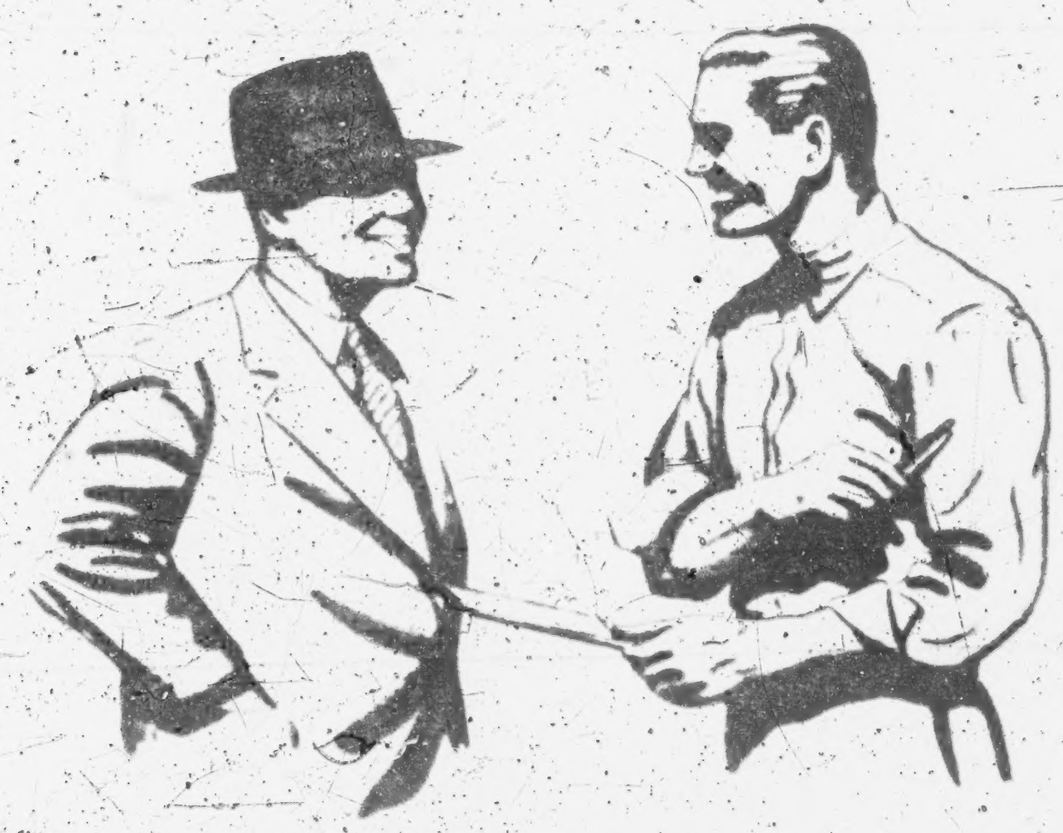
When wiping windshield, keep clear of the car.

Wear a service coat in the lube unit.



Sell YOURSELF first

If customers are sold on you . . . your appearance . . . your way of doing things . . . you're over the first hurdle and on your way to sales.



BE FRIENDLY

Friendliness shows appreciation, invites confidence.

BE ALERT

The customer values his time. Meet him promptly when he drives in.

BE BUSINESS-LIKE

The way you handle contacts with the customer tells him how you will handle his business.

The MAN makes the station

You're doing business under your own name.
That sets your station apart from others.

It's what you give this station—the thought, care and energy you put into it mainly—that attracts customers.

INTRODUCING Mr. A. W. Jarrett

CHEVRON DEALER, TOMBSTONE, ARIZ.

Mr. Jarrett knows *that clean restrooms pay off—in profits

Here's what one customer wrote about his well-kept facilities:

"One of the few and cleanest restrooms I have ever been in. It amazes me that traveling with my husband at times, one finds so few they can really rave about. This station really had a clean place, as if everything had just been scrubbed."

For a man 80 years young, Mr. Jarrett is doing a remarkable job. Local labor is hired to completely clean each restroom twice weekly. In addition, the restrooms are serviced many times daily. His Gasoline sales are excellent—operating hours are maintained for the convenience of his customers.

This all adds up to A. W. Jarrett being one of many progressive Chevron Dealers in Arizona.

PETITION FOR APPEAL—Filed July 20, 1948

Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, and Standard Stations, Inc., a corporation, defendants in the above entitled cause, considering themselves aggrieved by the final judgment of this Court entered on June 30, 1948, do hereby pray an appeal from said final judgment to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Pursuant to Rule 12 of the Revised Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, as amended, said defendants present to this Court herewith a statement showing the basis of jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to entertain an appeal in this cause.

[fol. 2829] The particulars wherein said defendants consider the judgment erroneous are set forth in the assignment of errors and prayer for reversal accompanying this petition and to which reference is hereby made.

The defendants pray that their appeal may be allowed and that citation be issued as provided by law, and that the amount of an appeal bond be fixed and said bond be approved, and that a transcript of the records, proceedings and documents upon which said final judgment was based, duly authenticated, be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States under the rules of said Court in such cases made and provided.

Dated: July 20, 1948.

Marshall P. Madison, John M. Hall, Attorneys for Said Defendants.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

[Title omitted]

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS AND PRAYER FOR REVERSAL—Filed July 20, 1948

Defendants in the above entitled cause (defendant, Standard Oil Company of California, being herein called "Standard"), in connection with their petition for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby assign error to the record and proceedings and the entry of the final judgment of the District Court on June 30, 1948, in the above entitled cause, and say that in the entry of said final judgment the District Court committed error to the prejudice of defendants in the following particulars:

[fol. 2831] 1. The court erred in holding and concluding that the agreements and subleases herein involved were an unreasonable restraint of or might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in a line of interstate commerce in view of the number of such agreements and subleases and the quantity and value of products and accessories purchased from Standard by the dealers having such agreements and subleases, irrespective of the evidence in the record relating to competitive market conditions or Standard's competitive position in the area in question or defendants' intent or purpose, with respect to such agreements or subleases.

2. The court erred in holding and concluding, in view of the entire evidence in the record repelling each such holding and conclusion:

(a) That the agreements or subleases directly affect or unreasonably restrain the course of interstate commerce in petroleum products or automotive accessories.

(b) That the agreements or subleases substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the sale or distribution of petroleum products or automotive accessories, or that this may be their effect.

(c) That there was any violation of sec. 1 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C. A. 1) or of sec. 3 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 731; 15 U. S. C. A. 14).

(d) That the subleases or any of the provisions thereof, or the agreements or any of the provisions thereof, were within the purview of either sec. 1 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C. A. 1) or sec. 3 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 731; 15 U. S. C. A. 14).

(e) That the agreements or subleases have had the effect [fol. 2832] of foreclosing competition in the sale of petroleum products or automotive accessories from a substantial market, or were so intended by either of the defendants.

(f) That the agreements or subleases unreasonably restrained or substantially lessened competition in an appreciable segment of interstate commerce in the sale or distribution of petroleum products or automotive accessories, or were so intended by either of the defendants.

(g) That the agreements or subleases have had the effect of denying dealers access to competitors' products or of locking out dealers from the sources of products originating in interstate commerce, or were so intended by either of the defendants.

(h) That the agreements or subleases have had the effect of denying manufacturers or suppliers access to a substantial or any number of potential outlets for their products, or were so intended by either of the defendants.

(i) That the number of outlets or the volume of business in petroleum products or automotive accessories foreclosed to competition by the agreements or subleases was or is substantial.

(j) That any of the provisions of the agreements or subleases were or are illegal in their effect, or that plaintiff is entitled to injunctive or other relief.

(k) That either of the defendants made agreements or subleases in the course of interstate commerce, or that interstate commerce was unreasonably restrained by any of the agreements or subleases, or that the agreements or subleases might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in any line of interstate commerce.

(l) That defendants' purpose or intent was or is to unreasonably restrain or substantially lessen competition in or [fol. 2833] create a monopoly in interstate commerce or any line, segment or part thereof or any market or substantial market.

(m) That the agreements or subleases with dealers restrained interstate commerce or might have the effect of substantially lessening competition in or tending to create a monopoly in any line of interstate commerce where the agreements or subleases contemplated and in fact resulted in the supplying of the dealer from a refinery or warehouse located in the same state as such dealer.

3. The court erred in making the following findings of fact, each of such findings being unsupported by the evidence in the record:

(a) That the agreements or subleases unreasonably restrained interstate commerce.

(b) That the agreements or subleases might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

(c) That the defendants, or either of them, entered into oral agreements or oral contracts with dealers.

(d) That the agreements or subleases contemplated the movement or distribution of goods in or originating in interstate commerce.

(e) That there is a flow or constant flow in interstate commerce of the products produced or distributed by defendants.

(f) That transactions under the agreements or subleases are in the course of interstate commerce or directly or at all affect the shipment of competitive goods in or originating in interstate commerce.

(g) That the flow or direct flow of interstate commerce has been affected by the agreements or subleases.

[fol. 2834] (h) That either of the defendants induced or influenced dealers to enter into the agreements or subleases by the means or methods stated in paragraph 22 of the findings of fact or made gifts of money to dealers or took action to displace competitive products.

their petroleum products or automotive accessories or increase their sales or compete for the part of the market represented by the retail outlets under contract or sublease to defendants or either of them.

(j) That the purpose or intent or effect of the exclusive supply provisions of the agreements or subleases has been to prevent the dealer from handling products or accessories other than those supplied or sponsored by defendants.

(k) That any part of the agreements or subleases had the intent or purpose or effect of preventing or did in fact prevent dealers from handling miscellaneous accessories other than those supplied or sponsored by defendant.

(l) That dealers were denied access to competitive products by any of the provisions of the agreements or subleases, or that dealers have been prevented from purchasing the merchandise they desire in an open or competitive market or at prices determined by free or open competition.

(m) That Standard sold approximately 23% of all the gasoline sold in the Western area during 1946. This finding under the evidence should have been that in 1946 Standard sold in the Western area to all classes of trade, that is, sold through service stations, both independent and company-employee operated, and other retail outlets, as well as to industrial, commercial and agricultural accounts, [fol. 2835] 23% of the petroleum products sold to all such classes of trade.

4. The court erred in failing to find in accordance with the uncontradicted evidence the facts with respect to competitive market conditions or Standard's competitive position in the area in question or defendants' intent or purpose with respect to such agreements or subleases, and, in the absence of such findings, holding and concluding that the agreements and subleases were an unreasonable restraint of or might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in interstate commerce.

5. The court erred in failing to find in accordance with the uncontradicted evidence the facts with respect to each of the following:

(a) Standard's proportion of retail dealer sales to total involved in the Western area, and the most populous parts thereof, and the changes in that proportion over a period of years.

(b) The policy pursued by Standard of entering into contract or lease relationship with the fewest possible number of retail dealer outlets consistent with its service of the area.

(c) The lack of territorial concentration of Standard's retail dealer outlets.

(d) The decrease in the number of Standard's retail dealer outlets over a period of years.

(e) The proportion of Standard's retail dealer outlets to the total number of dealer outlets.

(f) Market conditions generally within the Western area affecting the distribution of the products and accessories [fol. 2836] herein involved.

(g) The total number of retail dealer outlets for the products and accessories herein involved within the Western area.

(h) The proportion of retail gasoline outlets in the Western area handling the products or accessories of more than one supplier to the total number of retail gasoline outlets in such area.

(i) The number, growth, strength, operation and practices of defendants' competitors in the Western area and parts thereof.

(j) The relatively greater expansion enjoyed by certain of defendants' competitors in retail dealer sales in proportion to the expansion of defendants' retail dealer sales of products and accessories herein involved.

(k) The benefits accruing to both dealers and the motoring public as a result of the service maintained by Standard through its retail dealers, such service being made possible by the agreements and subleases, and the nature, character and scope of such service.

(l) The absence of any specific intent or purpose on the part of either defendant to accomplish any forbidden restraint or a substantial lessening of competition or to monopolize or attempt to monopolize by the agreements or subleases or by other means.

(m) The nature and extent of Standard's dealings with dealers in the absence of any written agreement or sublease.

(n) The extent to which dealers with and dealers without contractual or lease arrangements with Standard handled products or accessories competitive with those supplied by Standard.

(o) The issues tendered by the allegations of the Second [fol. 2837] Defense pleaded in defendants' answer.

(p) The issues tendered by the allegations of the Third Defense pleaded in defendants' answer.

(q) The issues tendered by the allegations of the Fourth Defense pleaded in defendants' answer.

(r) The issues tendered by the allegations of the Fifth Defense pleaded in defendants' answer.

6. The court erred in sustaining objection by plaintiff's counsel to the following questions put by defendants' counsel to the witness, Robert W. Garrett:

(a) "What, in your opinion, Mr. Garrett, would be the effect on competition of the elimination of requirement clauses by suppliers generally? I am asking you for your opinion as an expert in the field of marketing of petroleum products and in the light of your training and experience in that field."

(b) ". . . Would the elimination of requirements clauses, Mr. Garrett, by suppliers generally, in your opinion, tend to a substantial increase in company-operated units?"

(c) "Mr. Garrett, in your opinion, would the elimination of requirements contracts by suppliers generally tend to promote the growth of dealer-operated chain of service stations?"

(d) "Mr. Garrett, assume that a split-pump system became general; in your opinion, based upon your training and experience, what, if any, would be the change in the overall competitive picture under such split-pump system so far as it relates to suppliers of products to retail outlets?"

[fol. 2838] (e) "Would the elimination of all requirements clauses by suppliers generally increase or decrease the number of existing service stations?"

(f) "Would the elimination of all requirements clauses by suppliers generally tend to give the more prominent suppliers a competitive advantage?"

(g) "From the economic standpoint, Mr. Garrett, what can you tell us about the split-pump distribution system as compared with the present single supplier system of distribution in the petroleum marketing field?"

(h) "From the economic standpoint does a split-pump distribution system increase the cost of distribution as compared with a single supplier system so far as the dealer is concerned?"

(i) "From the economic standpoint does a split-pump distribution system increase the cost of the distribution as compared with a single supplier system so far as the supplier is concerned?"

(j) "Is a split-pump system inherently and from the economic standpoint a more expensive system of distribution?"

(k) "Assuming that a split-pump system from the economic standpoint would be a more expensive system, in your opinion, would the added expense under a split-pump system be ultimately borne by the purchasing public?"

7. The court erred in its rulings at and previous to the time that objections to the foregoing questions put to the [fol. 2839] witness, Robert W. Garrett, were sustained, that it would not permit testimony concerning the effect of the agreements or subleases on prices or the economic merits or demerits of the present system as contrasted with a system which would prevail if the contract and sublease provisions attacked by plaintiff were eliminated, and would not permit testimony as to what the latter system would be, and that it was immaterial that economic benefit might result from the present system and economic detriment result from its abandonment, such rulings being exemplified by the court's action in sustaining said objections and by the following statements of the court:

". . . I am not going to allow any testimony regarding the effect of this arrangement on prices, because I have already said that I consider it immaterial for two reasons; first, that this is not a price-fixing case and, in the second place, it appears that the unreasonableness of the restraint under the Sherman Act and the substantiality of the restriction under the Clayton Act are not affected by the price at which the product is sold to the public.

. . . . . .

"I desire to state for the record that I consider the questions propounded to this witness as going to the economic merits or demerits of the present system as contrasted with a system which prevailed prior to its establishment and which would prevail if the court declared the present arrangement between the supplier, the Standard Oil Company, and the stations governed by dealership contracts or the TBA contracts other than and not including the company-operated [fol. 2840] stations.

"For the reasons indicated, I consider the inquiry beyond the scope of this lawsuit and entirely immaterial because, if the practice is one forbidden by the Statute, the fact that it may result in economic benefit or its abandonment might result in economic loss is not material under the decisions of the Supreme Court and the Circuit Courts of Appeals, as I read them.

"I will state for the record that I would sustain objections to similar inquiry on the part of any other witnesses that the defendant might produce; and I would sustain objections to any chart or documentary evidence seeking to elicit the facts implied in these questions.

"And I will further state for the record that, because of that, the defendants need not call such witnesses or offer such exhibits or make an offer of proof to cover the facts sought to be elicited through this inquiry.

"What is that old expression? 'Hog-tight, bull-strong, and horse-high,' isn't it, like an old-fashioned fence? I have given you a ruling there that will allow you to bring up any facet of that question before any court of appeal that this case may reach."

8. The court erred in enjoining defendants from entering into any contract, agreement or understanding requiring a dealer to secure all of his requirements of petroleum prod-[fol. 2841] ucts or automotive accessories from defendants, and also in decreeing such injunction, irrespective of whether or not such contract or agreement or understanding was an unreasonable restraint of commerce or might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

9. The court erred in enjoining defendants from selling or attempting to sell petroleum products or automotive accessories to any dealer on condition that the dealer would purchase other petroleum products or automotive accessories from defendants or that the dealer would not handle or sell at a retail outlet petroleum products or automotive accessories other than those sold or sponsored by defendants, and also in decreeing such injunction, irrespective of whether or not such condition was an unreasonable restraint of commerce or might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

10. The court erred in denying on July 14, 1947, defendants' motion for a stay of proceedings.

11. The court erred in denying on July 14, 1947, defendants' motion to dismiss.

12. The court erred in denying on June 28, 1948, defendants' motion for reopening, reargument and reconsideration and for a decision in favor of defendants.

Wherefore, defendants pray that said final judgment of the District Court may be reversed, and for such other and further relief as may be just and proper.

Dated: July 20, 1948.

[fol. 2856] CONDENSED STATEMENT WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN EXHIBITS OFFERED BY PLAINTIFF AND RECEIVED IN EVIDENCE

[fol. 2857] All references herein are to plaintiff's exhibits.

Ex. 18-A. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Lease like Ex. 17-F, dated June 14, 1946, from A. M. Gross, as Lessor, to Standard Oil Company of California, as Lessee, for a term commencing July 20, 1946 and ending July 19, 1949, covering premises in the City of Maywood, California, at a rental of $125.00 per month during the term. Paragraph 12 gives the Lessee an election to extend the term of the lease for a further period of seven (7) years and three (3) months. This lease also contains an additional paragraph following paragraph 18 as follows:

> 19. Notwithstanding the title "Lease," this agreement is a sublease and is subject to all of the terms and conditions of the lease dated the 26th day of September, 1941, between C. A. Webb and Leila F. Webb, husband and wife, Lessors, and A. M. Gross, Lessee.

Ex. 18-B. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Lease Indenture in form like Ex. 17-G, dated June 14, 1946, between A. M. Gross, as Lessor, and Standard Oil Company of California, as Lessee, covering the premises described in Ex. 18-A.

Ex. 18-D. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Sublease in form like Ex. 16-B, dated June 14, 1946, from Standard Oil Company of California, as Lessor, to A. M. Gross, as Lessee, for a term commencing July 20, 1946 and ending July 18, 1949, covering the premises described [fol. 2858] in Ex. 18-A, at a rental of $125.00 per month during the term.

Ex. 18-E. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Dealer Agreement TBA in form like Ex. 4, dated June 14, 1946, between Standard Oil Company of California and A. M. Gross, as Dealer. The first clause of the first sentence of paragraph 9 to the first semicolon reads:

> "This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing July 20th, 1946, and ending July 19th, 1949, and from year to year thereafter; . . ."

[fol. 2859] This agreement also contains a rider reading as follows:

> "5a. Notwithstanding the provisions of Paragraph 2 hereof, Dealer agrees that Company shall not be obligated to supply the merchandise mentioned in said paragraph until such time as such merchandise is available to Company from its supplier in quantities sufficient to supply the requirements of its Dealers generally, but no later than one year after the end of the existing National Emergency.
>
> Provided, however, that Paragraph 2 hereof is hereby deemed to be severable from the other terms and provisions of this agreement and may be terminated by 30 days written notice from Company to Dealer of intention so to do. In the event this paragraph is terminated as herein provided this agreement shall remain in full force and effect upon all of its other terms and provisions."

This refers to the premises described in Ex. 18-A.

Ex. 19-A. This exhibit comprises the following:

A lease in form like Ex. 17-F, dated January 5, 1945, from Burnie Hyland, as Lessor, to Standard Oil Company of California, as Lessee, for a term commencing February 1, 1945 and ending December 31, 1949, covering premises in the City of Spokane, Washington, at a rental of $50.00 per month during the term. This Lease also contains the following rider (herein referred to as S-477):

"If during the life of this lease, including all extensions thereof, Lessor shall comply with all of the terms [fol. 2860] and provisions of this and any other agreement now or hereafter operative between Lessor and Lessee, and if Lessor shall not exercise any rights Lessor may have to terminate such agreements (except for Lessee's default); and if there shall be no termination of Lessor's tenancy of the leased premises, then at the expiration of such extended term, or at expiration of the term hereof, in the absence of such extension, Lessee shall, notwithstanding anything to the contrary provided in this lease, give Lessor a Bill of Sale to all of the personal property and trade fixtures placed by Lessee in, under, or upon the leased premises, or purchased by Lessee from Lessor, during the first year of the term hereof."

This Lease also contains the following rider:

"The term of this agreement shall be from February 1, 1945 to December 31, 1949 but if during said period Dealer shall not have purchased from Company 33,000 gallons of lubricating oils and greases, this contract shall continue in full force and effect until such time as said number of gallons of lubricating oils and greases have been purchased by Dealer from Company."

Ex. 19-B. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Lease Indenture in form like Ex. 17-G, dated January 5, 1945, between Burnie Hyland, as Lessor, and Standard Oil Company of California, as Lessee, covering the premises described in Ex. 19-A.

[fol. 2861] Ex. 19-C. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Sublease in form like Ex. 17-C, dated January 5, 1945, from Standard Oil Company, as Lessor, to Burnie Hyland, as Lessee, for a term commencing February 1, 1945 and ending December 30, 1949, covering the premises described in Ex. 19-A, at a rental of $50.00 per month.

Ex. 20-D. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Lease in form like Ex. 17-F, dated May 1, 1945, from Elmer C. Roberts and wife, Fern S. Roberts; Ray A. Wright and wife, Bessie M. Wright, as Lessors, to Standard Oil Company of California, as Lessee, for a term commencing June 1, 1945 and ending May 31, 1955, covering premises in the Village of Parma, Idaho, at a rental of $60.00 per month during the term. This lease contains the rider hereinbefore referred to as S-477.

Ex. 20-E. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Lease Indenture in form like Ex. 17-G, dated May 1, 1945, between the same parties that are referred to in Ex. 20-D and covering the same premises described in Ex. 20-D.

Ex. 20-F. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Sublease in form like Ex. 17-C, dated May 1, 1945, from Standard Oil Company of California, as Lessor, to Elmer C. Roberts and wife, Fern S. Roberts; Ray A. Wright and wife, Bessie M. Wright, as Lessees, for a term commencing June 1, 1945 and ending May 30, 1955, covering the premises described in Ex. 20-D, at a rental of $60.00 per month during the term.

[fol. 2862] Ex. 20-G. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Dealer Agreement TBA in form like Ex. 17-B, except that paragraph 4 therein reads as follows:

> "The petroleum products covered by this agreement shall be sold by Dealer as the products of Company and only under Company's regular trademarks or brands for such products. If Dealer posts a sign or signs advertising the price or prices which Dealer is charging for gasoline or lubricating oils, it is agreed that the design, size, and location of such signs shall be subject to Company's approval."

It is dated May 1, 1945; is between Standard Oil Company of California and Ray A. Wright, as Dealer; and the first clause of the first sentence of paragraph 9 to the first semicolon reads:

"This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing June 1st, 1945, and ending May 31st, 1965, and from year to year thereafter; . . ."

This refers to the premises described in Ex. 20-D.

Ex. 21-H. This exhibit comprises the following:

A Dealer Agreement TBA in form like Ex. 18-E, dated March 26, 1947, between Standard Oil Company of California and Dean B. Whitwood and W. Kenneth Study, as Dealers. The first clause of the first sentence of paragraph 9 to the first semicolon reads:

"This agreement shall be operative during the period commencing April 1, 1947, and continuing concurrently with that certain Sublease dated January 19, 1945, between parties hereto, and from year to year there[fol. 2863] after; . . ."

This refers to the premises described in Ex. 21-A.

Ex. 22-A. This exhibit comprises the following:

Civil Action No. 6159-Y

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA AND STANDARD STATIONS, INC., Defendants

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION

In compliance with Rule 12 of the Revised Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, as amended, defendants submit herewith their statement particularly disclosing the basis upon which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on appeal to review the final judgment of the District Court entered in this cause on June 30, 1948. A petition for appeal is presented to the District Court herewith, to-wit, on July 20, 1948.

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review by direct appeal the judgment entered in this cause is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272, 15 U. S. C. A. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938, 28 U. S. C. A. 345).

The following decisions sustain the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review the judgment on direct appeal in this cause: Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1.

Statutes Involved

The pertinent provisions of Section 1 of the Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C. A. 1), commonly known as the Sherman Act, are as follows:

> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: . . ."

Section 3 of the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended (38 Stat. 731, 15 U. S. C. A. 14), commonly known as the Clayton Act, is as follows:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

The Issues and the Ruling

This is an equity suit brought by the United States of America in the Federal District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division, charging that the two corporate defendants, Standard Oil Company of California (herein called "Standard"), and the latter's wholly owned subsidiary, Standard Stations, Inc., had violated Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act and Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act for at least fifteen years.

To support this charge plaintiff alleged the following: Defendants had entered into contracts and subleases with independent dealers[1] in gasoline and other petroleum products and tires, tubes, batteries and other automotive accessories in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Nevada, Idaho and Utah. These contracts and subleases obligated Standard to sell and the dealer to buy from Standard during a stated term all petroleum products, and, in certain cases, all petroleum products, tires, tubes and batteries, required by the dealer for resale at his service station or garage. This was said to unreasonably restrain, and to have the effect of substantially lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly in, the commerce in these products in such area.

The making of the contracts and subleases was not denied. Issue was joined by denial of plaintiff's charge that they unreasonably restrained commerce or had or might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly in commerce. Defendants affirmatively alleged that contracts and subleases of this character had long been employed by defendants' competitors; that the practice had arisen and been pursued because dealers required over a definite period a supply of these products to satisfy their requirements; that defendants' contracts and subleases were the outgrowth of competition; that defendant's competitors in the area in question were numerous and aggressive; and that, but for these contracts and subleases, the competition of defendants for the trade of the dealers would have been eliminated.

[1] Standard in the area involved also operated a number of service stations through its own employees. Operations affecting these employee-operated service stations, known as "Standard Stations," are not complained of in this case.

The cause was tried in the District Court during May, 1948. Plaintiff introduced in evidence the contracts and subleases; showed that they affected 5197 dealers in Standard's products within the area in question; and introduced evidence which, it was contended, showed that the annual purchases by such dealers of Standard's products amounted to $68,000,000.00 and that Standard's retail dealer sales of gasoline were 12% to 14% of the total.

Much of defendants' evidence dealt with the competitive picture. Among other matters, defendants' uncontradicted evidence showed that in 1946 in the Los Angeles area (the largest retail gasoline market in the world) Standard's gasoline retail dealer sales were 2.43% of the total, and in the San Francisco area 5.52% of the total; that in 1946 in the seven Western states Standard's retail dealer sales of lubricating oil were 5% of the total; of tires, 2% of the total; and of batteries, 1.8% of the total; that Standard pursued a policy of contracting with the fewest possible number of dealer outlets consistent with its service of the marketing area; that such outlets were not so territorially concentrated as to even suggest a monopoly of any part of such area; that the number of Standard's dealer outlets had decreased substantially over a ten-year period; that Standard's dealer outlets represented only a small fraction of the total outlets; that the total number of retail outlets for gasoline in the seven-state area was approximately 36,500 and many more than that number for tires, tubes and batteries; that Standard throughout the area had powerful, aggressive and numerous competitors,[2] a number of whom had dealers exclusively handling their products, and a number of whom had expanded their dealer sales to a far greater degree than Standard; that the six principal oil company competitors of Standard had more than 20,000 gasoline dealer outlets in the seven-state area, each one of which outlets handled exclusively the gasoline of a single company; that of the 36,500 retail outlets for gasoline in such area 98.4% handled exclusively the gasoline of a single supplier; that Standard's dealer sales had not increased in volume out of proportion to the general increase in volume enjoyed by the rest of the industry in the area in question and, in certain areas and in the case of certain products, had markedly fallen behind industry sales as a whole; that competitors of Standard had suffered no financial detriment from the practices complained of but, on the contrary, had grown and presumably prospered; and that both dealers and the motoring public had benefited substantially from the service maintained by Standard as a part of the marketing system of which the contracts and leases were an integral part.

On June 7, 1948, the District Judge filed his opinion, a copy of which is annexed, announcing a decision in favor of plaintiff. Therein he called attention to the number of outlets under Standard's contracts and subleases and to the volume of business done by these outlets, and concluded that, irrespective of competitive conditions, the market as a whole, and Standard's competitive position, this was enough to warrant an injunction. Thus he said:

[2] In the seven-state area there were 80 competitor companies each of which marketed over 1,000,000 gallons of gasoline annually; there were 69 competitor companies marketing their own brands of lubricating oil; and competitor companies distributing gasoline promoted through retail outlets handling their products 27 different lines of tires and 28 different lines of batteries, all competitive with Standard's products.

> ". . . As the restriction corners a market of the value of $68,000,000.00, it is illegal, even considered on a comparative basis. Concede further, that the arrangement was entered into in good faith, with the honest belief that control of distribution and consequent concentration of representation were economically beneficial to the industry and to the public, that they have continued for over fifteen years openly, notoriously and unmolested by the Government, and have been practiced by other major oil companies competing with Standard, that the number of Standard outlets so controlled may have decreased, and the quantity of products supplied to them may have declined, on a comparative basis. Nevertheless, as I read the latest cases of the Supreme Court, I am compelled to find the practices here involved to be violative of both statutes. For they affect injuriously a sizeable part of interstate commerce, or,—to use the current phrase,—'an appreciable segment' of interstate commerce."

Deeming this contrary to United States v. Columbia Steel Co., — U. S. —,[3] decided the same day, defendants promptly moved to reopen the case and for further argument, reconsideration and a revision of the opinion and for findings and judgment in favor of defendants. This motion was denied on June 28, 1948. On the same day, the trial Judge filed a second or "supplemental opinion," a copy of which is annexed.

[3] Therein it was said:

"In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, we do not think the dollar volume is in itself of compelling significance; we look rather to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market."

Findings of fact and conclusions of law herein were filed on June 30, 1948, and a final judgment herein in favor of plaintiff was entered on June 30, 1948.

The findings of fact ignore the competitive setting disclosed by defendants' uncontradicted evidence, i.e., the number, growth, strength, operations and practices of defendants' competitors, the character and extent of the market, and Standard's position in the competitive picture.

The Questions Are Substantial

The District Court was of the view that the anti-trust laws were violated solely upon a showing that the contracts between Standard and its customers excluded competitors from supplying the requirements of such customers.

Yet every contract for a future supply excludes competitors from supplying the buyer's requirements of the products contracted for by such contract. Are all supply contracts to be declared illegal under the anti-trust laws provided they embrace a sizeable quantity? This is the effect of the District Court's decision. The repercussions of such doctrine would be immeasurably disastrous.

The District Court declared that the contracts were not unlawful per se; that they became unlawful only because of their effect. Nevertheless, in assessing their effect, the District Court disregarded the entire competitive picture, relying solely upon the number of such contracts and the volume of goods sold thereunder. It was said to be enough that this "appreciable segment" of commerce (i.e., Standard's dealers) was affected, irrespective of conditions in the market generally and Standard's competitive position. Despite a large amount of evidence showing such conditions and Standard's competitive position, findings relating thereto were not made, doubtless because of the District Court's belief that this made no difference. Defendants' good faith, economic benefit to the public as against detriment to ensue from an abolition of this system of distribution,[4] and a total lack of any specific purpose or intent on the part of defendants to restrain competition or monopolize, were likewise regarded as inconsequential.

The District Court's decision extends the rule of United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, to facts bearing no resemblance to the facts underlying the Yellow Cab case, and disregards the pronouncement of the Supreme Court in United States v. Columbia Steel Co. (June 7, 1948) that the holding in the Yellow Cab case did not make illegal the acquisition of an outlet "without consideration of its effect on the opportunities of other competitor producers to market their" products.

If the District Court's decision were to govern:

(A) Doubt would arise concerning the legality under the anti-trust laws of many large supply contracts and supply contracts with a large number of purchasers in many lines of industry and commerce throughout the nation, irrespective of the competitive conditions involved.

(B) There would be conflict with the rule that where the contract attacked is not illegal per se and no specific intent to violate the anti-trust laws has been shown, competition must be shown to have been lessened "to such a degree as will injuriously affect the public." International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Comm., 280 U. S. 291, 297, 298.

(C) There would be conflict with the rule that in a case of this character the trial court must "look . . . . to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the re- maining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market." United States v. Columbia Steel Co., — U. S. — (June 7, 1948).

---

[4] At the trial the court announced that it would not "allow any testimony regarding the effect of this arrangement on prices"; that "the unreasonableness of the restraint under the Sherman Act and the substantiality of the restriction under the Clayton Act are not affected by the price at which the product is sold to the public"; and that it would not allow testimony as to the "economic merits or demerits of the present system as contrasted with a system which prevailed prior to its establishment."

It is respectfully submitted that the Supreme Court has jurisdiction upon direct appeal, and that the questions presented are substantial.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 6159-Y Civil

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA, AND STANDARD STATIONS, INC., Defendants Opinion

APPEARANCES:

For the Plaintiff: William C. Dixon, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, W. Alan Thody, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, Lawrence W. Somerville, Special Attorney Anti-Trust Division, Theodore Driscoll, Special Attorney Anti-Trust Division, Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, James M. Carter, United States Attorney.

For the Defendants: Lawler, Felix & Hall, By, John M. Hall, Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, By Everett A. Mathews.

By this suit in equity, the Government seeks a decree adjudging that certain practices engaged in by the defendants and certain contracts entered into by them, unreasonably restrain interstate trade and commerce in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Anti Trust Act (1), and substantially lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in a line of commerce, in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act. (2) The Government asks us to declare the exclusive supply provisions in the contracts and the practices flowing from them to be void and of no effect.

In addition, we are asked to enjoin the defendants, in perpetuity, from entering into or enforcing any contract, agreement, or understanding, express or implied, with any independent service station operator or garage operator, or from inducing or compelling, or attempting to induce or compel, any such person from entering into any contract, agreement or understanding, which has any of the following requirements:

[1] 15 U.S.C.A., Sec. 1.
[2] 15 U.S.C.A., Sec. 14.

(a) That the Independent Service Station Operator or Garage Operator shall secure all his requirements of petroleum products from defendant Standard, or shall not handle the petroleum products of any other company;

(b) That the Independent Service Station Operator, or Garage Operator shall secure all his requirements of any one or more types of automobile accessories from or through defendants Standard and Standard Stations, Inc., or will not handle accessories competitive with those distributed or sponsored by defendants, Standard and Standard Stations, Inc.

(c) That the sale of any petroleum product or automotive accessories to any Independent Service Station Operator, or Garage Operator shall be conditional on the sale of other petroleum products or automotive accessories.

The action was instituted on January 2, 1947. Many proceedings have taken place before the trial and an extensive file has been built up. However, as a case of this character must be determined on the basis of facts existing at the time of the trial, it is not necessary to give a detailed analysis of the pleadings in the case or the proceedings before the court.

What precedes is sufficient for the purpose of the discussion to follow.

YANKWICH, District Judge:

I

The Proved Facts

Notwithstanding the lengthy trial and the large number of exhibits introduced, the issues in the case are rather narrow, as will appear further on in the opinion when we expound the legal principles which control the case.

There is, therefore, no need to review elaborately the facts proved. A brief summary will suffice.

The defendant Standard Oil Company of California is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business at San Francisco, California. It is engaged in the business of producing, transporting, refining and marketing petroleum and petroleum products, principally, in the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Nevada, New Mexico, Idaho and Utah.

The defendant Standard Stations, Incorporated, is a corporation organized under the laws of Delaware with its principal place of business at San Francisco. It is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Standard Oil Company of California, and is engaged in the business of managing service stations in the seven states just mentioned. The number of these stations is 1063.

As the issues have narrowed themselves by the proof, no further reference need be made to these stations so operated which have been referred to in the evidence as "employe operated stations." The Government does not question (indeed, it could not) the right of the Standard Oil Company of California to operate its own stations and sell therein any product it manufactures or distributes. Hence when we refer to "Standard" in what follows, it will be understood that the reference is to Standard Oil Company of California, the parent company, actually engaged in what, for brevity, we shall call "the oil business".

The evidence in the cases shows that, as of March 12, 1947, Standard, in addition to the company operated service stations, had contractual arrangements with 7145 stations in the area. The relationship of Standard to these stations was governed by the five types of agreements entered into with the operators of the stations. They were:

(1) "Dealer Agreements," of which there were 1656, containing the following clause:

"1. Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation hereinafter called 'Company' agrees to sell to —— hereinafter called 'Dealer,' and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at ——. The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity."

(2) "Distributor Agreements," of which there were 556, containing the following:

"Company agrees to sell to Distributor, and Distributor agrees to buy from Company and stock and offer for sale all of Distributor's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor in the conduct of his business on the premises hereinafter described. The petroleum products to meet Distributor's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils and other petroleum products currently sold at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc. in Distributor's vicinity, and Distributor agrees not to store, handle, distribute, or sell any other brand or brands of petroleum products at or from the station."

(3) "Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreements", of which there were 912, containing this clause:

"1. Standard Oil Company of California, a corporation, hereinafter called 'Company', agrees to sell to —— hereinafter called 'Dealer', and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at ——. The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by Company to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity."

(4) "Dealer Agreement TBA", of which there were 2221, having this clause:

"1. Standard Oil Company of California, hereinafter called 'Company', agrees to sell to —— hereinafter called 'Dealer', and Dealer agrees to buy from Company, all Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used, sold, or bought to be used or sold, by Dealer at ——, hereinafter called 'said premises.' The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of such products generally sold by Company to its Dealers."

(5) "Sublease Agreements", of which there were 1800, containing the following clause:

"Lessee shall handle and sell on the leased premises only such petroleum products as are sold Lessee by Lessor, and Lessee agrees not to store, handle, sell, or distribute on or from said premises any petroleum products of any description other than those petroleum products sold to Lessee by Lessor. The price payable by Lessee to Lessor for said petroleum products shall be Lessor's posted price for the same or similar products to its Dealers generally in Lessee's vicinity at time and place of delivery."

The choice of the type of agreement was the dealer's. And the agreements were terminable by him on six months' notice. Each of these agreements contained provisions which, both by the language used and the limitations of liability, stressed the character of the agreement as seeking to establish the dealer as an independent contractor. Dealer Agreements (Class I) contained the most elaborate provisions. They are here given in full:

"6. Dealer acknowledges that he has thoroughly inspected the pumps, tankage, containers, pipes, and other facilities on the premises and that the same are in good condition, and while this agreement is in force Dealer agrees to so keep the same at Dealer's own cost and expense; provided, however, that Company may, at its discretion, maintain and repair said facilities. Dealer further agrees to protect, defend, and hold harmless the Company against all claims for damage to property (including Dealer's property), or injury to or death of persons, directly or indirectly resulting from any acts or omissions of Dealer or Dealer's employees in or about said premises, either in the maintenance or operation of the tanks, containers, pipes, pumps and other facilities thereon, or in the vending therefrom of the products and goods handled by Dealer hereunder.

"7. In the performance of this agreement Dealer is engaged in an independent business and nothing contained shall be construed as reserving to Company any right to control Dealer with respect to his conduct in the performance of this agreement. Company reserves no right to exercise any control over any of Dealer's employees and all employees of the Dealer shall be entirely under the control and direction of Dealer who shall be responsible for their actions and omissions. Dealer will, at his own expense, during the term hereof, maintain full insurance under any Workmen's Compensation Laws effective in said state covering all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement, and upon request shall furnish Company with satisfactory evidence of the maintenance of such insurance. Dealer accepts exclusive liability for all contributions and payroll taxes required under Federal Social Security Laws and State Unemployment Compensation Laws as to all persons employed by and working for him in connection with the performance of this agreement.

"8. Any tax, or the amount thereof, now or hereafter imposed, levied, or assessed by any governmental authority upon, measured by, incident to, or as the result of the transaction herein provided for, or the transportation, production, or manufacture of the goods, the subject matter of this agreement, shall, if collectible or payable by the Company, be paid by the Dealer on demand by the Company, as tax collectible or as an increase in the prices otherwise herein provided for."

The other types of agreement aimed to achieve the same result.

The history of the use of the various types of agreement shows that, beginning in 1938, the dealer agreements begun to supersede the authorized distributor agreements which had obtained before that date, and that, beginning with the year 1944, Type 4 (TBA) came into almost exclusive use. There is duplication of agreements in that a single station may operate under several types of agreements. Hence the actual number of gas station outlets is 5197. The number of stations operating under Form 2 has since been reduced to 232. In addition to this, Standard had 742 open accounts and 1063 company-operated stations, or, as they have been called in this case, employee-operated stations.

The evidence in the record shows beyond cavil that the effect of these agreements was to limit the dealer operating under any of them to the handling of petroleum products of Standard and also to the marketing of tires, tubes, batteries and accessories controlled or handled by Standard. If they handled others, they did not do so openly. The agreements were so interpreted by those operating under them,—as various operators from various states testified. Indeed, witnesses of the defendant very forthrightly stated that the operators were expected to confine themselves to Standard products and accessories, the exception being only those rare cases—especially during the War—when they were unable to supply the quantity asked, in which event, the supervising employees of Standard would "shut their eyes" to the infractions.

The record also shows that, as to tires, tubes, batteries and accessories, Standard reserved the right to determine the amounts it would furnish. As to the other accessories, —which included spark plugs, sun visors, fan belts, hub caps, and all small parts of automobiles, which can easily be replaced at a service station—the requirement was up to the dealer himself. Tires, tubes and batteries were not, as a rule, sold to operators of stations other than those under contract with Standard,—especially during the time of shortage. Its petroleum products and accessories were sold to other station operators, particularly after the war scarcity ended. The representatives of other companies manufacturing petroleum products, tires, tubes, batteries and other accessories, testified that they could not sell their products to stations under contract with Standard, except in rare instances, and that, surreptitiously. When a station was converted into a Standard station, whatever custom in non-Standard products they had before ceased. To maintain the goodwill of the operators of the stations, Standard assisted them financially, made loans which were later discounted, furnished many valuable services, and expended large sums of money in advertising, in educating the operators in the manner of handling the products, in building the stations, adding facilities to them, repairing and improving them,—all of which meant large expenditures of money. As a result, Standard has a sixteen and one-half million dollar capital investment in the dealer stations.

When salesmen or supervisors of Standard found competitive products, they "urged",—as they testified—or, as the operators testified, showed their displeasure, and, practically "ordered" their discontinuance or substitution. Many of the competitive products so offered for sale and shut out of the stations under contract with Standard were produced outside of the States in which the stations were located, or were shipped in interstate commerce.

So there cannot be any question that, at least so far as these products are concerned, the practice of which the Government complains, affected the flow of goods and products in interstate commerce. (3) The character of the result and its legality, as well as the legality of the restrictive clauses themselves are questions of law.

To them we now direct our attention.

The Law Today

(A) Exclusive Supply Provisions:

The case does not require an extended review of the principles which courts have evolved in interpreting the Sherman Anti-Trust and Clayton Acts. I have had occasion to discuss the scope and nature of anti-trust legislation and its application both to activities which are local and to those which transcend state limits, in several opinions. (3)

There is another reason for confining ourselves to the more recent decisions of the Supreme Court: They have modified, to a great extent, some of the legal norms declared in prior cases. (4) And the problem in this case can be narrowed down to two rather simple inquiries. They are: (a) Are agreements of the type involved in this case,—as summarized briefly in the preceding portion of the opinion—violative of either or both the statutes. Which, in reality, comes down to this: Is an agreement by an oil company, engaged in the production and distribution of petroleum products, and the sponsoring and distribution of automobile parts and accessories, which obligates a gasoline station operator to supply his full requirements of petroleum products, tires, tubes, batteries, and other accessories, from the company, of itself, a violation of either of the Acts? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, the inquiry is at an end. (b) If in the negative, we must determine whether the effect of the agreement as a restraint on commerce makes it invalid under either or both Acts.

Seeking an answer to these inquiries, I begin with the assumption that the General Motors exclusive supply case (5) is still the law. Which means that, at least under the Clayton Act, an agreement by a dealer, in consideration of being permitted to deal in a certain product, that he will not sell or offer to sell any products not manufactured or handled by the particular manufacturer, is not per se illegal. The opinion in the General Motors case states the question involved tersely. The Court had before it an agreement which not only indirectly forbade the handling of the products of other manufacturers, but prohibited specifically their use or sale in these words:

> "'Dealer agrees that he will not sell, offer for sale, or use in the repair of Chevrolet motor vehicles and chassis second-hand parts or used parts or any parts not manufactured by the Chevrolet Motor Company . . .'" (6)

This eliminated not only parts not manufactured by them, but also second-hand and used parts. A complete monopoly was achieved. At the same time, the dealer was not granted exclusive selling rights in new parts and accessories. General Motors was, therefore, free to grant to other dealers in the same territory the same rights. The trial court dismissed the bill for want of equity. Affirming the decree, the Supreme Court said:

> "Upon the evidence adduced at the trial the District Court found that the effect of the clause had not been in any way substantially to lessen competition or to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." (7)

I take this language to mean that, even when we are confronted with a contract which shuts out competition, we must, under the Clayton Act, determine its effect on the line of commerce.

Under the Sherman Act, the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the restraint is,—since the first Standard Oil decision in 1911,—an element to be considered. (8) Both are questions of fact, the solution of which rests upon the conditions obtaining in each particular case.

The Socony-Vacuum case (9) and other cases which followed it express the view that the economic wisdom or unwisdom, or the economic benefit or detriment, of a restriction on commerce is not material, especially when we are dealing with a practice, such as price-fixing, which is illegal per se. But, at the same time, economic effect becomes material if we are dealing with a restraint other than price-fixing, a restraint which is monopolistic. Because, when this is the situation, it must appear that there is substantial lessening of competition or monopoly under the Clayton Act, before we can place a judicial interdict on it. We find this language in the Socony-Vacuum case:

> "Secondly, the fact that sales on the spot markets were still governed by some competition is of no consequence. For it is indisputable that that competition was restricted through the removal by respondents of a part of the supply which but for the buying program would have been a factor in determining the going prices on those markets. But the vice of the conspiracy was not merely the restriction of supply of gasoline by removal of a surplus. As we have said, this was a well-organized program. The timing and strategic placement of the buying orders for distress gasoline played an important and significant role. Buying orders were carefully placed so as to remove the distress gasoline from weak hands. Purchases were timed. Sellers were assigned to the buyers so that regular outlets for distress gasoline would be available. The whole scheme was carefully planned and executed to the end that the distress gasoline would not overhand the markets and depress them at any time. And as a result of the payment of fair going market prices a floor was placed and kept under the spot markets. Prices rose and jobbers and consumers in the midwestern area paid more for their gasoline than they would have paid but for the conspiracy.

"Competition was not eliminated from the markets; but it was clearly curtailed, since restriction of the supply of gasoline, the timing and placement of the purchases under the buying programs and the placing of a floor under the spot markets obviously reduced the play of the forces of supply and demand.

"The elimination of so-called competitive evils is of no legal justification for such buying programs. The elimination of such conditions was sought primarily for its effect on the price structures. Fairer competitive prices, it is claimed resulted when distress gasoline was removed from the market. But such defense is typical of the protestations usually made in price-fixing cases. Ruinous competition, financial disaster, evils of price-cutting and the like, appear throughout our history as ostensible justifications for price-fixing. If the so-called competitive abuses were to be appraised here, the reasonableness of prices would necessarily become an issue in every price-fixing case. In that event, the Sherman Act would soon be emasculated; its philosophy would be supplanted by one which is wholly alien to a system of free competition; it would not be the charter of freedom which its framers intended." (10)

(B) Effect of Restriction.

What Mr. Justice Douglas says applies with greater force to a restrictive practice other than price-fixing. The fact that it may be beneficial is not material, if, in effect, it is an unreasonable restraint. (11)

Judge Learned Hand stressed these very points in the Fashion Originators' Guild case. (12) He applied the reasoning of the Socony-Vacuum case to a case not involving price-fixing. And, with that clarity of language so characteristic of his writing, he showed that economic benefits cannot be taken into consideration if, in fact, there be substantial restriction of commerce. The opinion says:

> " . . . Many trade combinations which affect competition are lawful, when they are designed to prevent trade 'abuses'; they are 'reasonable' though perhaps to say so is no more than to state the problem. Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 374, 53 S. Ct. 411, 77 L. Ed. 825; Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553, 598, 56 S. Ct. 629, 80 L. Ed. 859. Certainly it is not true that the lawfulness of every combination depends upon whether it 'reasonably' corrects trade 'abuses'; there are some combinations that nothing will excuse. The accepted rubric for this is that when the means are unlawful per se, the purposes of the confederates will not justify them. Sugar Institute v. United States, supra, 297 U. S. 553, page 599, 56 S. Ct. 629, 80 L. Ed. 859. The most recent example of this is the Supreme Court's reaffirmation of the unconditional illegality of price-fixing in spite of the probability that the combination in fact benefited the industry. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 210 U. S. 150, 60 S. Ct. 811, 84 L. Ed. 1129. However grave the industrial disorders, that remedy was not permissible; the industry may restore itself by many devices, but not by all. * * * Price-fixing is not, however, the only means unlawful per se. The interest of the consumer is not all that determines the 'reasonableness' of a contract 'in restraint of trade'. It is also unlawful to exclude from the market any of those who supply it—assuming that there is no independent reason by virtue of their conduct to justify their exclusion—and it is no excuse for doing so that their exclusion will result in benefits to consumers, or to the producers who remain. W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 47, 24 S. Ct. 307; 48 L. Ed. 608; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers Association v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 611, 34 S. Ct. 951, 58 L. There is another reason supporting this conclusion. A successful combination among a part of the producers to exclude others, even when not accompanied by an agreement fixing prices, puts into their hands collectively the power to control the supply and with it the price. The fact that the power is not at the moment exercised is of no assurance that it may not be; if the effort succeeds and the combination is not disrupted, it may at any time be used, and there will then be no protection to the consumer.

"Finally, it is of no consequence that the Guild does not supply the whole market for women's dresses; it aims at a monopoly however small its share of total sales. The reason is as follows: Although all dresses made after one design are fungibles, the different designs themselves are not fungibles. Each has its own attraction for buyers; each is unique, however trifling the basis for preferring it may be. Hence to attempt to gather to oneself all possible reproductions of a given design is to attempt to create a monopoly, as at once appears from the fact that a copyright for it—and a fortiori a design patent upon it—would be ranked as a monopoly. It is true that the sanction of that monopoly may be very weak; it depends upon the design's attractions above other designs, often not a very important margin of advantage. But the same is true of nearly all monopolies, for there are substitutes for most goods. As to each design therefor the Guild is seeking to establish a monopoly; and it is unimportant whether its gross sales are large or small, as compared with those of all women's dresses. For these reasons, the combination was unlawful per se; the commission was right in refusing to hear any evidence in its excuse, for it could have no excuse; the case is the same as Millinery Creators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, 2 Cir., 109 F. (2d) 175" (13).

The teaching of these cases is this: When we are dealing with price-fixing, we are dealing with a contract which is invalid per se and violative of the Act. However, when we consider any other restrictions, their legality must be determined by the nature of the contract in relation to the line of commerce which it may affect. A contract by a manufacturer of a product which binds an agent who is used as an outlet to the exclusive use of his product is not necessarily a violation of either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act. But it may be so under the Sherman Act, if it results in an unreasonable restraint of trade, and under the Clayton Act, if it results in a monopoly in a line of commerce or lessens competition substantially. (14)

The more recent decisions of the Supreme Court reaffirm these principles. (15) To quote from Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Company (16):

> "The statute requires no more than that the effect of the prohibited price discriminations 'may be substantially to lessen competition . . . or to injure, destroy or prevent competition.' After a careful consideration of this provision of the Robinson-Patman Act, we have said that 'the statute does not require that the discrimination must in fact have harmed competition, but only that there is a reasonable possibility that they "may" have such an effect.' Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n., 324 U. S. 726, 742. Hence the Commission found what would appear to be obvious, that the competitive opportunities of certain merchants were injured when they had to pay respondent substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay. The findings are adequate.
> "Fourth. It is urged that the evidence is inadequate to support the Commission's findings of injury to competition. As we have pointed out, however, the Commission is authorized by the Act to bar discriminatory prices upon the 'reasonable possibility' that different prices for like goods to competing purchasers may have the defined effect on competition. That respondent's quantity discounts did result in price differentials between competing purchasers sufficient to influence their resale price of salt was shown by evidence.''

The following quotation from the American Crystal Sugar case is also enlightening:

"The statute does not confine its protection to consumers, or to purchasers, or to competitors, or to sellers. Nor does it immunize the outlawed acts because they are done by any of these. Cf. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781. United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Assn. supra, at 553.

(17).

(C) The Meaning of "Unreasonable" and "Substantial".

What precedes calls for a further inquiry into what is or what is not unreasonable restraint and what is or what is not a substantial lessening of competition.

The words "reasonable" or "unreasonable" do not occur in the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (17) They were read into the Act by the decisions of the Supreme Court. (18)

The phrases which forbid practices which result in substantial lessening of competition or monopoly occur in the Clayton Act. (19)

All these terms have a pragmatic content. The Courts, in applying them, have sought to evolve concrete criteria by which the effect of a particular practice on competition should be gauged. Their scope and limit was stated by the Court in Fashion Originators' Guild of America v. Federal Trade Commission:

> "If the purpose and practice of the combination of garment manufacturers and their affiliates runs counter to the public policy declared in the Sherman and Clayton Acts, the Federal Trade Commission has the power to suppress it as an unfair method of competition. From its findings, the Commission concluded that the petitioners, 'pursuant to understandings, arrangements, agreements, combinations and conspiracies entered into jointly and severally' had prevented sales in interstate commerce, had 'substantially lessened, hindered and suppressed' competition, and had tended 'to create in themselves a monopoly'. And paragraph 3 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C.A. Sec. 14) declares 'It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, . . . to . . . make a sale or contract for sale of goods, . . . on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the . . . purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, . . . of a competitor or competitors of the . . . seller, where the effect of such . . . sale, or contract for sale

. . . may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.' The relevance of this section of the Clayton Act to petitioners' scheme is shown by the fact that the scheme is bottomed upon a system of sale under which (1) textiles shall be sold to garment manufacturers only upon the condition and understanding that the buyers will not use or deal in textiles which are copies from the designs of textile manufacturing Guild members; (2) garment manufacturers shall sell to retailers only upon the condition and understanding that the retailers shall not use or deal in such copied designs. And the Federal Trade Commission concluded in the language of the Clayton Act that these understandings substantially lessened competition and tended to create a monopoly. We hold that the Commission, upon adequate and unchallenged findings, correctly concluded that this practice constituted an unfair method of competition.

"Not only does the plan in the respects above discussed thus conflict with the principles of the Clayton Act; the findings of the Commission bring petitioners' combination in its entirety well within the inhibition of the policies declared by the Sherman Act itself. Section 1 of that Act makes illegal every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states; Sec. 2 makes illegal every combination or conspiracy which monopolizes or attempts to monopolize any part of that trade or commerce. Under the Sherman Act 'competition not combination should be the law of trade.' National Cotton Oil Co. v. Texas, 197 U. S. 115, 129. And among the many respects in which the Guild's plan runs contrary to the policy of the Sherman Act are these: it narrows the outlets to which garment and textile manufacturers can sell and the sources from retailers can buy. (Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 45; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 48-49); subjects all retailers and manufacturers who decline to comply with the Guild's program to an organized boycott (Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 609-611); takes away the freedom of action of members by requiring each to reveal to the Guild the intimate details of their individual affairs (United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U. S. 371, 389); and has both as its necessary tendency and as its purpose and effect the direct suppression of competition from the sale of unregistered textiles and copied designs (United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., supra, at 389). In addition to all this, the combination is in reality an extra-governmental agency, which prescribed rules for the regulation and restraint of interstate commerce, and provides extra-judicial tribunals for determination and punishment of violations, and thus 'trenches upon the power of the national legislature and violates the statute.' (Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 242).

"Nor is it determinative in considering the policy of the Sherman Act that petitioners may not yet have achieved a complete monopoly. For 'it is sufficient if it really tends to that end and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.' (United States v. E. C. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, 16; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 237.)" (20)

The approach to the problem has changed, as later cases indicate, (21) but the test of reasonableness is the same which the court laid down in the first case (22). As there stated, while the Act defines the boundaries which could not be transgressed, it leaves the application of the standard laid down

"to be determined by the light of reason, guided by the principles of law and the duty to apply and enforce the public policy embodied in the statute, in every given case whether any particular act or contract was within the contemplation of the statute." (23)

And the test under the Clayton Act is equally practical. The validity or invalidity of a contract or practice is determined by a consideration of the methods of restraint which the particular contract or practice impose and the effect which they may have. (24) The more recent cases interpret the language of the statute to include not only probable effects but also possible effects. (25)

In summary, when we are asked to determine unreasonableness of restraint under the Sherman Act, or substantially in lessening competition or tendency to create a monopoly in a line of commerce under the Clayton Act, we must envisage the entire situation affected by the practices, and relate it to the object of both statutes, which is to maintain freedom in interstate commerce and trade and to prevent all attempts to monopolize them. (26) At times, courts speak of the "detriment" to the public resulting from a practice. (27) But they do not intend to legalize restraints which may be beneficial to the public. As said by Judge Learned Hand:

> "Be that as it may, that was not the way that Congress chose; it did not condone 'good trusts' and condemn 'bad ones'; it forbade all. Moreover, in so doing it was not necessarily actuated by economic motives alone. It is possible, because of its indirect social or moral effect, to prefer a system of small producers, each dependent for his success upon his own skill and character, to one in which the great mass of those engaged must accept the direction of a few. These considerations which we have suggested only as possible purposes of the Act, we think the decisions prove to have been in fact its purposes. It is settled, at least as to Sec. 1, that there are some contracts restricting competition which are unlawful, no matter how beneficient they may be; no industrial urgency will justify them; they are absolutely forbidden. Chief Justice Taft said as much of contracts dividing a territory among producers, in the often quoted passage of his opinion in the Circuit Court of Appeals in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 6 Cir., 85 Fed. 271, 46 L.R.A. 122." (28)

The harm to the public is gauged by the effect of the practices on the free flow of goods in interstate commerce and the maintenance of competition in that field. Consequently, practices which are likely to curtail or affect injuriously a measurable or sizeable part of commerce are prohibited under both Acts. As I understand the pleadings, and the Government's position at the beginning of the trial, a judgment is sought decreeing that the clause in the contracts which, by its language and actual effect, as shown by the evidence, restricts the stations not employee-operated to the sale and use of petroleum products and accessories produced or supplied by Standard is illegal per se. We cannot agree. To the contrary, as we read the cases, exclusiveness of outlet is not, in itself, illegal. It becomes illegal only if it results in a substantial lessening of competition or the creation of monopoly in the line of commerce. (29) Indeed, the opinion of the Court in one of the latest cases on the subject indicates clearly that,—to use the language of Mr. Justice Douglas,—"the use of monopoly power, however lawfully acquired, to foreclose competition, to gain a competitive advantage or to destroy a competitor, is unlawful." (30)

The phrase "line of commerce" in the Clayton Act is to be given a broad and not a narrow meaning. It should be interpreted, not with relation to a particular outlet, but with relation to the entire "picture",—if one may be permitted to use the best colloquial equivalent to the German word gestalt (configuration). So the determination of monopoly in any "line of commerce" cannot be made to rest solely on the fact that certain outlets are closed. For, without indulging in a reductio ad absurdum, if we say that interfering with any outlet is, in itself, a monopoly, we find ourselves in the position of contending that, assuming one controlled one station outlet, we have a monopoly as to it. To amplify: It is common knowledge that national merchandising firms like Sears, Roebuck & Company, or Montgomery Ward, own establishments the country over. It is also well known that they control the type of goods which are sold in the branches, which they use as outlets, and which they own. But, assume that they did not own the branches, and that they operated some of them, under one of these various contract arrangements used here,—say a TBA contract. To my mind, it would be unrealistic to contend that, under such circumstances, the control of one or several such outlets would constitute a monopoly. For this reason, I take the words "in any line of commerce" to mean a complete line of activity, not a small segment. This interpretation finds support in the following language of the Supreme Court:

> "The exercise of Congressional power under the Sherman Act, the Clayton Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, or the National Motor Theft Act, has never been thought to be constitutionally restricted because in any particular case the volume of the commerce affected may be small. The amount of the commerce regulated is of special significance only to the extent that Congress may be taken to have excluded commerce of small volume from the operation of its regulatory measure by express provision or fair implication." (31)

We must, therefore, ascertain the actual effect of the challenged clause on interstate commerce.

(D) Intra and Interstate Activities

Before doing so; we refer to the contention that the activities of Standard are local in character. Recent cases have obliterated the rigid distinction between infrastate and interstate activities. Activities purely local which interfere with interstate commerce come under the interdiction of the anti-trust statutes. (32) The control of a commodity originating in interstate commerce, although exercised after it comes to rest in a state, does not take it out of the purview of the Sherman or Clayton Acts, if the flow is continuous, and if the restrictions affect it. (33) The latest decisions give effect to the broad definition of commerce contained in one of the older and leading cases on the subject:

> "The evidence shows that they and other defendants conspired to burden the free movement of live poultry into the metropolitan area. It may be assumed that some time after delivery of carload lots by interstate carriers to the receivers the movement of the poultry ceases to be interstate commerce. Public Utilities Comm'n v. Landon, 249 U. S. 237, 245; Missouri v. Kansas Gas Co., 265 U. S. 298, 309; East Ohio Gas Co. v. Tax Comm'n. 283 U. S. 465, 470-471. But we need not decide when interstate commerce ends and that which is intrastate begins. The control of the handling, the sales and the prices at the place of origin before the interstate journey begins or in the State of destination where the interstate movement ends may operate directly to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce." (34)

Without detailing the distributive system used by Standard, it is evident that there is constant interstate flow of the products it produces and distributes. And the interstate origin of the many competitive products, automobile supplies and accessories is also established. (35)

This satisfies fully the requirement of the statutes. For, if the exclusive supply agreements complained of by the Government be unreasonable or monopolistic in effect, they would affect the flow of commerce in several ways: (1) by channeling the products of Standard, regardless of interstate or intrastate source, through an exclusive group of

The Consequences of the Exclusive Supply Provisions

(A) The "Appreciable Segment" Test

In the Associated Press case (36), the Supreme Court has set out criteria for determining the forbidden character of restrictive outlets under the Sherman Act, which are pertinent to the facts in this case:

> "The restraint on trade in news here were no less than those held to fall within the ban of the Sherman Act with reference to combinations to restrain trade outlets in the sale of tiles, Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 1932 U. S. 38; or enameled ironware, Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 48-49; or lumber, Eastern States Lumber Dealers' Ass'n v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 611; or women's clothes, Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, supra; or motion pictures, United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. Here as in the Fashion Originators' Guild case, supra, 465, 'the combination is in reality an extra-governmental agency, which prescribes rules for the regulation and restraint of interstate commerce, and provides extra-judicial tribunals for determination and punishment of violations, and thus 'trenches upon the power of the national legislature and violates the statute.' Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 242. By the restrictive By Laws each of the publishers in the combination has, in effect, 'surrendered himself completely to the control of the association.', Anderson v. Shipowners' Assn., 272 U. S. 359, 362, in respect to the disposition of news in interstate commerce. Therefore this contractual restraint of interstate trade, 'designed in the interest of preventing competition', cannot be one of the 'normal and usual agreements in aid of trade and commerce which may be found not to be within the (Sherman) Act . . .'' Eastern States Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, supra, 612, 613.'' (37)

This is anticipatory of the criterion of ''appreciable segment'' as a test of unreasonableness or monopolistic substantiality, established in later cases. (38)

Some writers have expressed the view that the more recent decisions, and especially the Yellow Cab decision, substitutes a new and uniform concept or standard of illegality for the older ones under the Sherman Act, which considers the effect on ''an appreciable segment'' of commerce the test. They see in this the abandonment of the older, ''quantitative'' postulate which related the amount of the commerce involved to the whole commerce in the nation. (40) But I find the nucleus of this norm not only in the Associated Press case (41), but in older cases. (42) Thus, in a case involving control of advertising media in a certain field as the basis for a damage action under the Sherman Anti-Trust law, the Supreme Court held that it was invalid, although it applied to a limited geographic area or to a part of the commerce only. The Court used this language:

''The record contains no suggestion by respondents or by either court that petitioner's allegations are not sufficient to charge a violation of Secs. 1 and 2. Its right to recover does not depend upon the proportion that respondents control of the total farm paper advertisements in the entire country, and it was not required to prove that respondents imposed a restraint or attempted monopolization that would affect all commercial advertisements in all farm papers wherever published or circulated. The provisions of Secs. 1 and 2 have both a geographical and distributive significance and apply to any part of the United States as distinguished from the whole and to any part of the classes of things forming a part of interstate commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 61." (43)

And there is one lower court, well considered decision which found an illegal restriction in a limitation to a particular large customer,—the United States Government. (44)

It was insisted at the oral argument that the late cases, especially the Yellow Cab case (45), having arisen under the Sherman Act, do not control here. Granted that these rulings interpret that Act, they are, nonetheless, applicable to the present case for the obvious reason that the violations which the Government in this case charges are violations of both the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

As a rule, language used in interpreting one statute is not conclusive of the meaning of other kindred statutes. However, the history of Anti-Trust legislation shows that less is required to prove illegality under the Sherman Act than under the Clayton Act. Rightly. For the object of the Clayton Act was to declare illegal, in their incipiency, acts which would only be illegal under the Sherman Act in their full fruition. Differently put, what, in its result, is an unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act is, in its beginning, a substantial restraint under the Clayton Act, if it is of a nature likely to achieve such result.

It is argued that to apply this criterion would result in anomolous situations: If the operators of stations, instead of agreeing to buy their "requirements" of petroleum products, agreed to buy a definite quantity over a period of time, sufficient to satisfy their needs, this arrangement would, just as effectively, shut out competition. And yet, it is insisted that, although such arrangement would achieve the same result, it would not fall within any of the prohibitions of the anti-trust statutes.

But there is a distinction between the two situations. When a dealer agrees to take a specific amount of a product, there is a likelihood that he may, in case of failure of the supplier to comply with the agreement, or unexpected shortages or increased demands, or a desire to anticipate such shortages or demands, by overstocking,—seek competitive products. There is thus a possibility of access by competitors to the particular outlets.

Under the "requirements" contracts, the chance is completely cut off. Briefly stated, without a "requirements" contract, competitors may, in time, induce dealers to handle their products. With a contract, they never can. There is opportunity to deal with the competitors, and, hence, possibility,—nay, probability, of freedom of action, when there is no restrictive contract. There is complete and final absence of freedom of dealing during the life of a contract, when it calls for exclusion. The shut-out is just as effective as an agreement to boycott products originating in interstate commerce. (46) Both "restrain or control the supply to the defendants, should be referred to, because they are the foundation for the contention that the practices here under attack do not violate either statute. They also serve to point to the fact that, in this case, the problem which confronts the court is to determine, in the light of the latest cases of the Supreme Court, which of the two methods of assaying specific facts which, in the main, are not in dispute, should control.

The facts to be alluded to present one facet of the problem. The practices which the Government seeks to prohibit are not of recent origin. To the contrary, they have been in effect for over 15 years. They are employed not only by Standard, but by its competitors in the Western Area, especially the "majors,"—Associated, Shell, General Petroleum, Texas Co., Union Oil Co., Richfield,—as their representatives have so forthrightly admitted. The following statistical data, culled from the record, show the comparative position of Standard in relation to its major competitors, omitting, for brevity, the comparative number of stations:

Certain general inferences were drawn from these facts, at the argument. They are: The actual increase in the sale of petroleum products corresponds to the rise in the whole industry. The number of outlets over a period of ten years has been reduced from an average of 7650 to 6000. Between 1936 and 1946, Standard sales of gasoline increased 58.8 per cent. The industry increase for the same period was 64.7 per cent. For lubricating oil, Standard's increase was 62.9 per cent, the industry increase, 104.8 per cent. As to batteries, the increase in units for Standard was 46.5 per cent, for the industry, 41.8 per cent. The comparative figures, as to the increase for some of the other companies are: Gasoline: Union Oil Company, 90 per cent; General Petroleum, 165 per cent; and Tidewater Associated, 34 per cent. Lubricating Oil: Union Oil Company, 98.2 per cent; General Petroleum, 174.9 per cent; and Tidewater Associated, 54.8 per cent.

Macmillan dispenses their lubricating oil through some 10,000 accounts in the seven Western states. For Pennzoil Company, the outlets in 1916 were 2000, in 1946, 12,000. For Arthur Haven Company, the outlets were 3500 in 1946, in 1947, 7,000. During this period, the number of outlets for Standard was 5197. During the same period, the number of independent stations which handle gasoline of different companies, or, what has been referred to as "split pump" accounts, has increased, although they represent only 1.6 per cent of all the stations. Between 1931 and 1941, —a ten-year period,—Standard constructed only 8 per cent of the newly constructed service stations upon vacant sites. Between 1942 and 1947, Standard's proportion of new construction was 8.7 per cent.

(2) The Other Side of the Shield:

The other aspect of the problem must take into consideration the following facts: The gallonage of gasoline marketed has risen and the value of the commerce in petroleum and other products was $68,000,000.00 in 1947. The following statistical data bear on the extent of this commerce.

(3) The Inconclusiveness of Comparative Figures:

Over the Government's objection, I allowed many comparative statistics, of which the foregoing are examples, to go into the record. This was consistent with the view that in resolving the issues of this case, the potential or actual effect of the agreements is important in determining reasonable of restraint under the Sherman Act and substantiality of restraint or tendency to create monopoly under the Clayton Act.

But, while the comparative figures bear on the question, they are not determinate. Substantiality of restraint or tendency to create monopoly is established by (a) the market foreclosed,—here represented by the controlled units,—and (b) the volume of controlled business, totalling here in value $68,000,000.00.

Fractionally speaking, the business done by the competitors with their own outlets or with those under contract is much greater than the business of Standard,—both in volume and in money value. Nevertheless, the business of Standard is considerable. In effect, it amounts to a substantial lessening of competition and a monopoly of a sizeable segment of a line of commerce in a definite area—the seven Western states. What has the tendency to achieve such result becomes, in actual effect, an unreasonable restraint. Even before adopting the "appreciable segment" test (48), the Supreme Court sought to avoid a rigid formula for finding reasonableness or unreasonableness. In the Trenton Potteries case, Mr. Justice Stone stated:

> "Reasonableness is not a concept of definite and unchanging content. Its meaning necessarily varies in the different fields of the law, because it is used as a convenient summary of the dominant considerations which control in the application of legal doctrines. Our view of what is a reasonable restraint of commerce is controlled by the recognized purpose of the Sherman Law itself. Whether this type of restraint is reasonable or not must be judged in part at least in the light of its effect on competition, for whatever difference of opinion there may be among economists, as to the social and economic desirability of an unrestrained competitive system, it cannot be doubted that the Sherman Law and the judicial decisions interpreting it *are based upon the assumption that the public interest is best protected from the evils of monopoly * * * by the maintenance of competition.*" (49)

It follows that there is illegal restraint here under both Acts, whether the commerce be considered quantitatively or comparatively.

(4) Application to Sub-leases and Open Accounts.

We need not dwell at length on the contention that the stations operated under a sub-lease or on open account must be omitted from consideration. It is true that the Clayton Act (50) speaks of leases of goods. And it may be conceded that the statute does not apply to leases on real property. And, generally speaking, a sub-lease is not a lease. But, as I stated at the oral argument, the designation which the parties have given to an instrument is not conclusive. We are dealing with an important governmental policy of long duration, established by a statute which became effective on July 2, 1890 (51), and implemented by a subsequent statute, which became effective on October 14, 1914 (52). Our duty is to give effect to it. If the practices involved in the case are contrary to the provisions of either statute, the character of the instrument in which they are contained is not important. The Sherman Act refers to contracts. (53) The Clayton Act refers to leases, sales or contracts. But, in setting the boundaries of illegality, it speaks of conditions, agreements, or understandings that the lessee or purchaser shall not use or deal in competitive goods, and which may result in the restraints condemned by the statute. (54) The Complaint is drawn under both statutes. Ordinarily, a lease deals with the term, the rent to be paid, and the type of business to be conducted on the premises. But, if, in addition, it says whose goods or products should be handled on the premises, we have a condition, agreement or understanding which has nothing to do with the lease proper, and which is within the scope of our inquiry. And if the exclusive supply undertaking, whether contained in a lease, or lurking behind an open account, has the effect condemned by the statute, it is within its prohibitions.

(5) Source of Products.

For the purpose of distributing the petroleum products, both in bulk and packaged, supplied by the California refineries of Standard, the territory is divided into twenty-three distributive areas. These areas are supplied bulk products by tank cars or tank trucks from various points, which, in turn, are supplied by tanker from the refineries.

Package goods are supplied by box cars and package trucks from the various refineries. For this purpose, the territory is divided into four areas. The accessories are supplied from eight accessory warehouses, their location and the dealers they serve being:

San Francisco—serves Central and Northern California; also dealers in Northwestern Nevada; also Lakeview District in Southern Oregon.

Salt Lake City—serves all Utah, Arizona, North of Grand Canyon, Eastern and Northern Nevada and Southeastern Idaho.

Phoenix—confined to the State of Arizona and Needles across the Colorado River in California.

Los Angeles—Southern California and Southern Nevada.

Fresno—within the State of California.

Portland—Oregon, Southern Washington and Southwestern Idaho.

Seattle—Washington only.

Spokane—Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho.

The point is pressed that some of the products, such as gasoline, are supplied to California stations exclusively from California refineries. And it is argued that, so far as the California stations are concerned, their dealings in gasoline are beyond the purview of interstate commerce.

We are not dealing here with commerce in different articles. We are dealing with contracts and practices which are alleged to be illegal under the Anti-Trust Acts. These contracts, which have been epitomized in the first part of this opinion (56), cover specifically all petroleum products and tires, tubes and batteries. They also affect dealings in other accessories. We need not, therefore,—nay, we cannot—make a segregation, so as to exclude any item which may have both state provenance and destination in the Western area. The contract is an entirety and cannot be split. More, under the Clayton Act, if a contract has a tendency to lessen competition substantially, or to create a monopoly, the fact that it may also affect the movement of goods in intrastate commerce does not validate it, if its whole effect is likely to be a lessening of competition or monopoly in a sizeable and measurable segment of interstate commerce. In interpreting statutes of this character, and, generally, any legislation which aims to carry into effect the plenary power of the Congress to regulate commerce, it is accepted constitutional doctrine that the power to control is not destroyed by the mere fact that purely intrastate activities may also be reached by it. (57)

[56] See Part I of Opinion.

More, as already shown, there is a constant flow in interstate commerce of these products and supplies. (58) The contracts affect, and the transactions under them are in the course of, interstate commerce. And the practice must also be considered from the effect on the dealers and the competitive suppliers. If, as to them, it results in an effective lock-out of a considerable supply of goods of interstate source, the contracts which carry the practice into effect are invalid.

V

Conclusion and Findings

(1) Summary of Conclusions:

So we come to the end of our discussion. Grant that, on a comparative basis, and in relation to the entire trade in these products in the area, the restraint is not integral. Admit also that control of distribution results in lessening of costs and that its abandonment might increase costs. Despite all this, there confronts us the inescapable fact that such "balanced distribution"—as counsel for the defendants characterize it,—calls for concentration of representation, which, in turn, results in an unreasonable restriction of trade, and a substantial lessening of competition, so far as the 5197 outlets, their independent operators and those who seek to supply them, are concerned. As the restriction corners a market of the value of $68,000,000.00, it is illegal, even considered on a comparative basis. Concede further, that the arrangement was entered into in good faith, with the honest belief that control of distribution and consequent concentration of representation were economically beneficial (58) to the industry and to the public, that they have con-

[58] United States v. Trenton Potteries, 1926, 273 U. S. 392, 397; and see cases cited in Footnotes 9 to 13. General statements on discontinuity as an element in fixing the intrastate character of a transaction, such as those quoted and relied on, from Jewel Tea Co. v. Williams, 1941, 10 Cir., 118 F. (2) 203, 206-207, are not very helpful. They must be evaluated only in relation to the situation under review in the particular case, and in the light of the later Supreme Court decisions, which have modified greatly the concept they seek to perpetuate. The case in which they are found was decided in 1941. In Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Co., 317 U. S. 564, decided in 1944, the Supreme Court refused to apply rigidly the formula of pause or stoppage. The Court said:

> "The record reveals, however, that the goods in both of these two categories are ordered pursuant to a preexisting contract or understanding with the customer. It is not clear whether the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals includes these two types of transactions in the group of prior orders which it held were covered by the Act. We think they must be included. Certainly they cannot be distinguished from the special orders which respondent receives from its customers. Here also, a break in their physical continuity of transit is not controlling. If there is a practical continuity of movement from the manufacturers or suppliers without the state, through respondent's warehouse and on to customers whose prior orders or contracts are being filled, the interstate journey is not ended by reason of a temporary holding of the goods at the warehouse. The fact that respondent may treat the goods as stock in trade or the circumstance that title to the goods passes to respondent on the intermediate delivery does not mean that the interstate journey ends at the warehouse. The contract or understanding pursuant to which goods are ordered, like a special order, indicates where it was intended that the interstate movement should terminate. Numerous authorities are pressed on us for the contrary view and for the conclusion that when the goods enter the warehouse, they are no longer 'in commerce.' But as we stated in Kirschbaum v. Walling, 316 U. S. 517, 520-521, decisions dealing with various assertions of state or federal power in the commerce field are not particularly helpful in determining the reach of this Act." (Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Co., supra, at pp. 568-569) (Emphasis added) tinued for over fifteen years openly, notoriously and unmolested by the Government, and have been practiced by other major oil companies competing with Standard, that the number of Standard outlets so controlled may have decreased, and the quantity of products supplied to them may have declined, on a comparative basis. Nevertheless, as I read the latest cases of the Supreme Court, I am compelled to find the practices here involved to be violative of both statutes. For they affect injuriously a sizeable part of interstate commerce, or,—to use the current phrase—"an appreciable segment" of interstate commerce.

(2) Specific Findings:

So the facts proved and the legal principles applicable command the following findings:

1. The exclusive supply agreements relate to interstate commerce.

2. They affect, and the transactions under them are, in the course of, interstate commerce.

3. The relation established by the agreements between the operators and Standard is not that of employer and employee, but that of independent contractor.

4. The agreements confine the operators of stations to which they apply to dealing in Standard products, and automotive accessories handled or sponsored by them.

5. They lock out dealers from sources of competitive products originating in interstate commerce.

6. They deny to dealers access to such competitive products.

7. They deny to manufacturers or suppliers of such products access to the outlets controlled by the independent contractors who operate the stations.

F. (2) 348, 351, decided after the Jacksonville Paper Co. case, and in which the same court which decided the Jewel Tea Company case applies a more flexible concept, which accords with the latest rulings of the Supreme Court.

8. They affect a substantial number of outlets and a substantial amount of products, whether considered comparatively or not.

9. They constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce among the States, under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. (59)

10. They result in a substantial lessening of competition and tend to create a monopoly in a line of commerce, in contravention of the Clayton Act. (60)

11. They are illegal in their effect and should be enjoined.

Judgment will, therefore, be for the plaintiff. The terms of the judgment are contained in an order filed simultaneously.

Dated this 7th day of June, 1948.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, CENTRAL DIVISION

No. 6159-Y Civil

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff,

v.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA and STANDARD STATIONS, INC., Defendants

Supplemental Opinion

YANKWICH, District Judge:

I

The Motion to Reconsider

On the same day on which the opinion in this case was filed, June 7, 1948, the Supreme Court decided United States v. Columbia Steel Company, et al. (1) On June 16, 1948, the defendants in this case filed a notice of motion for "reopening, reargument and reconsideration." This was followed by the motion itself, which, originally noticed for June 28, 1948, was advanced to, and actually made, on June 24, 1948, and submitted. It seeks a decision, findings and judgment in favor of the defendants.

I doubt if a motion of this character, which is akin to the motion for "another and different judgment" under California practice (2), can be entertained in our court, either before or after formal findings and judgment are filed. However, neither in the case in which I expressed such doubt (3), nor in a more recent case in which a similar motion was made (4), did I allow this to stand in the way of determining the motion on the merits. Nor will I do so now. For I grant that a judge may, at any time before finality attaches to his decision, change his views on the law of a case or the conclusions to be reached as to a controversy or a specific phase of it (5). More, it would be the imperative duty of any judge of a lower court to give effect to a decision of the highest court of the land, announced subsequent to, or simultaneously with, his decision, and which called for a modification of his views. And such action would be obligatory, whether the higher court spoke with unanimity or was divided, or even if the judge agreed with the minority opinion. When such a situation confronted me several years ago, I wrote:

> "I feel compelled by this decision to hold that the new enactment, Chapter 10 of the Bankruptcy Act, in so far as it applies to irrigation districts of the type of the petitioner, is constitutionally vulnerable, as was the old. As a student, exercising private judgment, I agree with the conclusion of the dissenters that immunity from interference through federal bankruptcy laws, even if applicable to states, should not be extended to state instrumentalities, whether they be municipal, quasi-municipal or public corporations. However, as a judge of a lower court, I cannot exercise private judgment, but must follow the opinion of the majority, which, as I read it, extends the immunity to all governmental agencies created by a state for the performance of public functions." Counsel for the defendants who are, no doubt, familiar with our practice in this respect, have assumed that I would hear the motion on the merits. For, in addition to referring to cases which recognizes the right of a court to reconsider its decision (7), they filed simultaneously a twenty-page printed memorandum, the aim of which is to show "that the decision of the Supreme Court in United States v. Columbia Steel Company, requires a decision in favor of the defendants."

Hence the notice, the brief and the motion itself, which is now before me for decision, all call for a determination of the question propounded by the defendants whether the decision referred to commands a ruling in the present case in favor of the defendants.

II

The Scope of United States v. Columbia Steel Co.

I am of the view that it does not call for a different conclusion than that announced on June 7, 1948. At the outset, I advert to the fact that the range of the ruling I made is not to be determined by the arguments which the Government advanced, but by what was actually decided. The fact that in the Columbia Steel Company case the Government may have made arguments similar to those made in this case loses all significance, if, in fact, my ruling was contrary to the contention. To illustrate: The Government, in the present case, contended that the exclusive supply provision in the Standard contracts was illegal per se. I declined to so hold. On the contrary, I ruled that it was illegal only if it resulted in an unreasonable restraint under the Sherman Act or in substantial lessening of competition under the Clayton Act. (8) I wrote;

> "As I understand the pleadings, and the Government's position at the beginning of the trial, a judgment is sought decreeing that the clause in the contracts which, by its language and actual effect, as shown by the evidence, restricts the stations not employe-operated to the sale and use of petroleum products and accessories produced or supplied by Standard is illegal per se. We cannot agree. To the contrary, as we read the cases, exclusiveness of outlet is not, in itself, illegal. It becomes illegal only if it result in a substantial lessening of competition or the creation of monopoly in the line of commerce." (9).

[8] See Opinion pages 11-27.

The Supreme Court in the Columbia Steel Co. case, interprets its own prior decisions, and especially the Yellow Cab decision (10), in the same manner. Mr. Justice Reed, after referring to the Government's contention that such contracts are illegal per se, says:

> "We do not construe our holding in the Yellow Cab case to make illegal the acquisition by United States Steel of this outlet for its rolled steel without consideration of its effect on the opportunities of other competitor producers to market their rolled steel. In discussing the charge in the Yellow Cab case, we said that the fact that the conspirators were integrated did not insulate them from the act, not that corporate integration violated the act. In the complaint the government charged that the defendants had combined and conspired to effect the restraints in question with the intent and purpose of monopolizing the cab business in certain cities, and on motion to dismiss that allegation was accepted as true. Where a complaint charges such an unreasonable restraint as the facts of the Yellow Cab case show, the amount of interstate trade affected is immaterial in determining whether a violation of the Sherman Act has been charged." [10] United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 1947, 332 U. S. 218.

[11] United States v. Columbia Steel Co., slip decision, pages 24-25. It is to be observed that Mr. Justice Reed in Footnote No. 17 of the Opinion quoted a portion of the Yellow Cab opinion which laid great stress on the effect of a restraint on commerce in a given area, and which adopted the language in Indiana Farmers Guide Co. v. Prairie Farmer Co., 1934, 293 U. S. 268, 279, which I stressed in the opinion. (See pp. 44-45 of my opinion.)

And even the adoption of the Government's contention by a lower court in one case and its rejection in another by a higher court does not, necessarily, mean that the facts in both cases call for the same decision.

III

The Grounds of the Columbia Steel Co. Decision

Unlike the present case which charged violation of both the Sherman and Clayton Acts, the Columbia Steel Co. case charged violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act only. The narrow scope of the inquiry in that case appears from this brief statement of the issues with which the opinion begins:

> "The United States brings this suit under Sec. 4 of the Sherman Act to enjoin United States Steel Corporation and its subsidiaries from purchasing the assets of the largest independent steel fabricator on the West Coast on the ground that such acquisition would violate Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. The Complaint, filed on February 24, 1947, charged that if the contract of sale between United States Steel and Consolidated Steel Corporation were carried out, competition in the sale of rolled steel products and in fabricated steel products would be restrained, and that the contract indicated an effort on the part of United States Steel to attempt to monopolize the market in fabricated steel products. After a trial before a single judge in the district court, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants, and the government brought the case here by direct appeal. 32 Stat. 823, 15 U.S.C. Sec. 29" (12).

The position of the Government in the case was weakened by the fact that on June 17, 1946, the Attorney General of the United States had approved the sale by the War Assets Administration to the United States Steel Corporation, one of the defendants, of the plant which the Government had constructed, during the war, at Geneva, Utah. The negotiations for the sale of the Consolidated plant began prior to that sale. And the purpose of the Consolidated purchase was, as stated in the opinion, with evident approval:

---

> "to assure a market for plates and shapes produced at Geneva, and Roach testified that Consolidated's purpose was to withdraw the stockholders' equity from the fabrication business with its cyclical fluctuations at a time when a favorable price could be realized." (13)

In effect, the court rules that Consolidated's acquisition would not have any great effect on the market, in view of the fact that its requirements are "an insignificant fraction of the total market,—less than ½ of 1%." (14)

The court was also unable to foresee the probability of the continuance of even that limited market if the sale is not completed. Mr. Justice Reed said:

> "Whether we accept the government's or Consolidated's figures, however, they are of little value in determining the extent to which West Coast fabricators will purchase rolled steel products in the eastern market in the future since the construction of new plants at Geneva and Fontana and the creation of new basing points on the West Coast presumably give West Coast rolled steel producers a far larger share of the West Coast fabricating market than before the war." (15)

And, finally, the court stressed the fact that the future dealings between Consolidated and United States Steel would be mere incidents of ownership, not illegal per se, and would not transgress the provisions of the Sherman Act. As Mr. Justice Reed put it:

> "A subsidiary will in all probability deal only with its parent for goods the parent can furnish. That fact, however, does not make the acquisition invalid. When other elements of Sherman Act violations are present, the fact of corporate relationship is material and can be considered in the determination of whether restraint or attempt to restrain exists. That this is the teaching of the Yellow Cab case is indicated by the following quotation:

[13] Slip decision, page 10.
[14] Slip decision, page 11.

> 'and so in this case, the common ownership and control of the various corporate appellees are impotent to liberate the alleged combination and conspiracy from the impact of the Act. The Complaint charges that the restraint of interstate trade was not only effected by the combination of the appellees but was the primary object of the combination. The theory of the complaint, to borrow language from United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57, is that "dominating power" over the cab operating companies "was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management, but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control." If that theory is borne out in this case by the evidence, coupled with proof of an undue restraint of interstate trade, a plain violation of the Act has occurred.' That view is in accord with previous decisions of the Court.

"The legality of the acquisition by United States Steel of a market outlet for its rolled steel through the purchase of the manufacturing facilities of Consolidated depends not merely upon the fact of that acquired control but also upon many other factors. Exclusive dealings for rolled steel between Consolidated and United States Steel, brought about by vertical integration or otherwise, are not illegal at any rate until the effect of such control is to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product." (16)

The position of the Court was summed up in this language:

> "We conclude that the so-called vertical integration resulting from the acquisition of Consolidated does not [16] Slip decision, pages 26-27. Emphasis added.

unreasonably restrict the opportunities of the competitor producers of rolled steel to market their product. We accept as the relevant competitive market the total demand for rolled steel products in the eleven-state area; over the past ten years Consolidated has accounted for only 3% of that demand, and if expectations as to the development of the western steel industry are realized, Consolidated's proportion may be expected to be lower than that figure in the future. Nor can we find a specific intent in the present case to accomplish an unreasonable restraint, for reasons which we discuss under heading III of this opinion." (17)

So, on the whole, it is evident that the decision in the Columbia Steel Co. case cannot be given the broad scope which the defendant claim for it. It is canalized in the narrow channel which the facts in the case established. The court did not have before it any established facts from which to determine the effect which such acquisition might have on future dealings with the acquired company in certain steel products. And there being no probability of restraining effect on interstate commerce, the court found no violation of the Sherman Act.

The minority opinion lends support to this view of the case. The majority declined to see violation in size resulting from permissible concentration of ownership. They required deleterious effects on commerce, in addition, before refusing sanction to the purchase. These they could not find or foresee. The minority, on the contrary, would have found violation in mere bigness.(18)

---

[17] Slip decision, page 30. Emphasis added.

[18] The gist of the dissent is contained in this forceful statement:

"We have here the problem of bigness. Its lesson should by now have been burned into our memory by Brandeis. The Curse of Bigness shows how size can become a menace—both industrial and social. It can be an industrial menace because it creates gross inequalities against existing or putative competitors. It can be a social menace—because of its control of prices. Control of prices in the steel industry is powerful leverage on our economy. For the price of steel determines the price of hundreds of other articles. Our price level determines in large measure whether we have prosperity or de-

In the present case, as appears from the original opinion, we are dealing not with probabilities but with actualities. It was proved at the trial that the challenged practices have, in fact, already resulted in denying to the independent operators of stations which are not owned by the defendants, free dealing in certain commodities in interstate commerce and locking out Standard's competitors from these outlets. And, as there are no rights incident to ownership, of the type involved in the contemplated purchase of Conpression—an economy of abundance or scarcity. Size in steel should therefor be jealously watched. In final analysis, size in steel is the measure of the power of a handful of men over our economy. That power can be utilized with lightning speed. It can be benign or it can be dangerous. The philosophy of the Sherman Act is that it should not exist. For all power tends to develop into a government in itself. Power that controls the economy should be in the hands of elected representatives of the people, not in the hands of an industrial oligarchy. Industrial power should be decentralized. It should be scattered into many hands so that the fortunes of the people will not be dependent on the whim or caprice, the political prejudices, the emotional stability of a few self-appointed men. The fact that they are not vicious men but respectable and social minded is irrelevant. That is the philosophy and the command of the Sherman Act. It is founded on a theory of hostility to the concentration in private hands of power so great that only a government of the people should have it."

Clearly, the minority, led by Mr. Justice Douglas, would stop large concentrations of ownership because they see in them the possibility of harm to the national economy through price-control and other harmful restrictions to freedom of commerce. The majority, led by Mr. Justice Reed, do not see in consolidation of economic power the unreasonable restraint condemned by the Sherman Act. (15 U.S.C.A., Secs. 1 and 2). To them, that Act does not denounce bigness per se, but only such control, large or small, as results, in fact, in the restrictive or monopolistic evils at which the anti-trust law is aimed.

Here, as is obvious from this and the original opinion, the injurious effect on interstate commerce of the restrictions has been shown to exist. More, the present action charges also violation of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C.A. 14) which aims to stop monopolistic practices in their inception. Under it, a violation can be found if the practices tend to achieve the harm condemned by the statute, although such result has not yet been attained.

solidated Steel, the conclusions already announced must stand. The motion is denied.

Argument 40

I.

The District Court concluded that a violation of the anti-trust laws was conclusively established solely because of the number of dealers under contract and the dollar volume of products handled thereunder; that an "appreciable segment of commerce" being thus affected, decisions of this Court compelled the conclusion that defendants' conduct was unlawful irrespective of all other competitive and economic factors 40

(1) This conclusion is disclosed by the District Court's opinion 40

(2) This conclusion is disclosed by the District Court's exclusion of evidence offered by defendants with respect to the effect on competition of the elimination of the "requirements" contracts and the public benefit from the system of distribution employed by defendants and their competitors and the public detriment from the system of distribution which would ensue from an abolition of the contracts, and the District Court's ruling that it would refuse to allow testimony along this line or testimony concerning the effect on prices, or the economic merits or demerits of the practices complained of 42

(3) This conclusion is disclosed by the District Court's failure to make findings with respect to the competitive picture and defendants' position therein, defendants' purpose, consumer demands, and the characteristics of the market generally, despite evidence introduced by the defendants upon these issues and despite defendants' request for a consideration of these factors 48

PAGE

II.

The District Court erred in disregarding competitive and economic factors. These factors should have been considered and weighed 52

(1) Presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest was the test which the District Court should have employed, both under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act 53

(A) This was the proper test under the Sherman Act 53

(B) This was the proper test under the Clayton Act ... 53

(2) This was not a case which could properly be decided solely by resort to an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory 61

(A) In our case there was no restraint which was "illegal per se" 66

(B) In our case there was no "specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint" 70

(3) Applying the test of presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest, the District Court should have considered and weighed the competitive and economic factors which it disregarded 74

III.

The District Court erred in concluding upon the evidence received that there was a violation of either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act 82

(1) The "requirements" contracts are not within the purview of the Clayton Act 82

(2) The "requirements" contracts have been in use for so long a period that their effect can be evaluated without speculating as to their "probable" or "possible" future effect 85

PAGE

(3) The "requirements" contracts are not an unreasonable restraint and have not had the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create monopoly... 87

(A) There was no unreasonable restraint... 90

(B) There was no substantial lessening of competition 93

(C) There was no monopoly or tendency to create monopoly... 99

(4) The District Court failed to find facts requisite to show illegality, i.e., failed to find facts showing that the contracts were an unreasonable restraint or might have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create monopoly... 110

(5) "Requirements" contracts with California dealers are not in restraint of interstate commerce, and are not "in the course of" such commerce, and do not substantially "effect" such commerce... 115

Conclusion... 119

No. 279

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA and STANDARD STATIONS, INC.,

Appellants,

vs.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee.

BRIEF OF APPELLANTS, STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA AND STANDARD STATIONS, INC.

This is a direct appeal from a judgment of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California by Standard Oil Company of California and Standard Stations, Inc. They were defendants below.[1] They present the following brief to support their contention that such judgment should be reversed.

OPINION BELOW.

The opinion of the District Court [R. 99-140] is reported in 78 F. Supp. 850, and the supplemental opinion [R. 158-167] of the District Court is reported in 78 F. Supp. 875.

[1]Herein appellee will sometimes be referred to as "plaintiff" and appellants as "defendants." References to pages of the record are designated: R. A page reference to an exhibit is followed by a reference to the page at which such exhibit was admitted in evidence. Italics throughout this brief have been supplied.

JURISDICTION.

The final judgment of the District Court against appellants was entered on June 30, 1948 [R. 188, 194]. Petition for appeal [R. 1866] was filed and allowed [R. 1876] on July 20, 1948. The jurisdiction of this Court is conferred by sec. 2 of the Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272, 15 U. S. C. 29),[2] and sec. 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938, 28 U. S. C. 345). Probable jurisdiction was noted on October 19, 1948 [R. 1947].

STATUTES INVOLVED.

The pertinent provisions of secs. 1 and 4 of the Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, commonly known as the Sherman Act, are as follows:

> Sec. 1. "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: . . ." (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C. 1.)

> Sec. 4. "The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. . . ." (26 Stat. 209; 15 U. S. C. 4.)

[2] Effective September 1, 1948, subsequent to the allowance of the appeal herein, Sec. 2 of the Act of February 11, 1903 (15 U. S. C. 29) was amended by the new United States Code—Judiciary and Judicial Procedure, but such amendment established no change in the jurisdiction theretofore conferred by the Act of February 11, 1903. The new amendment, being Sec. 17 of an Act entitled "An act to revise, codify, and enact into law, title 28 of the United States Code entitled 'Judicial Code and Judiciary,'" reads: "In every civil action brought in any district court of the United States under any of said Acts, wherein the United States is complainant, an appeal from the final judgment of the district court will lie only to the Supreme Court."

Secs. 3 and 15 of the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended, commonly known as the Clayton Act, are as follows:

Sec. 3. "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." (38 Stat. 731; 15 U. S. C. 14.)

. . . . . .

Sec. 15. "The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this Act, and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. . . ." STATEMENT.

History of the Litigation.

The United States, on January 2, 1947, brought this suit under sec. 4 of the Sherman Act and sec. 15 of the Clayton Act to enjoin alleged violations of sec. 1 of the Sherman Act and sec. 3 of the Clayton Act [R. 1-12]. The complaint charged that Standard Oil Company of California (herein called "Standard"), and its wholly owned subsidiary, Standard Stations, Inc.,[3] had made certain written "exclusive supply" agreements and subleases (herein called "requirements" contracts) with numerous independent service station operators and garage operators in the Western area [R. 7].[4] These "requirements" contracts obligated Standard to sell to the dealer and the dealer to buy from Standard his requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by the dealer at a designated service station or garage, and certain but not all of these "requirements" contracts extended these obligations to tires, tubes and batteries [R. 7, 8, 171-178]. The complaint also charged that the companies entered into oral agreements with like obligations with certain service station and garage operators [R. 7].

The making of written "requirements" contracts was not denied. The existence of oral agreements was denied [R. 94].

[3]Defendant, Standard Stations, Inc., since June 1, 1944, has confined its activities to the management and operation of Standard's company-operated service stations, known as "Standard Stations." [R. 1064.] These stations are not involved in this suit.

[4]Defined, in the complaint as the states of California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Nevada, Idaho, Utah and New Mexico. [R. 3.] It subsequently appeared that neither of the defendant companies made contracts or subleases with any one in New Mexico or marketed their products in that state. Therefore it was conceded during the trial that the "Western area" did not include New Mexico. [R. 201.]

The complaint charged that these contracts covering these products had the effect of eliminating competition between Standard and other producers and manufacturers of products of like utility and quality for the patronage of a substantial portion of the retail outlets for such products in the Western area, and deprived a substantial portion of such retail outlets of the opportunity of purchasing such products from producers and manufacturers of their own selection and at prices determined in free and open competition, and secured to Standard a monopoly of the patronage for such products in a substantial portion of such retail outlets, thereby "restraining and substantially lessening competition in the interstate trade and commerce in petroleum products and automotive accessories" [R. 10].

These allegations were denied by the answer [R. 95], and issue was joined upon plaintiff's contention that the "requirements" contracts unreasonably restrained and substantially lessened competition in interstate commerce [R. 88-95].

Issue was likewise joined upon defendants' affirmative defenses that the "requirements" contracts had long been employed by Standard's competitors; that the practice had arisen and been pursued because dealers required over a definite period a supply of these products to satisfy their requirements; that the "requirements" contracts were the outgrowth of competition; that Standard's competitors in the Western area were numerous and aggressive; and that but for the "requirements" contracts the competition of Standard for the trade of the dealers would have been eliminated [R. 95, 96].

No conspiracy or combination was charged.

No price fixing or price control or price discrimination, or attempt at anything of this sort, was charged.

No control over or interference with supply, or attempt at anything of this sort, was charged.

The cause was tried in the District Court during May, 1948.

On June 7, 1948 the District Court filed an opinion upholding the contentions of the government [R. 99-140]. Thereafter, before the making of findings or the entry of judgment, Standard moved the District Court to reopen the cause and hear further argument upon and reconsider its opinion in view of the decision of this Court on June 7, 1948 in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495 [R. 141-157]. Following argument, this motion for reconsideration was denied on June 28, 1948 [R. 168], and the District Court on that date filed a supplemental opinion [R. 158-167].

The District Court's findings of fact are set forth in 32 paragraphs [R. 168-185], and its conclusions of law in 10 paragraphs [R. 186, 187]. Error has been assigned to many of the District Court's conclusions, and to certain of its findings [R. 1867-1875]. While appellants have not challenged many of the District Court's findings as to specific facts, they believe that the significance of many of these can be determined only if weighed in relation to other undisputed facts which the findings and the District Court ignored. Error has been assigned to the failure to find the facts thus ignored [R. 1870-1872]. Error has also been assigned to the District Court's exclusion of certain evidence [R. 1872-1875].

In this statement of the case we invite attention to the following facts, some of which appear from the findings and all of which are established by uncontradicted evidence.

Standard's Refining and Distribution Facilities.

Standard, which is an integrated oil company engaged in production, transportation, refining and distribution [R. 169], has three refineries. All are located in California. One is on San Francisco Bay at Richmond; one is in the center of the state at Seguro near Bakersfield; and one is on the coast at El Segundo near Los Angeles [R. 182, 979, 1008, 975, 976].

The crude oil processed at these refineries comes solely from California oil wells [R. 223, 227].

Gasoline, lubricating oil and other products of the California refineries reach the service stations and other retail outlets either directly from the refinery by tank truck, where the truck haul is not too extended, or from bulk plants owned and operated by Standard [R. 182, 229, 230, 980-991, 1755, 1759, 975, 976], these bulk plants being supplied from the California refineries by ocean tanker, barge, railroad tank car, or tank truck [R. 182, 1755-1757, 975, 1759, 1760, 976].[5] At the service stations and other outlets these products are sold at retail to the motoring public.

Substantially all tires, tubes and batteries sold by Standard to retail dealer outlets in the Western area, are purchased by Standard at wholesale from factories and plants located in California [R. 230, 1051, 975, 976].

[5]All of Standard's retail dealer outlets throughout the Western area receive their petroleum products in this way from Standard's California refineries except certain outlets in Utah and southeastern Idaho, which are supplied with gasoline obtained by Standard from a Salt Lake City refinery operated by Utah Oil Refining Company [R. 182, 992-994, 1755, 975], and outlets in the eastern part of Arizona, which are supplied with gasoline obtained by Standard from an El Paso refinery operated by Standard Oil Company of Texas. [R. 182, 995-996, 1755, 975.]

The other automobile accessories[6] sold by Standard to the outlets are purchased by Standard from various sources both within and without the Western area [R. 1048, 1049, 975, 976]. Bulk shipments of tires, tubes, batteries and other accessories are received at accessory warehouses maintained by Standard at Salt Lake City, Utah; Phoenix, Arizona; Portland, Oregon; Seattle and Spokane, Washington; and San Francisco, Los Angeles and Fresno, California [R. 183, 184]. At such warehouses these products are sorted and stored [R. 248, 249, 258, 1039, 1052]. Thereafter these products are shipped by common carrier from these warehouses to retail dealers to fill the dealers' orders [R. 183, 1052, 975, 976].

The tires and batteries and many of the other accessories bear the brand name "Atlas," and are purchased from Atlas Supply Company [R. 183]. Others bear other brand names [R. 1041, 1042, 975, 976, 1111].

Standard's Retail Dealer Outlets and Its "Requirements" Contracts.

Presently Standard is distributing petroleum products, tires, tubes, batteries and other automobile accessories through two distinct types of retail outlet.

Sales are made to the public at so-called "Standard Stations," operated by Standard's own employees [R. 1057]. Their uniform and distinctive color scheme is red, white and blue [R. 1057]. These sales are not involved in this suit [R. 7-10].[7]

---

[6]Such articles as spark plugs, oil filters, fan belts, battery cables, fuses, windshield wipers and blades, tire repair and vulcanizing kits, anti-freeze preparations, tire chains, polishes, etc. [R. 1350-1360, 255, 282.]

[7]Sales of gasoline and other petroleum products are also made by Standard to industrial, commercial and agricultural accounts. [R. 1018, 975, 976.] These sales are not involved in this suit.

Sales are also made to independent dealers, most of whom are so-called "Chevron dealers."[8] These outlets are involved in this suit.

Although (as hereinafter noted) Standard has distributed generally through independent dealers since 1938, the dealers were not called "Chevron dealers" until 1945 [R. 1059].

Under this "Chevron dealer" system Standard paints the dealers' stations, following a distinctive and uniform pattern employing the colors cream, green and burgundy [R. 1059]. The dealer's name is featured prominently on the station [R. 1061]. In order to meet competition Standard in many cases installs certain equipment for these dealers, such as pumps, tanks, air compressors, air and water wells, hoists, buildings, canopies, rest rooms, lubricating oil equipment, drinking fountains, special lighting, paving and signs [R. 1084, 1085]. These dealers receive a special monetary allowance from Standard in consideration of their maintaining clean rest rooms [R. 1085, 1086].

To improve the service which these dealers offer the motoring public, Standard furnishes them the aid of a company employee, called a "dealer merchandiser," who trains the dealer. [R. 1103.]

Standard also furnishes these dealers with elaborate manuals of information and instruction prepared by the Company's organization, dealing with car lubrication for different makes and models of cars [R. 1086, 1087, 1099, 1822, 1100], the installation and repair of tires, tubes, batteries and other accessories [R. 1100, 1824, 1101], as well as selling methods, advertising, and the most efficient utilization of the service the Company offers the motoring public. [R. 1101, 1827, 1101.] Standard also furnishes these dealers with bookkeeping forms for the dealer's personal business accounting, periodical bulletins dealing with matters of current concern to the dealer's business, and numerous sales and advertising aids.[9] [R. 1102, 1103, 1104, 1848, 1102, 1858, 1104.]

On March 12, 1947 Standard was the owner or lessee and operator of 1063 company-operated Standard Stations in the Western area. [R. 1316, 212.]

On the same date Standard was also selling products to 5939 independent retail dealers. [R. 1315, 1316; 212.] With 742 of these Standard had no written agreement or lease of any kind and Standard did not own and was not the lessee of the property.[10] [R. 1316, 212.] In the case of the remaining 5197 dealers Standard had some form of contract or sublease with the dealer, and in 110 of such cases owned the property in fee, and in 3944 of such cases had leased the property from the owner thereof. [R. 1315, 212.][11] Not all of these 5197 dealers handle

[9]Such as direct mail "follow-up" and forms used in connection with the lubrication of customers' cars; also (at low cost to the dealer) other direct mail material for publicizing the station, billheads, stationery, envelopes and calling cards; also mats and cuts for newspaper and handbill advertising; also travel maps and information to enable customers to plan vacation trips. [R. 1104, 1105.]

[10]The District Court found [R. 179] that Standard had "oral agreements" with these 742 dealers "pursuant to which the dealer agreed to handle and sell only the gasoline acquired from or sold to him by defendant Standard." While appellants contend that this finding is not supported by the evidence, this contention will not be argued upon this appeal since it is believed that the existence or non-existence of such "oral agreements" can have no bearing upon the result.

[11]Standard's capital investment in the land and equipment of dealer stations is approximately $16,500,000. [R. 1079, 1080.]

petroleum products, tires, tubes, batteries and automobile accessories purchased from Standard. For example, some handle Standard's gasoline only [R. 1074-1076], or Standard's lubricating oil only [R. 1074-1076], or Standard's petroleum products, but not tires, tubes, batteries or accessories sold by Standard. [R. 1074-1076, 1313, 212.]

Standard has not made contracts with dealers so as to have a concentration of dealers in any one locality in the Western area. [R. 1076, 1077.] Standard's 5197 dealer outlets under written contract are scattered throughout the area, which in its entirety embraces approximately 717,647 square miles. Illustrative of this absence of concentration are the Los Angeles basin and San Francisco bay areas—by far the most populous localities in the entire Western area.[12] In 1946 in the Los Angeles basin area there were 26 service stations for every dealer station handling Standard's gasoline [R. 1649, 910], and in the San Francisco bay area there were 13 service stations for every dealer station handling Standard's gasoline. [R. 1652, 910.]

[12] The Los Angeles basin area includes Los Angeles, Alhambra, Pasadena, Glendale, Monrovia, Van Nuys, San Fernando, Newhall, Whittier, El Segundo, and other suburban communities. [R. 893, 894, 1650, 904, 1651, 904.] The San Francisco bay area includes San Francisco, part of Oakland, Berkeley, Piedmont, Albany, El Cerrito, Richmond, Sausalito, San Rafael and all cities on the peninsula south of San Francisco to and including Palo Alto. [R. 904, 911.]

The Los Angeles basin area is the largest retail gasoline market in the world. [R. 902.] By the 1940 census its population exceeded the population of either Oregon or Washington and exceeded the combined populations of Arizona, Nevada, Utah and Idaho. In 1946 there were more registered automobiles in Los Angeles County than in the states of Washington, Oregon, Nevada and Arizona combined. [R. 902.]

Standard's dealers do not occupy a substantial portion of the favorably situated retail outlets.[13] While a few of the company-operated Standard Stations are situated in localities where, because of municipal ordinances or regulations, it would be difficult for a competitor to obtain a new location, this is not true with respect to Standard's dealer stations. The latter are situated in localities where a competitor can obtain a comparable location. [R. 1081, 1082].

The contract with or sublease to the dealer contains the so-called "requirements" clause, which is attacked in this case. Involved in this attack are the Dealer Agreement [R. 1301, 211]; the Dealer Agreement TBA [R. 1308, 211]; the Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreement [R. 1305, 211]; and the Sublease [R. 1311, 211]. The government also attacks the Distributor Agreement [R. 1304A, 211], use of which preceded use of the Dealer

---

[13] The complaint alleged that "since the number of service station sites which will return reasonable profits to their operators in any given area is limited, it is recognized that established operators of favorably situated service stations occupy positions of substantial impregnability against competitive invasion of their respective areas by other operators" [R. 4]; also that Standard's dealer outlets constitute a substantial portion of all of the "favorably situated" retail outlets in the Western area. [R. 6.]

No evidence whatever was offered by the government to prove these allegations.

At the trial the District Court directed discontinuance by defendants' counsel of inquiry along this line, in view of the government's failure to offer proof to support these allegations. During the introduction of evidence by defendants and with reference to an objection made by government counsel, the District Court said: "I think the inquiry should be discontinued here. I do not think it is material to the issues as they stand now. It may well be that Mr. Hall [defendants' counsel] prepared this testimony in view of some of the allegations of your complaint, such as, for instance, that they monopolize corners, but you have offered no testimony at all connected with geography, as well as to good corners or bad corners or anything else; so that that issue is not before the court." [R. 1082.]

Agreement TBA, and use of which has been discontinued since September 1944. [R. 171, 1314, 212.][14]

Typical of the so-called "requirements" clause attacked in this case, is the language of the Dealer Agreement providing that Standard "agrees to sell to" the dealer and the dealer "agrees to buy from" Standard "all of Dealer's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer at" the dealer's specifically described retail outlet. [R. 1301, 211.] Substantially the same language appears in the Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreement [R. 1305, 211] and the Dealer Agreement TBA. [R. 1308, 211.] The latter contains the further provision that Standard "agrees to sell or consign to" the dealer and the dealer "agrees to purchase or receive from" Standard "and stock and offer for sale, all Dealer's requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer on said premises . . . . Company will deliver to Dealer such other merchandise currently sold by Company that Dealer wishes to handle hereunder, in quantities necessary in opinion of Company to meet Dealer's requirements at said premises." [R. 1308, 211.][15]

The Dealer Agreement [R. 1302, 211], the Dealer Agreement TBA [R. 1310, 211], and the Distributor Agreement [R. 1304A, 211] are by their terms terminable by either party on 30 days notice at the end of the first

---

[14] As Distributor Agreements expire they are being replaced by the Dealer Agreement TBA. Thus on Mar. 12, 1947, there were 556 Distributor Agreements outstanding in the Western area. At the time of the trial there were only 232. [R. 1314, 212.]

[15] The Distributor Agreement, now superseded, contained substantially the same "requirements" clause as the Dealer Agreement TBA, but with this additional sentence: "Distributor agrees not to store, handle, distribute, or sell any other brand or brands of petroleum products at or from the station." [R. 1304A, 211.]

6 months or at the end of any 6 months period thereafter.

On March 12, 1947 there were outstanding 1800 Subleases, 1656 Dealer Agreements, 2221 Dealer Agreements TBA, 912 Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreements, and 556 Distributor Agreements. [R. 1313, 1314, 212.] In many cases a single dealer executed two or more of these documents.

Standard's Long-continued Use of "Requirements" Contracts.

As early as 1931 Standard was distributing its petroleum products through agents under leases and agency agreements [R. 170, 171], such leases and agency agreements in numerous instances providing that the agent would handle only Standard's petroleum products. [R. 171.] Use of the Distributor Agreement (later superseded by the Dealer Agreement TBA) began about 1934 [R. 171, 286, 1070], but the agency method of distribution was not superseded until 1938. [R. 171.]

In 1938 Dealer Agreements containing the "requirements" clause came into use, and a dealer system superseded an agency system. [R. 171, 286, 1070.][16]

In 1944 and thereafter the Dealer Agreement TBA containing the "requirements" clause was used in place of the Distributor Agreement. [R. 171, 1314, 212, 287, 1070.] In 1944 the Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreement containing the "requirements" clause also came into use. [R. 171, 287, 1071.]

---

[16]Various printings of these Dealer Agreements in 1938, 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944 all contain the so-called "requirements" clause. [R. 1788-1821, 1070.]

Thus, Standard has continuously employed the "requirements" clause in contractual relations with independent dealers since 1938.

Standard's Sales to Dealers Without a "Requirements" Contract.

A dealer desiring to handle Standard's products (other than tires, tubes and batteries) may obtain them from Standard without entering into any written contract.

Standard will and does sell a dealer gasoline without a contract of any kind [R. 1074, 1316, 212], even where the dealer is selling the petroleum products (other than gasoline), or the tires, tubes or batteries of one of Standard's competitors. [R. 1074.] Standard will and does sell a dealer lubricating oil without a contract of any kind, even where the dealer is selling the gasoline or the tires, tubes, or batteries of one of Standard's competitors. [R. 1074, 1075.]

The foregoing has been Standard's practice for a number of years. [R. 1075.]

Standard will sell automobile accessories (other than tires, tubes and batteries) to a dealer without a contract of any kind, even where the dealer is selling the petroleum products (other than gasoline) or the tires, tubes or batteries of one of Standard's competitors. [R. 1076.]

Standard will not sell a dealer its gasoline if such dealer also handles gasoline purchased from someone else. [R. 242, 269, 1127.] This is and has been for years the almost universal practice of all gasoline suppliers in the Western area. A service station handling the gasoline of more than one supplier is known as a "split-pump" station. [R. 265.] Out of 36,500 retail outlets in the Western area in 1948 only 577 outlets, or 1.6% of the total, were "split-pump" outlets. [R. 1062, 1763-1777, 1064.] At the time of the trial Standard's six largest competitors were serving only 119 "split-pump" accounts. [R. 1547, 856, 1537, 867, 1566-1568B, 874, 1590, 879, 1610, 882, 1619, 887.]

Standard discontinued sales to "split-pump" stations about 1938 or 1939. [R. 269.] A "primary reason" for this was the danger of substitution. [R. 1106.] Experience had demonstrated the danger of what is called "long-hosing" by the dealer, i. e., the furnishing of a brand of gasoline not requested by the customer by means of a long hose from a pump adjacent to the pump from which the customer believed he would be served when he stopped his car at the "pump block." [R. 1106, 1107.] There is also a danger of substitution in the sale of lubricating oil if more than one supplier's brand is carried by the dealer. [R. 1107.] Other reasons prompting a discontinuance of "split-pump" stations, were the dealers' preference for handling the products of a single supplier [R. 266], and a higher delivery cost in the case of "split-pump" stations. [R. 266.] By 1938 or 1939 "split-pump" stations were in "process of eliminating themselves" because "dealers generally did not want to merchandise in that manner." [R. 269.][17]

---

[17]E. J. McClanahan, Standard's vice-president in charge of marketing, testified that prior to 1938 or 1939 Standard served "split-pump" accounts. [R. 269.]. About that time "split-pump" accounts were in "process of eliminating themselves." [R. 269.] Dealers "generally did not want to merchandise in that manner. It was not a sound policy for them." [R. 269.] The "dealers themselves are not favorable to dividing their interests with suppliers, for two basic fundamental reasons: They haven't the merchandising support from the supplier like they would have if that supplier knew that they were constantly selling his product; and secondly, they haven't an assurance of supply. There is no obli-

Standard will not sell tires, tubes, or batteries to a dealer unless the dealer will sign a Dealer Agreement TBA. [R. 1075.]

Standard will not sell automobile accessories (other than tires, tubes and batteries) to a dealer unless such dealer sells Standard's gasoline. [R. 1075, 1076.]

A dealer desiring to buy Standard's petroleum products may freely elect to execute either a Dealer Agreement, or a Dealer Agreement TBA. If he elects to execute the gation on the part of the supplier to continue supplying a split pump account such as there is on a long-term, secured tenure arrangement with what we call a 100 per cent account." [R. 266.] Illustrative of what he meant by lack of "merchandising support" in the case of a "split-pump" account, Mr. McClanahan testified that such an account "carries what we term a neutral color scheme and his place of business is not identifiable by the mobile buying public such as it would be if he represented the advertised products of a supplier. It is difficult for a buyer to single out the particular product that he wants. That is one phase of it." [R. 267.]

"Split-pump" accounts were also objectionable from the standpoint of the company. . . .

Mr. McClanahan testified that "experience has proven that they ["split-pump" accounts] tend to misrepresent the products to the trade. Oftentimes they sell a gasoline out of one pump that the customer may think he is buying from another, creating what we call substitution. We have known of many instances where they have transferred the products from an underground tank to another tank, where it is sold under another brand, because of some temporary compensation that they might get from that particular supplier." [R. 266.] ". . . we have had accounts, where we have had the trademark and the color in the pump, and the account has sold gasoline from that pump for six months, and we haven't delivered a gallon of gasoline to the dealer in six months, but the meters on that pump showed a tremendous output." [R. 273.]

E. D. Thompson, Standard's manager of dealer sales, testified that the "primary reason" Standard ceased selling gasoline to

Dealer Agreement, he will be obligated to buy his petroleum products "requirements" for a specified station from Standard, but is contractually free to and in many cases does purchase his tires, tubes, batteries and accessories from a competitor of Standard. [R. 1075, 1313, 212, 1301-1303, 211.] The same thing is true with respect to a dealer who elects to execute a Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreement, but not a Dealer Agreement TBA. [R. 1076, 1313, 212, 1305-1307, 211.]

"'split-pump' accounts was because of the danger of "substitution"; that "split-pump" accounts substituted competitive products for Standard's products, "in many instances making such sales on the company's credit cards." The pumps generally "would be on a single pump block, and a customer attracted to the station—if our colors and signs were displayed, a customer desiring our products would be attracted to the station, and in pulling up to the pump block would naturally expect to receive the product that was generally identified in that unit, and it was very eas for the dealer to take the hose from some other pump, and without being observed by the motorist put the gasoline in the tank." [R. 1106, 1107.] This practice was called "long-hosing," i.e., the dealer "usually had a pretty long hose on the gasoline" he "chose to push" and "could reach almost any pump block area with a hose from this pump." [R. 1107.]

Mr. Thompson also testified that in the case of "split-pump" stations there was "danger of substitution in the case of lubricating oil." [R. 1107.]

Mr. McClanahan also testified that it cost "on an average from a cent to a cent and a half a gallon more to serve a split-pump account" because of "the uncertainties of deliveries, the uncertainty of quantities and the constant sales followup that is required to maintain representation with that account." [R. 266.]

A graph which is in evidence [R. 1862, 1139] confirms this. It shows that the cost of delivering gasoline to a service station rises disproportionately as the size of the individual delivery diminishes.

A dealer who executes a Dealer Agreement TBA is under no obligation to buy from Standard his requirements of accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries.[18]

Standard's Powerful and Aggressive Competitors in the Western Area.

Standard's largest oil competitors in the Western area are Shell Oil Company, Incorporated, Tide Water Associated Oil Company, General Petroleum Corporation, The Texas Company, Union Oil Company of California, and [18]Paragraph 2 of the Dealer Agreement TBA, after referring to tires, tubes and batteries, reads:

> "Company will deliver to Dealer such other merchandise currently sold by Company that Dealer wishes to handle hereunder, in quantities necessary in opinion of Company to meet Dealer's requirements at said premises." [R. 1308, 211.]

This is the only sentence in any of the agreements or in the sublease which can be deemed to include automotive accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries.

The italicized words leave it entirely optional with the dealer whether he will buy automotive accessories, other than tires, tubes and batteries, from Standard at all or to any extent. If he does not "wish" to handle such merchandise, he is under no obligation to do so. He does not agree to buy any of this merchandise from Standard. He does not agree that he will not buy this type of merchandise from one of Standard's competitors. If he elects to buy this type of merchandise from Standard, the last part of the sentence ("in quantities necessary in the opinion of the Company to meet Dealer's requirements at said premises") is designed to protect Standard against demands by the dealer for quantities in excess of those which Standard can currently supply, and in practice this has been the way this clause has been interpreted. [R. 1071, 1072.]

A dealer under a Dealer Agreement TBA (or for that matter under any other form of "requirements" contract) is always free to handle the accessories, other than tires, tubes and batteries, of Standard's competitors. [R. 1076.]

Richfield Oil Corporation. In 1946 their petroleum products, tires, tubes, batteries and accessories, competitive with Standard, were distributed throughout the Western area through 20,502 dealer outlets[19] and 383 company-operated outlets [R. 1517, 856, 1535, 867, 1566-1568B, 874, 1618A, 885, 1589, 879, 1619 887]. In the same year these six competitor companies sold through such outlets approximately 1,709,874,556 gallons of gasoline and approximately 33,989,666 gallons of lubricating oil [R. 1517, 856, 1536A, 867, 1566-1568B, 874, 1589, 1590, 879, 1618B, 1618C, 885, 1620, 1621, 887]. In that year Standard sold through independent retail dealers 268,568,000 gallons of gasoline and 6,067,782 gallons of lubricating oil [R. 1656, 1660, 939].

Standard has many other competitors in the Western area selling their products through service station outlets. As above noted, the six companies referred to distribute their products through 20,502 dealer outlets and 383 company-operated outlets. Standard distributes its products through 5039 dealer outlets and 1063 company-operated stations [R. 1315, 1316, 212]. Thus Standard and its six largest competitors distribute through 27,887 outlets. However, early in 1947 the total number of retail gasoline outlets in the entire Western area, including company-operated stations, was approximately 36,500 [R. 1061, 1763-1777, 1064]. According to the 1946 gasoline tax statistics there were 80 companies operating in one or more of the states of the Western area, each of which had annual taxable gasoline sales of more than 1,000,000 gallons of gasoline [R. 1675, 1676, 939]. In 1946 in the Los Angeles basin area alone companies other than Standard and the six companies named above supplied gasoline to 2919 service stations, and in the San Francisco bay area alone to 551 service stations [R. 1649, 1652, 910].

Standard's competitors named above sell their own brands of lubricating oil through the dealer stations handling their gasoline [R. 857, 865, 872, 877, 880, 881, 886, 1069]. Additionally, there are a number of other brands of lubricating oil sold to a multitude of retail outlets throughout the Western area in competition with the products of Standard and the companies named above —such brands as "Pennzoil," "Quaker State," "Hyvis," "Conoco," "Kendall," "Macmillan," "Wolf's Head," "Mohawk Penn," "Wilshire," and "Phillips." [R. 317, 318, 335, 336, 454, 455, 478, 479.] In 1946, in addition to the competitor companies named above, there were 62 competitor companies marketing their own brands of lubricating oil in one or more of the states of the Western area [R. 1864, 1865, 1148]. Some of these competing brands of lubricating oil were sold in large volume through a multitude of retail outlets.[20] [20]For example, Pennzoil, selling in 1916 in the Western area through probably less than 2,000 retail outlets, was selling in 1946 in that area through between 8,000 and 12,000 retail outlets, according to the testimony of its president, called as a government witness. [R. 375, 376.] According to another government witness, Macmillan in 1947 was selling in that area to approximately 9,000 to 10,000 accounts—a greater number of accounts than in 1946. [R. 324.] In Los Angeles County and the fourteen counties surrounding Sacramento, Quaker State was sold through 4,000 to 5,000 retail outlets [R. 464] according to the testimony of its vice-president, also a government witness.

Numerous companies likewise sell their tires, tubes and batteries through numerous retail outlets in the Western area.[21] "Pennsylvania," "Goodyear," "Firestone," "Fisk," "Mohawk," "United States," "General," "Gates," "Federal," "Mobile," "Armstrong," "Kelly Springfield," "Dayton," "Miller," "Montgomery Ward," and "Sears Roebuck" are some of the brands of tires competing in that area with Standard's "Atlas" brand of tires. [R. 514, 515, 550, 551, 552, 554, 555, 567, 577, 578.] "Auto-Lite," "Hobbs," "Mobil," "Signal," "States," "Olympic," "Dunlop," "Exide," "Goodrich," "Goodyear," and "Firestone" are some of the brands of batteries competing with Standard's "Atlas" batteries. [R. 627, 630, 633.] These lists are by no means complete; for there was uncontradicted testimony of a recent "check" which disclosed that companies competing with Standard in the sale of gasoline through retail dealers were promoting 27 lines of tires and 28 lines of batteries. [R. 1069.] Of course tires and batteries, as distinguished from gasoline and lubricating oil which are retailed chiefly through service stations and garages, are sold at retail at many outlets other than service stations and garages.

The other oil companies compete with Standard for the patronage of the dealer. They employ the same methods as Standard to induce the dealer to buy from [21] A government witness who was a Los Angeles wholesale dealer in tires and batteries testified that in 1947 he sold products competing with "Atlas" products to approximately 7,000 service stations and garages in the Western area, this being double the number of outlets which had purchased from him the year before. [R. 577, 581.] Another Los Angeles distributor of tires and batteries other than "Atlas," also a government witness, testified that in 1946 he did a business of close to $1,500,000 in California, Nevada and Arizona, and that in 1947 this figure was a little higher. Gasoline.

---

Standard's gasoline is sold to the motoring public (a) through its company-operated stations, known as "Standard Stations," and (b) through independent dealers. [R.

[22]The uncontradicted evidence showed that other companies compete "very aggressively" with Standard in the sale of petroleum products, tires, tubes, batteries and accessories [R. 1065]; that they compete with Standard for the purpose of obtaining sites for service stations [R. 1065], also for the purpose of taking over the patronage of existing dealers [R. 1067]; and that they offer dealers inducements for "the purpose of getting one of . . . Standard's dealers." [R. 1068.]

[23]Shell for 10 years or more [R. 866] has used a "100% Dealer Gasoline Contract" and a "100% Dealer Gasoline Contract and Paint, Work and Sign Agreement" obligating Shell to sell to the dealer and the dealer to buy from Shell "all gasoline and motor fuel" which the dealer "may require for resale at" the dealer's premises situated at a specified location, and providing that the dealer "shall not store or sell . . . any gasoline on or from said premises . . . except as acquired from Shell." [R. 1544, 1547, 867.] For a like period [R. 866] Shell has also used a "Shellubrication Dealer's License Agreement" providing that Shell grants to the dealer the right to use "Shellubrication" at a specified location, and the dealer "agrees to use, advertise and display only lubricating oils and greases obtained from Shell in connection with the performance of 'Shellubrication' service" and "to keep on hand at all times and to display a representative stock of automotive lubricants acquired from Shell. . . ." [R. 1538C, 867.] For a like period [R. 866] Shell has also used a "Loaned Equipment Agreement" by which Shell agrees to loan the dealer certain equipment and the dealer agrees "not to permit said equipment to be used in any manner except for the storage and sale of petroleum products purchased from Shell." [R. 1542, 867.]

Associated for 10 years [R. 859] has used a "Dealer Sales Agreement" and a "Petroleum Products Sales Agreement" obligat-

1057, 1058.] We will call the former "Standard Stations sales," and the latter "dealer sales." It also sells gasoline, as well as other petroleum products, (c) directly to large industrial, commercial and agricultural users. [R. 1018, 975, 976.] We will refer to these as "industrial sales." The Standard Stations sales and industrial sales are not involved in this suit.[24]

What are the total sales in the Western area by all suppliers with which Standard's dealer sales of gasoline are to be compared?

The available figures [R. 1116, 1117] which are accurately informative are those published by the tax authorities of the several states showing taxable gasoline gallon-ing Associated to sell and deliver to the dealer and the dealer to purchase from Associated all petroleum products "required by Buyer . . . for resale from Buyer's premises" at a specified location. [R. 1527, 1529, 859.] Associated has also used for about 7 years [R. 859] a "Merchandise Agreement" which obligates Associated to sell and deliver to the dealer and the dealer to purchase from Associated "all tires, tubes, batteries and accessories and/or auto supplies required by Buyer for resale" at a specified station. [R. 1524, 859.]

General Petroleum for "probably 6 or 7 or 8 years" [R. 873] has used a Dealer Gasoline Contract obligating the company to sell and deliver to the dealer and the dealer to purchase from the company the "Dealer's ordinary trade requirements of gasoline for resale" at a specified service station location. [R. 1578, 874.]

Union, Richfield and Texas have used contracts providing for the sale to and purchase by the dealer of not less than a stated "minimum" quantity and not to exceed a stated "maximum" quantity of petroleum products for resale over a specified period. [R. 1615, 882, 1621, 887, 1590, 1597, 879.] Richfield also uses [R. 887] an Operator's Sales Contract which obligates Richfield to sell to the dealer, and the dealer to buy from Richfield the dealer's "entire requirements" of gasoline, lubricating oils and greases "for resale" during a stated period from a specified service station, but not less than a stated monthly minimum quantity. [R. 1643, 887.]

[24]The issues framed by the pleadings relate solely to "supply contracts" with the "independent service station operators" and "garage operators." [R. 7.]

age: [R. 928-932.] These figures are in evidence. [R. 1653, 939.] These figures which we will refer to as "taxable gallonage," include not only gasoline sold through service stations and other retail outlets, but also what we have referred to as industrial sales. [R. 931, 946, 1116, 1117.]

In the Western area in 1946:

Standard's dealer sales of gasoline were 6.7% of the total taxable gallonage. [R. 1656, 939.]

Standard's "Standard Stations" sales of gasoline (not involved in this suit) were 6.8% of the total taxable gallonage. [R. 1656, 939.]

Standard's dealer sales plus Standard Stations sales of gasoline were, therefore, 13.5% of the total taxable gallonage.

Standard's dealer sales plus Standard Stations sales plus industrial sales of gasoline (the last two not being involved in this suit) were approximately 23%[25] of the total taxable gallonage.

The District Court found that "Standard sells between 12 and 14 per cent of all the gasoline sold or distributed through independent retail dealer outlets in the Western area." [R. 182.] This finding compares Standard's dealer sales plus Standard Stations sales with total sales through independent dealer retail outlets.[26] Since Standard's dealer sales in 1946 were approximately 50% of its dealer sales plus Standard Stations sales, this amounts to a finding that Standard's dealer sales (the sales involved in this suit) are between 6 and 7 per cent of all gasoline distributed through independent retail dealer outlets.

---

[25]The District Court found [R. 182]: "Standard sold approximately 23 per cent of all the gasoline sold in the Western area during the year 1946." This finding was based solely on the testimony of E. J. McClanahan, Standard's vice president, in charge of marketing. His testimony makes it perfectly clear that this 23% estimate included gasoline sold by Standard not only through dealers, but also Standard Stations sales and industrial sales of gasoline. Mr. McClanahan said that this 23% represented "all gasoline sold . . . to all classes of trade." [R. 222.]

This finding was based on testimony [R. 223, 1116] which was an estimate. It was necessarily an estimate, because no one knows exactly what percentage of the total taxable gallonage is represented by gasoline which moves through dealer outlets only. [R. 1116, 1117.]

Therefore, in referring herein to Standard's percentage of the gasoline dealer business we shall refer to the percentage established by the uncontroverted statistics in evidence, i. e., the percentage of the total taxable gasoline gallonage represented by Standard's dealer sales (the sales involved in this suit), which was 6.7%.[27]

Lubricating Oil

What are the total sales in the Western area by all suppliers with which Standard's dealer sales of lubricating oil are to be compared?

---

[26]This finding was based solely on the testimony of E. J. McClanahan, Standard's vice president, in charge of marketing, and the testimony of E. D. Thompson, Standard's manager of dealer sales. An inspection of their testimony clearly shows that they included not only dealer sales, but also Standard Stations sales of gasoline in this estimate of "between 12 and 14 per cent." [R. 223, 1116.]

This was evidently the interpretation of Mr. Dixon, who was in charge of the government's case at the trial. In final argument he said: "If there is any question about that, I submit it is put to rest by the testimony of Mr. McClanahan . . . where he estimated that percentagewise his company had between 12 and 14 per cent of the total retail sales of petroleum products in the Western area. . . ." [R. 1173.]

[27]Standard Stations sales of gasoline in that year were 6.8% of the total taxable gallonage. [R. 1656, 939.]

The available figures which are accurately informative are the lubricating oil sales figures published by the American Petroleum Institute's Economics Division. [R. 933.] These figures are in evidence. [R. 1657, 939.]

Standard's dealer sales in 1946 of lubricating oil in the Western area were 5% of such total taxable lubricating oil sales in that area. [R. 1660, 939.][28]

Tires.

What are the total sales in the Western area by all suppliers with which Standard's dealer sales of tires are to be compared?

The available figures which are accurately informative are those showing total replacement[29] tire shipments published by the Rubber Manufacturers' Association. [R. 934.] These figures are in evidence. [R. 1661, 939.]

Standard's dealer sales in 1946 of tires in the Western area were 2% of such total replacement tire shipments in that area. [R. 1664, 939.][30]

Batteries.

What are the total sales in the Western area by all suppliers with which Standard's dealer sales of batteries are to be compared?

---

[28] Standard Stations sales of lubricating oil in that year were 3.8% of such total. [R. 1660, 939.]

[29] "Replacement" figures are used so as to exclude tires and batteries first installed on new cars at the time the latter are assembled at the factory. Nationwide figures are broken down for the states of the Western area on the basis of motor vehicle registrations. [R. 934.]

[30] Standard Stations sales of tires in that year were 1.9% of such total. [R. 1664, 939.]

The available figures which are accurately informative are those showing total battery replacements published by the Association of American Battery Manufacturers (1933 to 1938) and Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. (1939 to 1946). [R. 935.] These figures are in evidence. [R. 1665, 939.]

Standard's dealer sales in 1946 of batteries in the Western area were 1.8% of such total battery replacements in that area. [R. 1668, 939.][31]

Standard's Failure to Increase Its Percentage of the Total Business During the Long Period the "Requirements" Contracts Have Been in Use.

There has been no lessening of competition during the years that the "requirements" contracts have been used. During that period Standard no more than maintained its relative position as a wholesaler among its competitors and in the case of lubricating oil actually lost ground to its competitors.

Standard in 1938 and 1939 had about 8500 retail dealer outlets in the Western area. [R. 238.] In 1947 Standard had only 5939 such outlets. Of the latter 5197 had contracts or subleases with "requirements" clauses. [R. 1315, 1316, 212.]

Standard has continuously followed the policy of contracting with the fewest possible retail dealers consistent with a coverage of the area to be served. [R. 1076,

[31]Standard Stations sales of batteries in that year were 2.8% of such total. [R. 1668, 939.]

1077.][32] The result is pointedly illustrated by the conditions prevailing in 1946 in the populous Los Angeles basin area and San Francisco bay area. In the Los Angeles basin area Standard's dealer stations were 3.68% of the total service stations and its gasoline sales to such dealer stations were 2.43% of the total gasoline gallonage distributed through all stations in such area. [R. 1649, 910.] In the San Francisco bay area Standard's dealer stations were 6.98% of the total service stations and its gasoline sales to such dealer stations were 5.52% of the total gasoline gallonage distributed through all stations in such area.[33] [R. 1652, 910.]

To show Standard's position in relation to its competitors from year to year over a period during which the "requirements" contracts were in use, Standard introduced

---

[32]From 1931 to 1941 Standard constructed 8% of the new retail outlets that were constructed by all companies. From 1942 to 1947 it constructed 8.7% of such new outlets. [R. 1079.] In the populous Long Beach (California) district on July 15, 1947, Standard had no service stations under construction and its competitors were constructing 48 service stations. [R. 1785, 1066, 1067.]

There was uncontradicted testimony that Standard sought to avoid contracting with many outlets in a given area, because such concentration would result in higher distribution costs. [R. 1077.]

[33]The smaller competitor companies (i.e. companies other than Standard, General Petroleum, Texas, Union, Associated, Shell and Richfield) had 47.15% of the service stations and supplied 43.60% of the gasoline gallonage to service stations in the Los Angeles basin area, and had 28.49% of the service stations and supplied 23.94% of the gasoline gallonage to service stations in the San Francisco bay area. [R. 1649, 1652, 910.]

In the Los Angeles basin area Standard's company-operated stations (Standard Stations) were 4.70% of the total service stations and its gasoline sales through such company-operated stations were 8.71% of the total gasoline gallonage distributed through all stations in such area. [R. 1649, 910.] In the San Francisco bay area Standard's company operated stations were 8.43% of the total service stations and its gasoline sales through such company-operated stations were 14.17% of the total gasoline gallonage distributed through all stations in such area. [R. 1652, 910.]

in evidence statistics and graphs [R. 1653-1673, 939] showing Standard's retail dealer sales as compared with total industry sales in the Western area of motor gasoline, lubricating oil, tires and batteries. These show that Standard's dealer sales in the Western area were a percentage of industry total sales as shown below:

[34]Column (1) shows the percentage which Standard's retail dealer sales of gasoline bear to all taxable gasoline sales. The latter figures are published by the tax authorities of the several states [R. 1656, 939, 928-932], and include not only gasoline sold through retail dealer outlets, but gasoline sold to industrial, commercial and agricultural users. [R. 931, 946, 1116, 1117.] However, the witness Dern testified without contradiction that the total of taxable gasoline sales rises and falls in the same proportion as the total of retail sales of gasoline. [R. 931, 946.] Therefore, to determine whether Standard's competitive position has improved or deteriorated over a period of years, it is proper to compare its retail dealer sales with these taxable sales.

Over the years Standard's dealer sales increased, but so did the volume of sales in the industry generally. Market demand in Western area increased tremendously.

Total taxable gasoline sales in 1936 in the Western area were 2,442,319,000 gals. By 1946 such sales were 4,023,342,000 gals. [R. 1656, 939.] Assuming a price of 18¢ per gal.,[38] the dollar volume of these sales in 1946 would be $724,201,560.00.[39]

Total lubricating oil sales in 1936 in the Western area were 59,704,600 gals. By 1946 such sales were 122,281,383 gals. [R. 1660, 939.] Assuming a price of 50¢ per gal.,[40] the dollar volume of these sales in 1946 would be $61,140,691.00.[41]

Standard's increase in dealer sales of gasoline and lubricating oil was proportionately less than the increase in the total sales in the industry in the Western area.

Comparing 1936 with 1946 Standard's increase in dealer sales of gasoline was 58%. [R. 1656, 939.] As shown above, sales in the industry increased 64%. [R. 1656, 939.] Comparing 1936 with 1946, Standard's increase in dealer sales of lubricating oil was 62%. [R. 1660, 939.] As shown above, sales in the industry increased 104. [R. 1660, 939.]

Moreover, Standard's increase was not nearly as great as the increase in volume of dealer sales of certain of its competitors. Thus, comparing 1941 with 1946 Standard's increase in dealer sales of gasoline was 26% [R.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

I.

The District Court concluded that Standard's "requirements" contracts were unlawful solely because (a) more than 5000 dealers were affected, and (b) a large dollar volume of products was handled thereunder. In its opinion it stated that it was "compelled to find the practices here involved to be violative of both the Sherman and Clayton Acts since they affected "an appreciable segment" of commerce.

Proceeding upon this narrow factual foundation and misapplying the "appreciable segment" of commerce theory, the District Court excluded competent evidence as to the effect on competition of an elimination of the "requirements" clauses; as to the economic aspects of a "split-pump" distribution system as compared with the present single-supplier system; as to whether the "split-pump" system is inherently and from the economic standpoint a more expensive distribution system; as to the effect of the "requirements" contracts on prices; and as to the economic merits or demerits of the present system as contrasted with a system which might prevail if the "requirements" clauses were eliminated. The District Court stated that any advantages which resulted to the dealer and indirectly to the public from the "requirements" contracts was "not a proper subject of inquiry."

Consonant with its erroneous application of the "appreciable segment" of commerce theory, the District Court, although its attention was invited to their importance in the light of United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 527, failed to make findings of fact with reference to the following factors: the number of dealers who handle the products of Standard's competitors, and whether such number had increased or decreased; the number of Standard's competitors, and whether such number had increased or decreased; the volume of products handled by Standard's competitors, and whether such volume had grown or declined in comparison with Standard's volume; the fact that the increase in consumer demand and consumption had been greater than the increase in Standard's dealer sales; Standard's practice in supplying dealers without contracts, and the dealer's freedom of choice in selecting a supplier with whom to contract, and, if he selected Standard, the type of contract to be executed; the fact that dealers under contract with Standard did not have the "favorably situated" outlets, or a monopoly in any given area; the decrease in the number of Standard's dealer outlets; the practices of Standard's competitors in seeking contracts and in contracting with dealers; the general adoption of a single-supplier system of gasoline distribution in the Western area by a multitude of dealers handling the products of Standard's competitors; the reasons for a dealer's handling the products of a single-supplier; and the probable effect upon competition of an elimination of the "requirements" contracts.

II.

The District Court erred in thus disregarding the competitive and economic background. It should have weighed the evidence which was received showing such background. It should have received and weighed the evidence touching such background which it excluded. Defendants were entitled to have all such evidence considered and weighed by the trier of fact.

Under both the Sherman and Clayton Acts the District Court should have applied a "rule of reason"—the test of presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest. (Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, 376; International Shoe Co. v. Comm'n., 280 U. S. 291, 298.) Applying such test the District Court should have considered and weighed all facts bearing upon the competitive and economic background.

This was not a case which could properly be decided solely by resort to an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory, for in this case there was no restraint which was "illegal per se," and there was "no specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint." (United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 522.)

The District Court should have determined the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the alleged restraint by considering and weighing all of the factors entering into the competitive and economic background, instead of deciding that there was unreasonableness solely because an "appreciable segment" of commerce was affected by the contracts.

There being no restraint "illegal per se," nor any "intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint," the broad scope of the factors which the District Court should have weighed is indicated in Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 238; Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 360; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163, 177, 182; and United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 524. The District Court did not weigh these factors. It considered only Standard's operations, divorced from the factors comprising the competitive and economic background. If these factors were material in the Columbia Steel case, they were certainly material in our case. In the former exclusive dealing was brought about through vertical integration and was permanent. In our case exclusive dealing is alleged to have been brought about by "requirements" contracts, but it lasts only during the limited period that such contracts can be enforced by the supplier.

III.

Upon the evidence in our record (and without reference to the evidence excluded and the District Court's error in so doing) the District Court erred in concluding that there was a violation of either the Sherman or Clayton Act.

In the first place, the "requirements" contracts do not fall within the purview of sec. 3 of the Clayton Act, since they do not require the purchaser to buy all his requirements from Standard, but only his requirements for resale at a single specified retail outlet. The obligation imposed upon the dealer by Standard's contracts is not shown to have had any broader effect than the obligation of the contracts upheld in Federal Trade Comm. v. Sinclair Co., 261 U. S. 463.

In the second place, the "requirements" contracts are not an unreasonable restraint nor do they have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create monopoly.

Granted that sec. 3 of the Clayton Act seeks to reach agreements embraced within its sphere in their incipiency, the contracts here in question have been in use for about nine years; thus their "effect" has been amply demonstrated. This was the view of the District Court. Therefore speculation as to their "probable" or "possible" future effect is unnecessary. Their legality should be adjudged by what has already occurred.

There was no unreasonable restraint. The facts shown in the opening Statement herein demonstrate this. A comparison of the facts of our case and the facts in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, is especially persuasive. After operating for about nine years under "requirements" contracts, Standard's gasoline sales through dealer outlets are only 6.7% of the total taxable gasoline gallonage; its dealer sales of lubricating oil are only 5% of the total; its dealer sales of tires are only 2% of the total; and its dealer sales of batteries are only 1.8% of the total. Contracts are not forced on dealers, either by the dealer's necessities, or otherwise. Dealers can buy gasoline or lubricating oil from Standard without a contract of any kind, and, at a moment's notice, switch their patronage to one of Standard's numerous competitors. Nor is a dealer desiring to contract with Standard forced to contract for the full line of Standard's products. If the dealer wants to contract for Standard's gasoline and lubricating oil, he is free to contract with Standard for these products and buy his tires, batteries and other automotive accessories from one of Standard's numerous competitors.

There was no substantial lessening of competition. The facts shown in the opening Statement herein demonstrate this. The "requirements" contracts having been in use for about nine years, the proof fails to show any diminution in the number of Standard's competitors, or in the size or power of such competitors, or that such competitors enjoy a smaller proportion of the available customers or volume of business. Such proof as the record contains is all to the contrary. Year by year Standard's proportion of the business has shown no increase and in the case of lubricating oil has shown an actual decrease. The number of Standard's dealer outlets has substantially decreased in nine years. Standard's competitors are shown to be numerous, powerful, and aggressive and most of its major competitors are shown to have employed "requirements" contracts for a considerable period. Of the 36,500 retail outlets in the Western area handling the gasoline of Standard and its competitors, 98.4% are shown to be handling the gasoline of only one supplier. The primary reason for this is shown to be the danger of substitution if the product of more than one supplier is handled at a given outlet; and another reason is the dealer's own preference due to "assurance of supply" where the product of only one supplier is handled.

There was no monopoly or tendency to create monopoly. There has been no enlargement of an existing patent monopoly, as in the tying-clause cases: United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U. S. 451; International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U. S. 131; and International Salt Company v. United States 332 U. S. 392; or of an existing actual monopoly, as in Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U. S. 346. Standard has never had any patent monopoly or actual monopoly. Nor have privileges been exacted through the leverage of monopoly power, as in United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, 106; Schine Theatres v. United States, 334 U. S. 110, 116; and United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131, 157, 158. Standard has never had monopoly power.

Finally, the decree should in any event except from its operation the contracts between Standard and California dealers. It has not been shown that such contracts contemplated or required or actually involved any movement of goods in interstate commerce. It has not been shown that such contracts restrained interstate commerce, or that they were "in the course of" or substantially affected such commerce. (Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United State, 175 U. S. 211, 247; United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, 258 U. S. 451, 465.)

ARGUMENT.

I.

THE DISTRICT COURT CONCLUDED THAT A VIOLATION OF THE ANTI-TRUST LAWS WAS CONCLUSIVELY ESTABLISHED SOLELY BECAUSE OF THE NUMBER OF DEALERS UNDER CONTRACT AND THE DOLLAR VOLUME OF PRODUCTS HANDLED THEREUNDER; THAT AN "APPRECIABLE SEGMENT" OF COMMERCE BEING THUS AFFECTED, DECISIONS OF THIS COURT COMPELLED THE CONCLUSION THAT DEFENDANTS' CONDUCT WAS UNLAWFUL IRRESPECTIVE OF ALL OTHER COMPETITIVE AND ECONOMIC FACTORS.

The District Court based its conclusion that Standard's "requirements" contracts were unlawful solely upon two factors: (a) the fact that there were more than 5000 dealers affected by these contracts; and (b) the fact that a large dollar volume of products was handled under these contracts. From these facts, the District Court concluded that an "appreciable segment" of commerce was affected; that this conclusively established a violation of the Act, everything else being inconsequential.

(1) This Conclusion Is Disclosed by the District Court's Opinion.

In its opinion of June 7, 1948, the District Court said:

> "Substantiality of restraint or tendency to create monopoly is established by (a) the market foreclosed, —here represented by the controlled units,—and (b)

the volume of controlled business, totaling here in value $68,000,000.00.[42]

Fractionally speaking, the business done by the competitors with their own outlets of with those under contract is much greater than the business of Standard,—both in volume and in money value. Nevertheless, the business of Standard is considerable. In effect, it amounts to a substantial lessening of competition and a monopoly of a sizeable segment of a line of commerce in a definite area—the seven Western states." [R. 126.]

Concluding such opinion the District Court said:

"So we come to the end of our discussion. As the restriction corners a market of the value of $68,000,000.00,[42] it is illegal, even considered on a comparative basis. Concede further, that the arrangement was entered into in good faith, with the honest belief that control of distribution and consequent concentration of representation were economically beneficial to the industry and to the public, that they have continued for over fifteen years openly, notoriously and unmolested by the Government, and have been practiced by other major oil companies competing with Standard, that the number of Standard outlets so controlled may have decreased, and the quantity of products supplied to them may have declined, on a comparative basis. Nevertheless, as I read the latest cases of the Supreme Court, I am compelled to find the practices here involved to be violative of both statutes. For they affect injuriously a sizeable part of interstate commerce, or,—to use the current phrase —'an appreciable segment' of interstate commerce." [R. 130.]

[42]The District Court's finding was $65,846,412.21—not $68,000,000. [R. 180.]

Thus the District Court's decision was based upon an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory. Such factors as "the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the . . . competition," whether the contracts sprang "from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market"[43] were brushed aside as being of no consequence.

(2) This Conclusion Is Disclosed by the District Court's Exclusion of Evidence Offered by Defendants With Respect to the Effect on Competition of the Elimination of the "Requirements" Contracts and the Public Benefit From the System of Distribution Employed by Defendants and Their Competitors and the Public Detriment From the System of Distribution Which Would Ensue From an Abolition of the Contracts, and the District Court's Ruling That It Would Refuse to Allow Testimony Along This Line or Testimony Concerning the Effect on Prices, or the Economic Merits or Demerits of the Practices Complained of.

The District Court's adoption of an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory resulted in the exclusion of evidence embracing a wide field of inquiry.

In this suit the government was seeking the elimination of Standard's "requirements" clauses.

For the purpose of determining the change, if any, which would ensue from an elimination of these clauses and the effect on the public of any such change, defendants called Robert W. Garrett, an expert shown to have familiarity through study and experience with problems incident to the marketing of petroleum products,[44] and propounded to him a series of questions. The government objected to each such question. Each such objection was sustained. [R. 1141-1144.]

These questions sought Mr. Garrett's opinion as to the effect on competition of the elimination of "requirements" clauses generally; whether such elimination would tend to a substantial increase in company-operated stations, or the promotion of dealer-operated chains of service stations; what change, if any, would occur in the over-all competitive picture so far as it relates to suppliers of products to retail service station outlets if a "split-pump" system became general; whether the elimination of "requirements" clauses by suppliers generally would increase or decrease the number of existing service stations, or give the more prominent suppliers a competitive advantage; as to the economic aspects of the "split-pump" distribution system as compared with the present single-supplier system of distribution; in the petroleum marketing field; whether a "split-pump" system would increase the cost of distribution as compared with the single-supplier system so far as either the dealer or the supplier is concerned; whether the "split-pump" system is inherently and from the economic standpoint a more expensive system of distribution, and whether, assuming that a "split-pump" system from the economic standpoint would be a more expensive system, added expense thereunder would be ultimately borne the purchasing public.[45]

At the time of its ruling sustaining objection to these quiries, the District Court stated that it would not per t testimony concerning the effect of the "requirements" ntracts on prices, or the economic merits or demerits the present system as contrasted with a system which ght prevail if the contract provisions attacked by plain- f were eliminated, and that it was immaterial that eco- mic benefit might result from the present system or nomic detriment result from its abandonment.

The District Court said:

". . . I am not going to allow any testimony regarding the effect of this arrangement on prices,

---

[45]The specific questions, which Mr. Garrett was not permitted to swer, were:

(a) "What, in your opinion, Mr. Garrett, would be the effect on competition of the elimination of requirement clauses by suppliers generally? I am asking you for your opinion as an expert in the field of marketing of petroleum products and, in the light of your training and experience in that field?" [R. 1141.]

(b) ". . . Would the elimination of requirement clauses, Mr. Garrett, by suppliers generally, in your opinion, tend to a substantial increase in company-operated units?" [R. 1141, 1142.]

(c) "Mr. Garrett, in your opinion, would the elimination of requirements contracts by suppliers generally tend to promote the growth of dealer-operated chain of service stations?" [R. 1142.]

(d) "Mr. Garrett, assume that a split-pump system became general; in your opinion, based upon your training and experience, what, if any, would be the change in the overall competitive picture under such split-pump system so far as it relates to suppliers of products to retail outlets?" [R. 1142.]

(e) "Would the elimination of all requirements clauses by suppliers generally increase or decrease the number of existing service stations?" [R. 1142.]

because I have already said that I consider it immaterial for two reasons; first, that this is not a price-fixing case and, in the second place, it appears that the unreasonableness of the restraint under the Sherman Act and the substantiality of the restriction under the Clayton Act are not affected by the price at which the product is sold to the public. [R. 1138.]

"I desire to state for the record that I consider the questions propounded to this witness as going to

(f) "Would the elimination of all requirements clauses by suppliers generally tend to give the more prominent suppliers a competitive advantage?" [R. 1143.]

(g) "From the economic standpoint, Mr Garrett, what can you tell us about the split-pump distribution system as compared with the present single supplier system of distribution in the petroleum marketing field?" [R. 1143.]

(i) "From the economic standpoint does a split-pump distribution system increase the cost of the distribution as compared with a single supplier system so far as the supplier is concerned?" [R. 1143.]

(j) "Is a split-pump system inherently and from the economic standpoint a more expensive system of distribution?" [R. 1143.]

(k) "Assuming that a split-pump system from the economic standpoint would be a more expensive system, in your opinion, would the added expense under a split-pump system be ultimately borne by the purchasing public?" [R. 1144.]

Defendants made no offer of proof, for the questions themselves adequately indicated the materiality of the inquiry. Moreover, early in the trial the District Court had stated: "Do not make an offer of proof. I never accept an offer of proof because it encumbers the record with a lot of things. . . ." [R. 305.]

the economic merits or demerits of the present system as contrasted with a system which prevailed prior to its establishment and which would prevail if the court declared the present arrangement between the supplier, the Standard Oil Company, and the stations governed by dealership contracts or the TBA contracts other than and not including the company-operated stations.

"For the reasons indicated, I consider the inquiry beyond the scope of this lawsuit and entirely immaterial because, if the practice is one forbidden by the Statute, the fact that it may result in economic benefit or its abandonment might result in economic loss is not material under the decisions of the Supreme Court and the Circuit Courts of Appeals, as I read them.

"I will state for the record that I would sustain objections to similar inquiry on the part of any other witnesses that the defendant might produce; and I would sustain objections to any chart or documentary evidence seeking to elicit the facts implied in these questions.

"And I will further state for the record that, because of that, the defendants need not call such witnesses or offer such exhibits or make an offer of proof to cover the facts sought to be elicited through this inquiry.

"What is that old expression? 'Hog-tight, bull-strong, and horse-high,' isn't it, like an old-fashioned fence? I have given you a ruling there that will allow you to bring up any facet of that question before any court of appeal that this case may reach." [R. 1144, 1145.]

Previous to these admonitions, the District Court in colloquy with counsel had said:

". . . I think that any inducement that the company makes is material, but any advantages which result to the dealer and indirectly to the public from the arrangement between the company and the dealers is not a proper subject of inquiry, because we are going back again to the question of economic advantage." [R. 1088.]

In the face of these explicit admonitions, defendants perforce refrained from further attempt to introduce evidence along this line or evidence concerning the effect on prices of the practices complained of or the economic merits or demerits of such practices.

A question of law which is a proper subject of review is presented when a trial court excludes competent evidence of a material fact. McCandless v. United States, 298 U. S. 342, 345 (1936). Subsequent argument herein will show the materiality of the evidence excluded by the District Court.

7

(3) This Conclusion Is Disclosed by the District Court's Failure to Make Findings With Respect to the Competitive Picture and Defendants' Position Therein, Defendants' Purpose, Consumer Demands, and the Characteristics of the Market Generally, Despite Evidence Introduced by the Defendants Upon These Issues and Despite Defendants' Request for a Consideration of These Factors.

The District Court's adoption of an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory resulted in findings of fact which ignored uncontradicted evidence.

The findings substantially ignore the competitive picture and defendants' position therein, defendants' purpose, consumer demands, and the characteristics of the market generally. These were matters put in issue by the fourth and fifth affirmative defenses of defendants' answer [R. 95, 96] as well as by denials of the answer. [R. 88-95.]

The findings deal generally with the making of the contracts and subleases [R. 170-171]; the contents of such contracts and subleases [R. 171-178]; the number of these contracts and subleases outstanding [R. 178]; oral "requirements" contracts and the number thereof [R. 179]; the number of retail outlets operated by independent dealers having contractual relations with Standard [R. 179, 180]; the quantity and dollar volume of business done between defendants and independent dealers [R. 180]; the independent contractor relationship between defendants and independent dealers [R. 181]; the means and methods pursued by defendants to induce independent dealers to make contracts and subleases [R. 181]; the movement and distribution in interstate commerce of defendants' products [R. 181-183, 185]; and unsuccessful attempts by manufacturers and producers of competing products to sell or to increase their sales to independent dealers having contractual relations with Standard. [R. 184, 185.]

The only reference to the competitive picture and defendants' position therein is the finding [par. 25] that defendant Standard sells between 12% and 14% of all gasoline sold or distributed through independent retail dealer outlets in the Western area;[46] that in a majority of the states in such area Standard is the largest single marketer of gasoline through such outlets; and that Standard during 1946 sold approximately 23% of all gasoline sold in such area. [R. 182.][46] This ignored most of the evidence which defendants introduced as a part of their defense.

Following the publication of the District Court's opinion of June 7, 1948, and before any findings were made, defendants moved that the District Court reopen the cause and hear further argument upon and reconsider its opinion in view of the decision of this Court on June 7, 1948, in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495. [R. 141, 142.][47]

Supporting this motion for reconsideration defendants filed a printed memorandum pointing out the error of the District Court in predicating its decision upon the limited factors referred to and specifically inviting the District Court's attention to uncontradicted evidence of other facts exhibiting the competitive setting which, under the decision in the Columbia Steel case, ought to have been considered. [R. 142-157.]

This motion for reconsideration was denied on June 28, 1948. [R. 168.]

The findings subsequently made, except as above pointed out, ignored facts disclosing the competitive picture and defendants' position therein, defendants' purpose, consumer demands, and the characteristics of the market generally, despite uncontradicted evidence introduced by the defendants upon these matters. They ignored much of the uncontradicted evidence summarized in the opening Statement herein—evidence relating to the number and strength of Standard's competitors, the similar practices employed by such competitors, and their growth and apparent prosperity; Standard's position in the competitive picture, Standard's relative position in the competitive field from year to year during the period that the "requirements" contracts have been in use; Standard's practice in supplying dealers without any contract whatever and the dealer's free choice in determining whether he will contract with one of Standard's competitors or with Standard, and if the latter, the form of contract he will sign; the origin and long use of "requirements" contracts; the general adoption of a single-supplier system of gasoline distribution in the Western area by a multitude of dealers handling the products of Standard's competitors; Standard's practice of avoiding a concentration of dealers in one locality; Standard's failure to have contracts with the dealers occupying "favorably situated" retail outlets; the benefit in cost to both the dealer and the public from the use of the "requirements" contracts; and the danger of substitution from any return to a "split-pump" regime.[48]

When a trial court neglects to find a fact material to a determination of the cause, such neglect is equivalent to a ruling that such fact is immaterial. This presents a question of law which is a proper subject of review. The Francis Wright, 105 U. S. 381, 387 (1881); The E. A. Packer, 140 U. S. 360, 364 (1891); The City of New York, 147 U. II.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN DISREGARDING COMPETITIVE AND ECONOMIC FACTORS. THESE FACTORS SHOULD HAVE BEEN CONSIDERED AND WEIGHED.

As already pointed out, the District Court excluded evidence as to what would ensue from an elimination of the "requirements" contracts, and also disregarded a great deal of the evidence which was received showing the competitive and economic background. This was error.[49]

Defendants were entitled to have the District Court, the trier of fact, consider and weigh all of this evidence, i. e., consider and weigh the competitive and economic factors, such as "the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market."[50] If these factors, which were brushed aside as inconsequential, had been considered and weighed, can anyone say that the result would not have been different? We contend that these factors required a different decision.

[49]Error is specifically assigned. [R. 1872-1875, 1867.]

[50]United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 527 (1948).

(1) Presence or Absence of Prejudice to the Public Interest Was the Test Which the District Court Should Have Employed, Both Under the Sherman Act and the Clayton Act.

(A) THIS WAS THE PROPER TEST UNDER THE SHERMAN ACT.

Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act makes unlawful contracts in unreasonable[51] restraint of trade.

To determine whether alleged restraint is unreasonable or reasonable, the test is presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest.

In Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373, Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking of the Standard Oil and American Tobacco cases, said (p. 376):

> "Those cases may be taken to have established that only such contracts and combinations are within the act as, by reason of intent or the inherent nature of the contemplated acts, prejudice the public interests by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade."[52]

(B) THIS WAS THE PROPER TEST UNDER THE CLAYTON ACT.

Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act makes it unlawful for any person to make a contract for the sale of goods "on the condition, agreement, or understanding" that the purchaser "shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competi-

[52] This statement of this rule has been cited with approval in: Thomsen v. Cayser, 243 U. S. 66, 85 (1917); Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 360 (1933); and Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553, 597 (1936).

tor" where the effect of such contract may be "to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

As already pointed out, presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest is the test which will be applied under the Sherman Act in determining whether or not there has been an unreasonable restraint.

The same thing is true under the Clayton Act. The same test—presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest—must be applied under sec. 3 of that Act in determining whether the effect of the contracts attacked may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly.

Thus, in International Shoe Co. v. Comm'n., 280 U. S. 291, dealing with sec. 7 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 731; 15 U. S. C. sec. 18), which uses the same language found in sec. 3, i. e. forbids certain stock acquisitions where the effect "may be to substantially lessen competition . . . or tend to create a monopoly of any line of commerce," this Court said (p. 298):

> "In Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 282 Fed. 81, 87,[53] the Court of Appeals for the Third

---

[53] In Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 282 Fed. 81 (C. C. A. 3, 1922, affirmed 261 U. S. 403), it was said (p. 87): "Therefore in determining whether given acts amount to unfair methods of competition within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, or substantially lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly within the meaning of the Clayton Act, the only standard of legality with which we are acquainted is the standard established by the Sherman Act in the words 'restraint of trade or commerce' and 'monopolize, or attempt to monopolize,' and by the courts in construing the Sherman Act, with reference to acts which operate to the prejudice of the public interest by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the due course of trade, and 'restrict the common liberty to engage therein.'"

Circuit applied the test to the Clayton Act which had theretofore been held applicable to the Sherman Act, namely, that the standard of legality was the absence or presence of prejudice to the public interest by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the due course of trade. In Federal Trade Comm'n. v. Sinclair Co., 261 U. S. 463, 476, referring to the Clayton Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act, this Court said:

"'The great purpose of both statutes was to advance the public interest by securing fair opportunity for the play of the contending forces ordinarily engendered by an honest desire for gain.'

"Mere acquisition by one corporation of the stock of a competitor, even though it result in some lessening of competition, is not forbidden; the act deals only with such acquisitions as probably will result in lessening competition to a substantial degree, Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U. S. 346, 357; that is to say, to such a degree as will injuriously affect the public."

Presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest must be the test—otherwise a multitude of contracts must be condemned. In a sense every contract to sell lessens competition, and in many cases such contract lessens a great deal of competition. This is true, because the making of any contract to sell removes the articles contracted to be sold from competition. The contract buyer will not, after such contract is concluded, buy such articles from anyone but the contract seller. Competition with respect to such articles is at an end. Implicit in the contract to purchase is an "understanding" that the buyer under such contract will not deal with a competitor of the seller for that particular quantity of goods. Thus this Court has said that "every agreement concerning trade . . . restrains." (Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 238; repeated in Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 361); that "every exclusive arrangement in the business or commercial field may produce a restraint of trade" (concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas in Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, 23).[54] For example, suppose that manufacturers A and B are competing with one another for the patronage of C, a prospective buyer of their products. A succeeds in inducing C to contract to purchase from A a substantial quantity of A's products which C thinks he will need over a certain period or for a certain purpose. The conclusion of this contract eliminates B's chances for the time being of selling his products to C. This is true, whether A's contract calls for the supplying of C's "requirements" or for the supplying of a definite quantity. The "understanding" between A and C as a result of A's contract is [54] As pointedly expressed by Circuit Judge Sanborn in Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co., 125 Fed. 454, 462 (C. C. A. 8, 1903): "An attempt by each competitor to monopolize a part of interstate commerce is the very root of all competition therein. Eradicate it, and competition necessarily ceases—dies. Every person engaged in interstate commerce necessarily attempts to draw to himself, and to exclude others from, a part of that trade; and, if he may not do this, he may not compete with his rivals, all other persons and corporations must cease to secure for themselves any part of the commerce among the states, and some single corporation or person must be permitted to receive and control it all in one huge monopoly. The purpose of the act of July 2, 1890, was, however, to prevent the stifling of competition, not to destroy it or to foster monopoly, and any construction of any of its provisions which would give it such an effect is unreasonable and inconsistent with the object and spirit of the law."

---

To the same effect, see United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 47 F. 2d 288, 297 (Mo. 1931).

certainly that C will purchase from A, and not from B, the competitor, the products called for by such contract. During the life of A's contract, B's "competition" for this business is no longer a factor. During that period B is "shut-away" from that part of his potential market represented by A's business with C.

But every contract to buy and sell goods in commerce, even though such contract involves a very large quantity, i. e., is "substantial" in the quantitative sense, cannot be a violation of sec. 3. "Substantially lessen competition" cannot be given a mere quantitative meaning. It cannot be determined (as the District Court assumed to determine it) solely from a consideration of the number of Standard's contracts and the dollar volume of products handled thereunder. Something more—injury to the public interest—must be shown before the contract can be condemned as coming within the words "substantially lessen competition." These words require the application of a "rule of reason" analogous to the rule under sec. 1 of the Sherman Act. "The mere fact that the parties to an agreement eliminate competition between themselves is not enough to condemn it." (Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 360.) As said by Circuit Judge Kimbrough Stone, speaking for a three-judge court: "It is only when this lessening [of competition] is with an unlawful purpose or by unlawful means, or when it proceeds to the point where it is or is threatening to become a menace to the public, that it is declared unlawful . . . The point of danger is reached when monopoly is threat- ened.". (United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 47 F. 2d 288, 297.)

Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act, referring to "competition" uses the words "substantially lessen.". What is a substantial lessening of competition in the light of the purposes which the Act sought to accomplish? As already pointed out, competition in a sense is lessened when A, competing with B for the patronage of C, succeeds in concluding a contract with C for a future supply of A's products, and if such contract embraces large quantities then, in a quantitative sense, there is a "substantial" lessening of competition. But this could not have been the sense contemplated by Congress, for if so, a multitude of contracts in every branch of commerce and industry must be condemned. The rule of reason to be applied here is the rule announced in the International Shoe Co. case, supra, viz., injury to the public interest. Tested by this rule, the lessening of competition condemned must be—not a lessening of competition arising merely from success in contracting for the future disposal of a supply of goods, but a lessening of competition in the sense that competitors are eliminated by means which are unfair and thus work an injury to the public interest.[55]

[55] Federal Trade Comm'n. v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37 (1948) arose under sec. 2 of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. That section forbids price discriminations where their effect "may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly . . . or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them . . ." The first part of this is like sec. 3 of

This "rule of reason" in the interpretation of sec. 3 was applied in B. S. Pearsall Butter Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 292 Fed. 720 (C. C. A. 7).[56] There a complaint against petitioner before the Commission charged a violation of sec. 3 of the Clayton Act. Petitioner was a manufacturer of margarine products. Such products were also manufactured by other companies. Petitioner's contracts provided that dealers handling petitioner's products should handle its products exclusively in a given territory during the life of such contracts. About twenty other manufacturers of margarine products used a contract like that of petitioner, by which the dealer agreed to wholesale the manufacturer's brands of margarine exclusively in a the Clayton Act with which we are here concerned. The italicized part has no counterpart in sec. 3. In this Morton Salt case it was unnecessary for the Court to determine the meaning of "substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." The case was controlled by the italicized language. Thus, the Court remarked in a footnote at p. 47 of the opinion: "The statute outlaws any discrimination the effect of which 'may be substantially to lessen competition . . . or to injure . . . competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them . . .'" and in its opinion the Court said (p. 46): "Here the Commission found what would appear to be obvious, that the competitive opportunities of certain merchants were injured when they had to pay respondent substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay. . . . (p. 47) . . . 'That respondent's quantity discounts did result in price differentials between competing purchasers sufficient in amount to influence their resale prices of salt was shown by evidence.'" So the ruling in this case was against Morton because the discriminations injured competition between merchants some of whom received the benefit of such discriminations.

[56] This case has been cited with approval in Lipson v. Socony-Vacuum Corp., 76 F. 2d 213, 218 (C. C. A. 1, 1935), and Boro-Hall Corp. v. General Motors Corp., 130 F. 2d 196, 197 (C. C. A. 2, 1942; cert. den. 317 U. S. 695).

given territory, and most of the rest of the manufacturers had some kind of understanding for exclusive representation with the various jobbers handling their products. This case on its facts closely resembles our case. The Circuit Court held that there was no violation of the Act.[57]

[57] The Circuit Court said (pp. 722, 723):

"There does not appear to be anything distinctive about its product—nothing which could not readily be supplied by many other makers of this apparently standardized product. Petitioner does not occupy 'a dominant position' in that line of commerce, as was the case in United Shoe Mach. Co. v. United States, 258 U. S. 451, 42 Sup. Ct. 363, 66 L. Ed. 708. And it cannot be here said, as in the last-named case, that to its customer its particular product may be absolutely essential to the prosecution and success of his business.

"It is interesting here to note that it was only five years previous that petitioner entered into this doubtless then well standardized business, in competition with many others, most of whom have arrangements with their jobbers more or less similar, and that in the face of this competition, in such brief time built up a business of about 4,000,000 pounds for its last year. From this it may well appear that the similar practice by others in the same class did not result in stifling of competition and monopolizing the trade to the substantial or serious detriment of this recent entrant therein. Nothing here appears to indicate that the ultimate distributor of the product, the retailer, is in any way bound or restricted. He is generally familiar with the market, and with the ways and means of transportation of commodities, and if he desires in his business to handle the product of other makers he is at liberty to procure it—from the maker himself or from those who handle it.

"Most of the witnesses unite in saying that in the handling of this product there is advantage to manufacturer, jobber, retailer, and the public in having a particular brand handled exclusively by one jobber in a given locality wherein he handles no other similar product, and while one or two did say, on being examined as to the result of such a contract, that it might restrict competition, it is evident that they meant no more than that the employment of such contracts might in some circumstances so result. Under the particular facts which this record discloses, it is our view that the contract in question, as employed by this petitioner, does not fall under the condemnation of section 3 of the Clayton Act."

(2) This Was Not a Case Which Could Properly Be Decided Solely by Resort to an "Appreciable Segment" of Commerce Theory.

The District Court decided this case solely upon an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory. It said:

> "Substantiality of restraint or tendency to create monopoly is established by (a) the market foreclosed, —here represented by the controlled units,—and (b) the volume of controlled business, totaling here in value $68,000,000.00. [R. 126.]
>
> * * * * * * * *
> ". . . as I read the latest cases of the Supreme Court, I am compelled to find the practices here involved to be violative of both statutes. For they affect injuriously a sizeable part of interstate commerce, or,—to use the current phrase—'an appreciable segment' of interstate commerce." [R. 130.]

To support this "appreciable segment" of commerce theory, United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, was relied upon. [R. 119, 120.] There it was said (pp. 225, 226) that the Act "outlaws unreasonable restraints on interstate commerce, regardless of the amount of the commerce affected. . . . Hence it is enough if some appreciable part of interstate commerce is the subject of a monopoly, a restraint or a conspiracy. . . . Its [CCM's] relative position in the field of cab production has no necessary relation to the ability of the appellees to conspire to monopolize or restrain . . . an appreciable segment of interstate cab sales."

But this does not say that "unreasonableness" is established solely by finding that an appreciable or even a sizeable part of commerce is affected. The "unreasonableness" of the restraint must first be determined. This being determined, the case is brought within the power to regulate interstate commerce and hence within the Act by a finding that an "appreciable segment" of interstate commerce is affected by such unreasonable restraint.

The District Court in our case erred in making the fact that an "appreciable segment" of commerce was affected, the sole test of reasonableness.[58]

If it be true, as this Court has said, that "every agreement concerning trade . . . restrains" (Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 238; repeated in Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 351),[59] then the rule followed by the District Court would make every sales contract illegal under the Act, provided such contract affected an "appreciable segment" of commerce. The repercussions of such a rule would be infinite.

The error of the District Court is demonstrated by the opinion of this Court in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495. There it was pointed out that

---

[58]Error is specifically assigned. [R. 1867.]

[59]See also the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas in Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1 (1945), where it was said (p. 23):

"Every exclusive arrangement in the business or commercial field may produce a restraint of trade. A manufacturer who has only one retail outlet for his product may be said to restrain trade in the sense that other retailers are prevented from dealing in the commodity. . . . But Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, construed the Sherman Act to include not every restraint but only those which were unreasonable."

if the restraint is "illegal per se" or there is a "specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint," this is enough to stamp the restraint as unreasonable, in which case the Act is violated if an "appreciable segment" of commerce is affected. There it was pointed out that in the Yellow Cab case (since such case went up following the granting of a motion to dismiss) the Court accepted as true the complaint's allegation that defendants had combined and conspired to restrain with the intent and purpose of monopolizing; thus in the Yellow Cab case there was clearly an unreasonable restraint, and all that was necessary to bring the case within the Act was to show that an "appreciable segment" of commerce was affected. This Court said (p. 521):

> "We do not construe our holding in the Yellow Cab case to make illegal the acquisition by United States Steel of this outlet for its rolled steel without consideration of its effect on the opportunities of other competitor producers to market their rolled steel.
>

(p. 522):

> "In the complaint [in the Yellow Cab case] the government charged that the defendants had combined and conspired to effect the restraints in question with the intent and purpose of monopolizing the cab business in certain cities, and on motion to dismiss that allegation was accepted as true. Where a complaint charges such an unreasonable restraint as the facts of the Yellow Cab case show, the amount of interstate trade affected is immaterial in determining whether a violation of the Sherman Act has been charged. A restraint may be unreasonable either because a restraint otherwise reasonable is accompanied with a specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint or because it falls within the class of restraints that are illegal per se. For example, where a complaint charges that the defendants have engaged in price fixing,[60] or have concertedly refused to deal with non-members of an association,[61] or have licensed a patented device on condition that unpatented materials be employed in conjunction with the patented device,[62] then the amount of commerce involved is immaterial because such restraints are illegal per se. Nothing in the Yellow Cab case supports the theory that all exclusive dealing arrangements are illegal per se.

(p. 524):

"Exclusive dealings for rolled steel between Consolidated and United States Steel, brought about by vertical integration or otherwise, are not illegal, at any rate until the effect of such control is to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product.

[62]Citing International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392.

"In United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131, we were presented with a situation in which the government charged that vertical integration was illegal under the Sherman Act. We held that control by the major producer-distributors over nearly three-quarters of the first-run theaters in cities with population over 100,000 was not of itself illegal, and we remanded the case to the district court for further findings. In outlining the factors which we considered to be significant in determining the legality of vertical integration, we emphasized the importance of characterizing the nature of the market to be served, and the leverage on the market which the particular vertical integration creates or makes possible. A second test which we considered important in the Paramount case was the purpose or intent with which the combination was conceived. When a combination through its actual operation results in an unreasonable restraint, intent or purpose may be inferred; even though no unreasonable restraint may be achieved, nevertheless a finding of specific intent to accomplish such an unreasonable restraint may render the actor liable under the Sherman Act."

Where there is neither a restraint "illegal per se" nor a "specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint," there must be proof that the restraint is unreasonable and such proof must amount to something more than a showing that an "appreciable" or even a sizeable segment of commerce is affected. Certainly in the Columbia Steel case an "appreciable" segment of commerce was affected. The Steel Company obtained for all time to come the exclusive patronage of a Pacific Coast company (p. 523) whose purchases amounted to over $5,000,000.00 annually (p. 537). Yet despite the fact that an "appreciable" segment of commerce was affected, the transaction was upheld because proof of unreasonableness was lacking. The same thing must be true in our case. As in the Columbia Steel case, so in our case, there was neither (a) a restraint "illegal per se," nor (b) a "specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint." Therefore the fact alone that an "appreciable" or even a sizeable segment of commerce was affected was not enough to spell illegality.

(A) IN OUR CASE THERE WAS NO RESTRAINT WHICH WAS "ILLEGAL PER SE."

In our case there was:

(a) No conspiracy or combination.

(b) No price fixing or price control or price discrimination or attempt at anything of that sort, as in United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150.

(c) No concerted refusal to deal with non-members of an association, or boycott, as in Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600; Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38; or Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 312 U. S. 457.

(d) No contract provision tying an obligation to purchase an unpatented article to the obligation to purchase a patented article as in International Salt Company v. United States, 332 U. S. 392.

(e) No monopoly or monopoly power, as in American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 328 U. S. 781; United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100; or Schine Theatres v. United States, 334 U. S. 110.

In our case the government was attacking a type of contract which has been in common use for generations, which serves a beneficial purpose, and has been held to be intrinsically legal and sanctioned by public policy.[63] Con-

A "requirements" contract involving raw product for one-third of the pink-tinted eyeglass lenses sold in the United States was upheld under the Sherman Act in United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 45 Fed. Supp. 387 (N. Y. 1942), and this holding was affirmed by an equally divided Court in 321 U. S. 707, 719. By this contract Soft-Lite, a national distributor of one-third of all pink-tinted lenses agreed with Bausch & Lomb, a manufacturer, to buy all its requirements of pink-tinted glass from Bausch & Lomb, and the latter agreed not to sell any of such glass to others.

Petroleum products contracts with retail gasoline dealers like those here involved have been held not to be in restraint of trade: Associated Oil Co. v. Myers, 217 Cal. 297, 18 P. 2d 668 (1933); Cantrell v. Knight (Mo. App.), 72 S. W. 196 (1934); Quincy Oil Co. v. Sylvester, 238 Mass. 95, 130 N. E. 217 (1921); *Cox, Inc. v. The widespread use of "requirements" contracts as a reasonable business practice is demonstrated by the numerous cases before the courts in which such contracts have been interpreted and enforced. Typical of such cases are the following: Fort Wayne Corrugated Paper Co. v. Anchor Hocking Glass Corp., 130 F. 2d 471 (C. C. A. 3, 1942) (5-year requirements of paper boxes); *United States v. ently uses "requirements" contracts.[64] They serve a beneficial purpose in assuring an adequate supply to meet future needs, where over the future such needs will be variable and unpredictable. This is peculiarly true of a retail gasoline dealer. He must have the present assurance of an adequate future supply. Yet he cannot predict with certainty what he will require over a future period, and he does not have storage space for a supply which will satisfy future needs for more than a few days.

During the trial the District Court stated that in its opinion the "requirements" contracts were not per se illegal; that their legality or illegality under the anti-trust laws could be ascertained only by examining their effect upon commerce. [R. 840, 846, 847.] There was no finding that the "requirements" contracts were "illegal per se," and this was not stated as one of the District Court's conclusions of law.

[64] See U. S. Standard Form No. 32 (Revised) and General Conditions, Revised October 7, 1946, Treasury Department Procurement Division. In these General Conditions the following is prescribed as one of the conditions of a regular supply contract:

"3. Scope of Contract. Supplies will be ordered from time to time in such quantities as may be needed. As it is impossible to determine the precise quantities of different kinds of articles and materials described in the Specifications and Proposals for Supplies that will be required during the contract term, each bidder whose bid is accepted will be obligated to deliver all supplies of the kind contracted for that may be ordered during the contract term. The statements as to money value of previously reported annual purchases are given for information only, and will not relieve the agencies and activities (as noted in the specifications) of the United States and District of Columbia Governments, for the use of which the contract is made, of the obligation to order from the contractor all articles or services covered by the contract that may, in the judgment of the ordering officers, be needed; and shall not relieve the contractor of his obligation to fill all such orders." (C. C. H. Government Contracts Reporter, Vol. 1, par. 18,321.)

If, as pointed out by this Court (United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 523, 524, 527; United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U. S. 131, 173, 174), exclusive dealing brought about through "vertical integration" is not illegal per se, the same thing must be true in our case where exclusive dealing is alleged to have been brought about by "requirements" contracts. Exclusive dealing brought about by "vertical integration" is permanent; exclusive dealing brought about through "requirements" contracts lasts only during the limited period that such contracts can be enforced by the supplier.

(B) IN OUR CASE THERE WAS NO "SPECIFIC INTENT TO ACCOMPLISH A FORBIDDEN RESTRAINT."

The only finding concerning "intent" is that the "intent, purpose and effect of the exclusive supply provisions" have been "to prevent the 'independent dealer' operating under said agreements from handling any 'petroleum products,' tires, tubes, batteries and miscellaneous accessories other than those supplied or sponsored by defendants"; that the agreements "are intended to and in practice do confine the independent dealers to defendants' petroleum products and automotive accessories . . . ." [R. 185.]

As long as a "requirements" contract is in force and the dealer faithfully performs the contract by buying his "requirements" from Standard, the dealer will not buy what he requires from a third party to supply the location referred to in the contract. Therefore, when this finding says that the purpose and intent of the exclusive supply provisions has been to prevent the dealers from handling the products of other suppliers, it merely declares an intent which is obvious from the language of the contracts.

But this is simply to declare an intent which would exist in the case of any contract for the sale of goods. Any such contract is intended to prevent the buyer from handling the products of other suppliers to the extent that his "requirements" are thus contracted for.

It is one thing to say (as this finding says) that Standard when it made these contracts intended to prevent the contracting dealers from buying their "requirements" from anyone but Standard. It would be quite a different thing to say (and this finding does not say) that Standard made these contracts with the intent or purpose of gaining control over a market or driving out or suppressing competition or doing any other act forbidden by the anti-trust laws.

If what a defendant does, without more, is the result condemned by the Act, then such defendant is deemed to have had a specific intent to violate the Act, for he is deemed to have intended the "necessary and direct consequence of what he did." (United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. at 108.) Here what Standard did was to make certain contracts. The only finding as to Standard's purpose or intent is that it intended these contracts to do what on their face they purport to do, i. e., obligate the dealer to buy his "requirements" for a given location from Standard. But the making of these contracts without more was not a result condemned by the Act. As said in the Columbia Steel case (334 U. S. at 524): "Exclusive dealings . . . brought about by vertical integration or otherwise, are not illegal, at any rate until the effect of such control is to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product." There is no finding and no evidence that the effect of what Standard did was to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product.

Beyond doubt U. S. Steel's intent in acquiring Consolidated Steel in the Columbia Steel case was to prevent U. S. Steel's competitors from thereafter selling their products to Consolidated and to confine Consolidated to the purchase of U. S. Steel's products. As said therein (334 U. S. 495, at 523): "A subsidiary will in all probability deal only with its parent for the goods the parent can furnish." Yet this intent of U. S. Steel was held not to be an intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint.

The "intent" required to spell illegality is referred to in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U. S. 131, in which, as in the Columbia Steel case, this Court pointed out that "vertical integration" was not "illegal per se." This Court said (pp. 173, 174):

> "Exploration of these phases of the cases would not be necessary if, as the Department of Justice argues, vertical integration of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures is illegal per se. But the majority of the Court does not take that view. In the opinion of the majority the legality of vertical integration under the Sherman Act turns on (1) the purpose or intent with which it was conceived, or (2) the power it creates and the attendant purpose or intent. First, it runs afoul of the Sherman Act if it was a calculated scheme to gain control over an appreciable segment of the market and to restrain or suppress competition, rather than an expansion to meet legitimate business needs. United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57; United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255, 269-270. Second, a vertically integrated enterprise, like other aggregations of business units (United States v. Aluminum > Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416), will constitute monopoly which, though unexercised, violates the Sherman Act provided a power to exclude competition is coupled with a purpose or intent to do so."

In our case there was neither finding nor evidence that Standard's practice of employing "requirements" contracts was conceived as a "calculated scheme to gain control" or "to restrain or suppress competition, rather than an expansion to meet legitimate business needs," or that there was any monopoly contemplated or achieved, or that there was any "power to exclude competition . . . coupled with a purpose or intent so to do." The evidence was all to the contrary.

The evidence shows that in the Western area the uniform practice, not only of dealers in Standard's products, but of all retail gasoline dealers, was to handle the gasoline of a single supplier. "Split-pump" stations (i. e. stations handling the gasoline of more than one supplier) represent only 1.6% of the total retail outlets in that area. [R. 1062, 1763-1777, 1064.] Compelling reasons for the growth of this practice of single-line handling were the dealers' own preference, the danger of substitution, and the added cost of serving "split-pump" accounts (see page 16, and footnote 17 herein).

This evidence showing the reasons for single-line handling was uncontradicted. These reasons disclose the intent which prompted the use of "requirements" contracts. They were legitimate business reasons. There was no evidence showing any other reason for the adoption of "requirements" contracts. Certainly there was no evidence showing that their use came about as a result of an intent to gain control of the market or to restrain or suppress competition. Nor was there any finding of fact to that effect.

(3) Applying the Test of Presence or Absence of Prejudice to the Public Interest, the District Court Should Have Considered and Weighed the Competitive and Economic Factors Which It Disregarded.

Consider first the uncontradicted evidence dealing with competitive and economic factors which was received but disregarded by the District Court.

This evidence was material on the issue of the "reasonableness" of the alleged restraint, and the issue whether the effect of the contracts was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly.

In a case of this character, where there is neither a restraint "illegal per se," nor an "intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint," a factual inquiry of broad scope is required—an inquiry in which the government has the burden of making "a definite factual showing of illegality."[65]

The breadth of this factual inquiry is emphasized in Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 238:

> But the legality of an agreement or regulation cannot be determined by so simple a test, as whether it restrains competition. Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains. To bind, to restrain, is of their very essence. The true test of legality is whether the restraint imposed is such as merely regulates and perhaps thereby promotes competition or whether it is such as may suppress or even destroy competition. To determine that question the court must ordinarily consider the facts peculiar to the business to which the restraint is applied; its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable. The history of the restraint, the evil believed to exist, the reason for adopting the particular remedy; the purpose or end sought to be attained, are all relevant facts."

[65] Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163, 179 (1931); Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 377 (1933).

This was followed in Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344 (1933), wherein it was said (p. 361):

"The question of the application of the statute is one of intent and effect, and is not to be determined by arbitrary assumptions. It is therefore necessary in this instance to consider the economic conditions peculiar to the coal industry, the practices which have obtained, the nature of defendant's plan of making sales, the reasons which led to its adoption, and the probable consequences of the carrying out of that plan in relation to market prices and other matters affecting the public interest in interstate commerce in bituminous coal."

The importance of this factual inquiry—as distinguished from a solution of the case solely upon an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory—is pointed out in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495. There, as already pointed out, this Court declared (p. 523) that "nothing in the Yellow Cab case supports the theory that all exclusive dealing arrangements are illegal per se," and (p. 524):

"The legality of the acquisition by United States Steel of a market outlet for its rolled steel through the purchase of the manufacturing facilities of Consolidated depends not merely upon the fact of that acquired control but also upon many other factors. Exclusive dealings for rolled steel between Consolidated and United States Steel, brought about by vertical integration or otherwise, are not illegal, at any rate until the effect of such control is to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product."

So in our case, legality of the "exclusive dealings" depends "not merely upon the fact of . . . acquired control, but also upon many other factors," which the District Court disregarded. "Exclusive dealings" brought about by the "requirements" contracts are "not illegal, at any rate until the effect of such control is to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product." No such unreasonable restriction was shown.

Concerning the factual inquiry which must be undertaken, this Court in the Columbia Steel case said (p. 527):

> "In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, we do not think the dollar volume is in itself of compelling significance; we look rather to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market."[66]

These were the very factors which in our case the District Court disregarded. The District Court in deciding our case should not have determined that illegality is established by the number of "controlled units" and the [66] This appears in that part of the opinion which discusses horizontal integration, but the Court stated on the same page that the same considerations apply also to vertical integration.

"volume of controlled business." [R. 126.] It should not have inspected Standard's operations in a vacuum. It should have considered and weighed the factors emphasized in the above quoted opinion. If these factors were material in the Columbia Steel case, surely they were material in our case. In the Columbia Steel case the alleged "control" arose from "vertical integration" and was permanent. In our case the alleged "control" arises from "requirements" contracts and lasts only during the limited period that such contracts can be enforced by the supplier.

The District Court's failure to consider and weigh these factors was error.[67]

Consider next the line of inquiry which the District Court excluded.

The evidence so excluded was material on the issue of the "reasonableness" of the alleged restraint and the issue whether the effect of the contracts was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly.

The evidence so excluded was offered by defendants to show the effect on competition and on the number of existing service stations of the elimination of the "requirements" clauses as well as the changes which would occur in the over-all competitive picture, the cost of distribution, and the effect on dealers and the public, if, as a result of such elimination, a "split-pump" system became general. [R. 1141-1144.] The District Court went further. It stated that it would not "allow any testimony regarding the effect of this arrangment [i.e. the "requirements" contracts] on prices" [R. 1138]: that the "fact that it [i.e. the practice employing these contracts] may result in economic benefit or its abandonment might result in economic loss is not material under the decisions of the Supreme Court . . . ." [R. 1144.] The District Court had stated previously that "any advantages . . . to the dealer and indirectly to the public from the arrangement . . . . is not a proper subject of inquiry, ..." [R. 1088.]

Certainly application of the prejudice to the public interest test required consideration of the evidence which the District Court excluded—evidence as to the "effect on competition of the elimination of the 'requirements' clauses"; evidence that what the government was seeking to accomplish would actually result in elimination of competition by an increase in company-operated service stations and the promotion of dealer-operated chains of service stations; evidence as to how the elimination of the "requirements" clauses would affect "the over-all competitive picture" and whether this would mean an increase or decrease in the number of existing service stations, or "give the more prominent suppliers a competitive advantage"; and evidence as to the economic aspects of the "split-pump" distribution system as compared with the prevailing single-supplier system, the cost of one as compared with the other, and the additional economic burden to be borne by the public if the former system supplanted the present system.

Of course the District Court's exclusion of this evidence was consistent with its view that the government was entitled to a decree solely upon a showing that an "appreciable segment" of commerce, was affected. But, as pointed out above, this case ought not to have been decided solely by resort to an "appreciable segment" of commerce theory.

The exclusion of this evidence was certainly not required by the decisions of this Court under the facts of our case. This was evidence which was peculiarly relevant and material to that broad factual inquiry necessary to determine the presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest from the practices complained of.

The exclusion of this evidence was error.[68]

The District Court was required to consider "the facts peculiar to the business . . . its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable." (Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 238.) It was required to consider "the economic conditions peculiar to the . . . industry . . . and the probable consequences of the carrying out of that plan in relation to market prices and other matters affecting the public interest . . ." (Appalachian Coals, Inc., v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 361.) Its duty required recognition of the fact that in "the cases considered by this Court since the Standard Oil case in 1911 . . . in general restraints upon competition have been condemned only when their purpose or effect was to raise or fix the market price . . . that it is said that the restraints, actual or intended, prohibited by the Sherman Act are only those which are so substantial as to affect market prices" (Apex Hosiery Co. v. Leader, 310 U. S. 469, 500); that "it is only when a restriction of production either inevitably affects prices, or is intended to do so, that it violates sec. 1 of the Act." (United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416, 424 (C. C. A. 2).)

[68]Error is specifically assigned. [R. 1872-1875.]

In Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163, the question presented under secs. 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act was the "effect" of certain contracts between large oil companies cross-licensing patents relating to "cracking" processes and fixing and agreeing (p. 168) upon a division of royalties from licensees under such patents. Holding (p. 176) that "no monopoly, or restriction of competition . . ." had been proved, Mr. Justice Brandeis speaking for the Court pointed out (pp. 175, 176, 177) that while defendants controlled 55% of the total cracking capacity (the remainder being distributed among 21 independents), "cracked" gasoline production was about 26% of the total gasoline production; "cracked" gasoline and straight run gasoline were sold interchangeably; and "defendants could not effectively control the supply or fix the price of cracked gasoline . . . unless they could control, through some means, the remainder of the total gasoline production from all sources. Proof of such control is lacking." The opinion states (p. 177) that "Evidence of the total gasoline production, by all methods, . . . is either missing or unsatisfactory in character. The record does not accurately show even the total amount of cracked gasoline produced, or the production of each of the licensees, or competing refiners. . . . And (p. 182) the court [below] entirely disregarded not only the fact that the manufacture of the cracked is only a part of the total gasoline production, but also the evidence showing active competition among the defendants themselves and with others."

Thus this Court emphasized the importance of economic and competitive factors which might indicate whether defendants could effectively control the supply or fix prices; pointed to the absence of proof which would resolve this question; and plainly indicated that the trial court had disregarded the over-all competitive picture. The same comment would be appropriate in our case.

To determine in our case whether there was injury to the public interest, the District Court should have considered and weighed the competitive and economic factors which is disregarded.

As trier of the facts the District Court applied an erroneous rule of law—the "appreciable segment" of commerce theory. Defendants below were entitled to have the facts considered and weighed on a correct rule of law —the "detriment to the public interest" theory. Unless the government can show that no conclusion from the facts (both evidence received and evidence excluded) could reasonably be drawn which on the correct theory would have warranted a judgment in favor of defendants, the judgment should be reversed. Indiana Farmer's Guide v. Prairie Farmer, 293 U. S. 268, 281 (1934) is directly in point.[69]

Here the government cannot show that no trier of fact applying a correct theory could reasonably have come to a conclusion favorable to Standard.

Even if we disregard the evidence which was excluded and take only the evidence in our record, the conclusion is inescapable that there was no unreasonable restraint. This conclusion is developed in the argument which follows.

---

[69] There the lower court applied an erroneous rule of law to the facts. The parties who obtained the judgment below failed to show that the judgment was right despite the "untenable grounds" upon which it was predicated. This Court accordingly reversed the judgment.

III.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN CONCLUDING UPON THE EVIDENCE RECEIVED THAT THERE WAS A VIOLATION OF EITHER THE SHERMAN ACT OR THE CLAYTON ACT.

(1) The "Requirements" Contracts Are Not Within the Purview of the Clayton Act.

Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act makes it unlawful for any person to make a contract for the sale of goods "on the condition, agreement, or understanding" that the purchaser "shall not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor" where the effect of such contract may be "to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

The "requirements" contracts do not fall within this language. Under each of them the dealer agrees to purchase from Standard his "requirements" for resale at a specified service station. He does not agree to buy from Standard all his "requirements" wherever they may be needed. Under this type of contract the dealer may install a competitive gasoline pump next door, or across the street, or six blocks away. He does not purchase on the "condition, agreement, or understanding" that he will "not use or deal in the goods . . . of a competitor."

Federal Trade Comm. v. Sinclair Co., 261 U. S. 463 (1923), is in point. There it was held lawful under sec. 3 of the Clayton Act for a service station dealer to agree to buy exclusively from Sinclair all the gasoline he required for resale from a specified pump. If a contract for exclusive dealing with respect to gasoline to be resold from a specified pump is not within the statute, a contract for exclusive dealing with respect to gasoline to be resold from a specified service station should not be held to be within the statute.

It is no reply to this argument to urge that a dealer may presently have only one service station to which his contract with Standard is made applicable, and that he would have to acquire another location in order to handle the products of one of Standard's competitors. Evidence is lacking that each dealer had only one location. Also, in the Sinclair case the dealer would have had to procure and install a new pump in order to handle the products of one of Sinclair's competitors.

Moreover, it is important to observe that in the Sinclair case, the restriction upon the station operator's dealing with a competitor was, as a practical matter, quite as far reaching as in our case, for in the Sinclair case the Commission found that only a small proportion of Sinclair's lessees required or used more than one pump.[70] Thus in the Sinclair case the practical effect of the agreement was to confine a large proportion of the dealers to the purchase of only Sinclair gasoline at the station of each such

[70]Thus in the Sinclair case the Commission found (see 261 U. S. at 471):

"4. That the contracts mentioned in the preceding paragraph also provide that such equipments shall be used by the lessee only for the purpose of holding and storing the respondent's petroleum products; that a small proportion of such lessees handle similar products of respondent's competitors; and that only a small proportion of such lessees as handle similar products of respondent's competitors require or use more than a single pump outfit in the conduct of their said business; that the practice of leasing such devices requires a large capital investment; that many competitors of respondent do not possess sufficient capital and are not able to purchase and lease devices as respondent does as aforesaid, partly by reason of which such competitors have lost numerous customers to respondent; that the effect of the practice of leasing by contract dealer. In our case the "requirements" contracts have no wider effect.

The rule of the Sinclair case must be this: When sec. 3 of the Clayton Act forbids a condition, agreement or understanding that the purchaser "shall not . . . deal in the goods . . . of a competitor," the thing forbidden is some condition, agreement or understanding that the purchaser will not deal in a competitor's goods anywhere or at all—that conditions, agreements, or understandings falling short of this and forbidding a use or dealing in a competitor's goods at a specified gasoline station or forbidding any other limited use or dealing are not prohibited.

If this is not the correct rule and a restriction upon even a limited use or dealing is prohibited, the scope of sec. 3 is extended far beyond anything which could have been intended by Congress—extended to every contract for the sale of goods in interstate commerce, provided such contract substantially lessens competition or tends to create monopoly.

In the foregoing we have been discussing simply what contracts fall within the language of the first part of such equipments, where such contracts contain the said provision restricting the use of the same to the storage and handling of respondent's products as aforesaid, may be to substantially lessen competition and tend to create for the respondent a monopoly in the business of selling petroleum products."

And this Court took cognizance of this finding, for we find in the opinion the following (see 261 U. S. at 473):

"But counsel for the Commission insist that inasmuch as lessees generally—except garage men in the larger places—will not encumber themselves with more than one equipment, the practical effect of the restrictive covenant is to confine most dealers to the products of their lessors; and we are asked to hold that, read in the light of these facts, the contract falls within the condemnation of the statute."

sec. 3, i. e., what is meant by the reference therein to a condition, agreement, or understanding that the purchaser "shall not . . . deal in the goods . . . of a competitor." We believe that the foregoing demonstrates the error of the District Court in concluding that Standard's "requirements" contracts contained any such condition, agreement, or understanding. Such contracts were for supply at a limited location.[71]

The District Court also erred in concluding that the "requirements" contracts were vulnerable to the further requirement of sec. 3 of the Clayton Act, i. e., erred in concluding that the contracts have the effect of substantially lessening competition or tending to create a monopoly. This error is pointed out in the argument which follows.

(2) The "Requirements" Contracts Have Been in Use for so Long a Period That Their Effect Can Be Evaluated Without Speculating as to Their "Probable" or "Possible" Future Effect.

As pointed out in the opening Statement, "requirements" clauses have been in use by Standard in the Western area since about 1938.[72] Practical experience has demonstrated their "effect." Granted that the Clayton Act seeks to reach "agreements embraced within its sphere in their incipiency;"[73] no effort was made to attack these contracts in their incipiency. The attack upon them in this case

---

[71]Error is specifically assigned. [R. 1868.]

[72]Not only has Standard used these "requirements" clauses for many years, but Standard's principal competitors have for many years engaged in similar practices. See page 23 and footnote 23 herein.

[73]Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U. S. 346, 356 (1922).

was the first attack, and it came after they had been in use for about nine years.

Hence speculation as to the "probable" or "possible"[74] future effect of the clauses is unnecessary. Their "effect" has been amply demonstrated by long continued use.

The District Court seems to have adopted this view of the matter: In its supplemental opinion it said: "In the present case, as appears from the original opinion, we are dealing not with probabilities but with actualities." [R. 165.]

---

[74]Under sec. 3 of the Clayton Act it has been held that Congress by declaring illegal agreements the effect of which "may be" to substantially lessen competition, did not intend "to prohibit the mere possibility of the consequences described"; that it "was intended to prevent such agreements as would under the circumstances disclosed probably lessen competition, or create an actual tendency to monopoly." Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U. S. 346, 356 (1922).

The same rule of "probability" was applied in Federal Trade Comm. v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463, 475 (1923).

The same rule of "probability" was stated in International Shoe Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291, 298 (1930) dealing with identical language in sec. 7 of the Clayton Act.

The opinion in Corn Products Co. v. Comm'n, 324 U. S. 726 (1945), dealing with identical language in sec. 2(a) of the Clayton Act, contains a statement (p. 738) approving the rule of "probability" and quoting from the Standard Fashion case; also later language (p. 742) where the term "possibility" is employed.

The latter language is quoted in the majority opinion in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 46 (1948), which likewise dealt with sec. 2(a) of the Clayton Act, but with a footnote stating that such language is to be read in the light of the earlier statement in the Corn Products case which announced the rule of "probability." Mr. Justice Jackson and Mr. Justice Frankfurter in their separate opinion in the Morton Salt case are of the view that the majority opinion departs from the rule of "probability" and adopts a rule of "possibility," and on this feature of the case disagree with the majority opinion.

(3) The "Requirements" Contracts Are Not an Unreasonable Restraint and Have Not Had the Effect of Substantially Lessening Competition or Tending to Create Monopoly.

Even without reference to the evidence which was excluded, and considering solely the record as it stands, there is no support whatever for the District Court's conclusion that the "requirements" contracts were an unreasonable restraint, or its conclusion that they substantially lessened competition and tended to create monopoly.[75]

Standard cannot and does not force contracts on dealers. Standard does not sell an article which it monopolizes by patent or otherwise. It does not sell an article which the dealer must buy from Standard or go without. Thus, the dealer is free to select his supplier—either Standard or one of its numerous competitors. This is true with respect to the several products involved.

The dealer is free to buy his gasoline from Standard or from any one of a large number of other gasoline suppliers. [R. 1074, 1316, 212.] There are 80 such suppliers in the Western area [R. 1675, 1676, 939] where Standard sells to dealers 6.7% of the taxable gasoline gallonage. [R. 1656, 939.] To get Standard's gasoline the dealer does not have to make any contract whatever with Standard. He can buy gasoline from Standard on open account[76] without a contract for any period he chooses, and then switch to some other supplier. [R. 241, 242, 265.] True, Standard will not continue to sell him gasoline if he buys gasoline from another supplier for the same station [R. 242, 269, 1127], but this is substantially the universal practice in the Western area, where out of 36,500 outlets only 1.6% are "split-pump" outlets. [R. 1062, 1763-1777, 1064.] If the dealer signs one of Standard's Dealer Agreements, he can cancel such agreement at the end of the first 6 months or at the end of any 6 months period thereafter [R. 1302, 211] and switch his patronage to another supplier.

The dealer is free to buy his lubricating oil from Standard or from any one of a large number of suppliers. [R. 1074, 1075.] There are at least 69 such suppliers in the Western area [R. 1864, 1865, 1148] where Standard sells to dealers only 5% of the lubricating oil. [R. 1660, 939.] To get Standard's lubricating oil the dealer does not have to make any contract whatever with Standard. He can buy lubricating oil from Standard without a contract for such period as he chooses, and then switch to some other supplier. [R. 1074, 1075.] Standard will sell him lubricating oil without a contract of any kind even though his station handles the gasoline, or the tires, tubes or batteries furnished by another supplier. [R. 1074, 1075.] And, as already noted, if the dealer elects to sign one of Standard's Dealer Agreements, he can cancel such agreement at the end of any 6 months period. [R. 1302, 211.]

The dealer is free to buy his tires, tubes or batteries from Standard or from any one of a large number of suppliers. There are many[77] such suppliers in the Western area, where Standard sells to dealers only 2% of the tires and 1.8% of the batteries. [R. 1664, 1668, 939.] If he wants to handle Standard's tires, tubes and batteries the dealer will have to execute one of Standard's Dealer Agreements TBA, which also requires him to purchase at the particular location Standard's petroleum products. [R. 1308, 211.] But this is not prohibited by the Act in the absence of "monopoly or combination." (Federal Trade Comm. v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421.)[78] Moreover, if the dealer signs a Dealer Agreement TBA, he can cancel such agreement at the end of 6 months or at the end of any 6 months period thereafter [R. 1310, 211] and switch his patronage to another supplier.[79] If the dealer wants to handle Standard's gasoline or lubricating oil or both of these products, but wants to handle the tires, tubes or batteries of some other supplier, he is perfectly free to do so, and in such case, as already noted, he can purchase Standard's gasoline and lubricating oil, or either one of them, with or without a contract. [R. 1075.]

[78] In that case, Gratz, engaged in the practice of selling steel ties and jute bagging for baling cotton, adopted the practice of refusing to sell ties unless the prospective purchaser thereof would also buy from Gratz the bagging to be used with the number of ties purchased. This practice was upheld, the Court declaring (p. 428):

"All question of monopoly or combination being out of the way, a private merchant, acting with entire good faith, may properly refuse to sell except in conjunction, such closely associated articles as ties and bagging. If real competition is to continue, the right of the individual to exercise reasonable discretion in respect of his own business methods must be preserved."

[79] The only agreement form (excluding sublcases) used by Standard which does not contain this 6 months termination clause is the Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreement. [R. 1305, 211.] The obvious reason for this is that under the latter agreement Standard obligates itself to undertake the cost of installing equipment—a cost which it would not assume without some assurance of continued relations for a definite period. Of the "requirements" contracts outstanding, the Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreements represent approximately 19%. [R. 1313, 212.]

(A) THERE WAS NO UNREASONABLE RESTRAINT.

The only "restraint" charged was restraint of that segment of the market represented by the dealers with whom Standard had "requirements" contracts.[80]

Monopoly of petroleum products, tires, batteries and accessories generally was not charged—merely monopoly of the business of the outlets with which Standard had "requirements" contracts.

The "requirements" contracts have been in use for about nine years. The facts demonstrate that their "effect" has not been "to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product."[81]

The absence of unreasonable restraint is shown by a comparison of our case and United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495.

[80] Thus during the trial Mr. Dixon, who was in charge of the government's case, said: "I felt from some remarks Your Honor had made that perhaps I had been remiss in presenting the position of the Government on the competition that we claim had been restricted. . . . . It is the competition for this market that Standard has with these dealers. That is the only competition that we claim is restricted, in any sense of the term, Your Honor." [R. 850, 851.]

Mr. Dixon also stated: ". . . we are not charging Standard here of having a monopoly of all of the petroleum business or all of the automotive accessory business in the seven western states at all. But we do contend . . . that as to the outlets subject to these contracts that they do have such a monopoly. . . ." [R. 1164.]

* * * * * * *

"We are, however, not charging Standard here with having a monopoly of all of the business or a monopoly of the petroleum business or of the automotive accessory business, but we do charge that they have monopolized by these contracts an appreciable segment of that business in this area." [R. 1186.]

[81] United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 524 (1948).

In our case Standard's gasoline sales through retail-dealer outlets were 6.7% of the taxable gasoline gallonage [R. 1656, 939];[82] its dealer sales of lubricating oil were 5% of the total [R. 1660, 939], of tires 2% of the total [R. 1664, 939], and of batteries 1.8% of the total [R. 1668, 939.]

In the Steel case U. S. Steel was the country's largest producer of rolled steel products producing during 1937 to 1941 something like 33⅓% of the country's rolled steel products with average annual sales of $1,000,000,000 (p. 500).

In our case through "requirements" contracts Standard obtained during the life of such contracts only the exclusive patronage of 5197 scattered dealers at specified locations. [R. 1515, 212.] Their annual purchases from Standard aggregated $65,846,412. [R. 180.]

In the Steel case, through purchase of Consolidated Steel ("vertical integration") U. S. Steel obtained for all time to come the exclusive patronage of Consolidated (p. 523). The latter's purchases of rolled steel products in 10 years had exceeded 2,000,000 tons (p. 508), and amounted to over $5,000,000.00 annually (p. 537); and were 3%[83] of the demand for such products in the eleven-state area found to be the competitive area.

---

[82]In the populous Los Angeles basin and San Francisco bay areas Standard's percentages were 2.45% and 5.3% respectively. [R. 1649, 1652, 910.]

[83]The District Court misread the opinion of this Court in the Columbia Steel case. Commenting on the latter opinion the District Court in its Supplemental Opinion said [R. 162]: "In effect, the court rules that Consolidated's acquisition would not have any great effect on the market, in view of the fact that its requirements

In our case the government's contention was that it was illegal restraint to exclude other suppliers from the business of supplying the 5197 dealers at specified locations.

In the Steel case the government's contention was that there was "illegal restraint . . . because all manufacturers except United States Steel will be excluded from the business of supplying Consolidated's requirements of rolled steel products" (p. 507).

The decision in our case should have been in accord with the decision in the Steel case, i. e., that there was no unreasonable restraint.

Clearly in our case the basic facts, tested by a comparison with the facts in the Steel case, show that the "effect" of the "exclusive dealings . . . brought about by" the contracts in question was not "to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product."[84] are 'an insignificant fraction of the total market,—less than ½ of 1%.'" In this passage thus quoted from this Court's opinion in the Columbia Steel case this Court was commenting upon the appellees' contention in the Columbia Steel case predicated upon a nation-wide market (334 U. S. 495, at 508)—a contention this Court did not adopt. Thus this Court said (334 U. S. 495, at 527): "We accept as the relevant competitive market the total demand for rolled steel products in the seven-state area; over the past ten years Consolidated has accounted for only 3% of that demand, and if expectations as to the development of the western steel industry are realized, Consolidated's proportion may be expected to be lower than that figure in the future."

[84] United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 524 (1948).

(B) THERE WAS NO SUBSTANTIAL LESSENING OF COMPETITION.

Assuming, for the purpose of argument only, that the "requirements" contracts were within the purview of the Clayton Act, the government had the burden of making "a definite factual showing of illegality,"[85] i. e., of showing that the effect of the contracts was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly. If they actually had such effect, one would suppose that it would have been disclosed in nine years, and that the government's proof would show (a) that the number of Standard's competitors had diminished, or (b) that the size and power of its competitors had grown less, or (c) that its competitors had a smaller and smaller proportion of the available customers or volume of business.

There was no such proof. Nor was there any proof that Standard had a monopoly or a tendency toward monopoly or a purpose or intent to monopolize or exert monopoly power. Such evidence as the record contains—and it is uncontradicted—was all to the contrary. It repels any conclusion that there was any substantial lessening of competition or tendency to create monopoly.

The competitive aspects of the picture presented by the proof show no lessening of competition. After about nine years during which the "requirements" contracts have been in use [R. 171], Standard has at least 79 other gasoline competitors [R. 1675, 1676, 939], at least 68 other lubricating oil competitors [R. 1864, 1865, 1148], and many[86] tire and battery competitors, and sells in the Western area through dealer outlets 6.7% of the taxable gasoline gallonage [R. 1656, 939], 5% of the lubricating oil [R. 1660, 939], 2% of the tires [R. 1664, 939], and 1.8% of the batteries [R. 1668, 939]. In the most populous areas it was in this competitive position: In the Los Angeles basin area its dealer stations were 3.68% of the total service stations and its gasoline sales were 2.43% of the total gasoline gallonage distributed through all stations, its smaller competitors (exclusive of its six major competitors) having 47.15% of the service stations and supplying 43.60% of the gasoline gallonage. [R. 1649, 910.] In the San Francisco bay area its dealer stations were 6.98% of the total service stations and its gasoline sales were 5.52% of the total gasoline gallonage distributed through all stations, its smaller competitors (exclusive of its six major competitors) having 28.49% of the service stations and supplying 23.94% of the gasoline gallonage. [R. 1652, 910.] Between 1936 and 1946 in the Western area Standard's dealer sales of gasoline increased 58% [R. 1656, 939], but sales of gasoline in the industry in such area increased 64% [R. 1656, 939]; Standard's dealer sales of lubricating oil increased 62% [R. 1660, 939] but sales of lubricating oil in the industry in such area increased 104%. [R. 1660, 939.] A tabulation set out in the opening Statement (page 30 herein) shows from year to year, during the period the "requirements" contracts have been in use,

Standard's percentage of the "industry" total sales of gasoline, lubricating oil, tires and batteries. It shows that Standard's dealer sales of gasoline, tires and batteries have not increased proportionately to total sales, and that its dealer sales of lubricating oil have decreased proportionately to total sales over such period.[87]

There was no testimony of any competitor supplier who was forced out of business or whose business advancement suffered as a result of Standard's contracts.[88] There was evidence to the contrary. For example, in the lubricating oil field Pennzoil increased its outlets in 30 years from 2,000 to somewhere between 8,000 and 12,000 [R. 375, 376]; Macmillan sold to 9,000 or 10,000 accounts in 1947 [R. 324]; and Quaker State sold to 4,000 or 5,000 accounts in 15 California counties. [R. 464.]

[87]In Pick Mfg. Co. v. General Motors Corp., 80 F. 2d 641 (C. C. A. 7, 1935; affirmed in 299 U. S. 3), upholding under sec. 3 of the Clayton Act a form of dealer's contract obligating the dealer to use in the repair of Chevrolet cars only parts manufactured or authorized by Chevrolet, the Court said (p. 644):

"Furthermore, the record shows that competition in the sale of replacement parts for automobiles, instead of growing less has substantially increased through the period during which the provisions complained of have been in force and, while it may be that competition would have increased more rapidly in the absence of such provisions, the trial court rightfully concluded that such was not the 'substantial lessening of competition' which the Clayton Act was designed to prevent."

[88]The government called 34 witnesses who were lubricating oil, tire, battery and automobile accessory salesmen or the executives of companies handling one or more of these products. Many of them testified to the difficulty or impossibility of selling their products to service station or garage dealers who were under contract with Standard. It also called as witnesses 13 service station dealers who currently handled or had in the past handled Standard's products under contract. Some of these gave testimony indicating that Standard expected its dealers under contract to abide by their contractual obligations and buy their "requirements" from Standard. The testimony of these 47 witnesses was perhaps 60% of the entire volume of oral testimony taken at the trial.

None of this testimony did more than indicate that the dealers were complying with their obligations under their "requirements"

There was uncontradicted evidence that Standard's numerous competitors freely and constantly compete with Standard for the patronage of dealers. The competitor freely seeks new sites in competition with Standard [R. 1065, 1066, 1067], and freely seeks to induce a dealer who is not under contract with Standard or whose contract with Standard has expired[89] to contract with the competitor. [R. 1067, 1068.][90] This activity goes on continuously. The uncontradicted evidence was that other companies competed with Standard in the sale of petroleum products, tires, tubes, batteries and accessories "very aggressively." [R. 1065.] To get business away from Standard they installed facilities for the dealers, absorbed rentals, loaned money and sought in "a variety of ways to interest the dealer in switching to other products." [R. 1068.] In the eight or nine years preceding 1947 the contracts, i.e., that a given dealer under contract with Standard was buying his "requirements" at a given location from Standard.

The complaints of these salesmen and their employers were no more than the complaints of a salesman who has "lost a customer" to a competitor. These complaints were no different than that which might be made by any salesman who finds that a prospective customer has been "signed up" by a competitor for a supply of goods the salesman had hoped to sell such prospective customer. If Standard had not used "requirements" contracts but had made contracts with the dealers for definite quantities, the witnesses referred to could have given the same testimony.

None of this character of testimony touched the question of gasoline, and none of these witnesses testified that they couldn't find purchasers for their products.

[89]Standard's Dealer Agreement [R. 1301, 211], Dealer Agreement TBA [R. 1308, 211] and Distributor Agreement [R. 1304A, 211] are terminable by either party on 30 days notice at the end of the first 6 months or at the end of any 6 months period thereafter.

[90]Thus, Edward P. McCall, assistant to the vice-president of Tide Water Associated Oil Company [R. 826], when asked on cross-examination by government counsel if his company solicited the business of selling gasoline to any dealer operating a Chevron station, replied: "We endeavor to take the whole station. . . ." [R. 860.]

number of Standard's retail dealer outlets diminished by about 2500. [R. 238, 239.]

These facts show no lessening of competition, substantial or otherwise.

In considering the presence or absence of prejudice to the public interest from the use of these "requirements" contracts, the following additional facts are important and undisputed.

"Experience has proven" that there is a definite danger of substitution of products if a service station handles the petroleum products of more than one supplier. This is especially true in the case of gasoline.[91] There was uncontradicted testimony that dealers handling the gasoline of more than one supplier ("split-pump" dealers) in many instances sold gasoline out of one pump when the customer thought he was buying from another pump. This was the so-called "long-hosing" practice. [R. 1106, 1107.] Dealers also transferred gasoline from one underground tank to another tank. [R 266.] Obviously this was a compelling reason for refusing to sell gasoline to "split-pump" accounts.[92] The uncontradicted evidence was that it was the "primary reason." [R. 1106.]

Experience also showed that dealers "were not favorable" to handling the products of different suppliers, because (a) they didn't have "the merchandising support" of a single supplier, and (b) they didn't have "an assur-

[91] There was also uncontradicted testimony of the danger of substitution in the case of lubricating oil. [R. 1107.]

[92] As said by this Court in justifying the practice upheld in Federal Trade Comm. v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463, 475 (1923): "He [the refiner] is also vitally interested in putting his brand [of gasoline] within easy reach of consumers with ample assurance of its genuineness." ance of supply," where they were handling the products of more than one supplier. [R. 266, 269.]

Delivery costs are higher in the case of a "split-pump" station than in the case of a station handling the gasoline of a single supplier. It costs "from a cent to a cent and a half a gallon more to serve a split-pump account." [R. 266.] This is true because of uncertainty with respect to the quantities to be delivered and "the constant sales followup that is required to maintain representation with that account." [R. 266.][93]

"Split-pump" outlets (i. e. dealers handling the gasoline of more than one supplier) have substantially disappeared from the Western area. Out of 36,500 retail outlets in that area in 1947, only 1.6% were "split-pump" outlets. [R. 1062, 1763-1777, 1064.]

Obviously, there were economic factors—quite apart from "requirements" contracts—which were responsible for this result. Obviously it was these economic factors which years ago brought about the use of these "requirements" contracts. This repels any conclusion that these contracts were the result of a "calculated scheme to gain control" of outlets or "restrain or suppress competition." (United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U. S. 131, 174.)

[93]For a summary of the testimony showing the reasons why suppliers and dealers generally have adopted the single-supplier system, see page 16, and footnote 17 herein.

(C) THERE WAS NO MONOPOLY OR TENDENCY TO CREATE MONOPOLY.

Since sec. 3 of the Clayton Act became law this Court has had occasion to consider the applicability of that section in only eight cases. In five of these cases the practices attacked were held to violate the section; in three the section was held not to have been violated.

In the five cases in which sec. 3 was held to have been violated, the effect of the activities involved was to create monopoly or enlarge an existing monopoly. Three of these, the United Shoe Machinery case, the International Business Machines case and the International Salt case, were typical "tying-clause" cases in which a manufacturer, having a patent monopoly in the manufacture of one article, sought to enlarge such monopoly by obligating a lessee of the patented article to purchase something additional.[94] A patent grants a monopoly. If leave to use

---

[94] In United Shoe Machinery Corp. v. United States, 258 U. S. 451 (1922), the company, according to the finding of the District Court, "controlled more than 95 per cent" of the business of supplying shoe machinery. (p. 455.) It leased its patented (p. 455) machines with tying-clauses obligating the lessee to use exclusively machinery of certain kinds made by the company or lose its right to use any of the company's machinery, also to purchase supplies exclusively from the company, also to use the company's machines only on shoes on which other operations had been performed by the company's machines, also to take all additional machinery from the company or lose its right to retain the leased machinery, also to pay royalty to the company on shoes operated upon by machines made by competitors, etc. (pp. 456, 457.) The Court said (pp. 457, 458): "When it is considered that the United Company occupies a dominating position in supplying shoe machinery of the classes involved, these covenants signed by the lessee and binding upon him effectually prevent him from acquiring the machinery of a competitor of the lessor except at the risk of forfeiting the the patented article is granted upon condition that the user will buy from the patent owner all unpatented supplies used in or in connection with the patented article, the monopoly enjoyed by the patent owner is enlarged to cover unpatented articles, thus (in the language of sec. 3 of the Clayton Act) tending to create a monopoly in the latter.

right to use the machines furnished by the United Company, which may be absolutely essential to the prosecution and success of his business."

In International Business Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U. S. 131 (1936), International and Remington Rand, Inc., also a defendant, were the only manufacturers of a certain type of patented (p. 134) machine. The machine was leased upon condition that the lessee would use in the machine only tabulating cards purchased from the lessor. (p. 135.) This resulted in giving International 81% and Remington Rand 19% of the business in tabulating cards (p. 136), i.e., a complete monopoly of the tabulating card business.

In International Salt Company v. United States, 332 U. S. 392 (1947), the company leased patented machines (p. 394) for dissolving rock salt and injecting salt into canned products on condition that the lessee purchase from the company all unpatented salt and salt tablets consumed in the leased machines. (p. 394.) The Court said (p. 395): "The appellant's patents confer a limited monopoly of the invention they reward. From them appellant derives a right to restrain others from making, vending or using the patented machines. But the patents confer no right to restrain the use of, or trade in, unpatented salt. By contracting to close this market for salt against competition, International has engaged in a restraint of trade for which its patents afford no immunity from the antitrust laws."

In several cases in the lower Federal courts where sec. 3 of the Clayton Act has been held applicable, defendant's contract required the other party to buy from defendant all his supplies used in con-

In our case Standard never had any monopoly, patent or otherwise.

In the fourth case, the Standard Fashion case, the manufacturer had no patent monopoly, but by covenants obligating retail dealers not to handle competing products, demonstrated at least a strong tendency to monopoly by controlling 40% of the nation's retail dealers in its nection with a patented article obtained from defendant on lease or other arrangement, i.e., tied unpatented articles to patented articles. Radio Corporation v. Lord, 28 F. 2d 257 (C. C. A. 3, 1928; cert. den. 278 U. S. 648); Oxford Varnish Corp. v. Ault & Wiborg Corp., 83 F. 2d 764 (C. C. A. 6, 1936); Philad Co. v. Lechler Laboratories, 107 F. 2d 147 (C. C. A. 2, 1939); Landis Machinery Co. v. Chase Tool Co., 141 F. 2d 800 (C. C. A. 6, 1944); Standard Register Co. v. American Sales Book Co., 148 F. 2d 612 (C. C. A. 2, 1945).

Monopoly may likewise be furthered where the commodity to which the tying-clause is attached is not a patented article but is nevertheless a commodity in the manufacture of which defendant has a practical monopoly. By tying to such commodity an obligation to purchase other commodities sold by defendant, the latter unlawfully extends the practical monopoly he enjoys with respect to the first commodity. Thus in Carter Carburetor Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 112 F. 2d 722 (C. C. A. 8, 1940), Carter carburetors were standard equipment on 60% of all 1937 passenger cars. Therefore a repair shop or garage attempting to service all makes of passenger cars had to carry Carter carburetors in stock. Hence Carter's notice that it would allow discounts only to shops and garages which agreed not to handle a competing product was, in effect, the extension of an existing practical monopoly. See, on the other hand, B. S. Pearsall Butter Co. v. Federal Trade Commission 292 Fed. 720, 722 (C. C. A. 7, 1923), where the product covered by exclusive dealing contracts was a "standardized product," which could "readily be supplied by many other makers," and the contracts were upheld.

product.[95] In this case the Court emphasized the fact that many small communities had only one such dealer and that in larger communities the manufacturer controlled the dealers "most resorted to" by customers.

In our case there is neither finding nor evidence indicating that Standard's retail dealers are the only dealers in any community or the dealers "most resorted to therein."[96]

In the fifth case, the Fashion Originators' Guild case, there was an admitted purpose and intent by powerful concerted action on the part of numerous manufacturers to drive competing manufacturers out of business and thus "create in themselves a monopoly."[97]

---

[95] In Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U. S. 346 (1922), the Fashion Company, or its holding company, controlled 40% of the nation's retail dealers in patterns for women's and children's garments through contracts obligating the dealer not to sell other makes of patterns. (p. 357.) The Court quoted with approval the following summary of the matter by the Circuit Court (p. 357): "'The restriction of each merchant to one pattern manufacturer must in hundreds, perhaps in thousands, of small communities, amount to giving such single pattern manufacturer a monopoly of the business in such community. Even in the larger cities, to limit to a single pattern maker the pattern business of dealers most resorted to by customers whose purchases tend to give fashions their vogue may tend to facilitate further combinations; so that the plaintiff, or some other aggressive concern, instead of controlling two-fifths, will shortly have almost, if not quite, all the pattern business.'"

[96] As already pointed out, the District Court recognized a failure of the government's proof to support the complaint's allegations that Standard's dealers occupied "favorably situated" retail outlets. (See page 12 and footnote 13 herein.)

[97] In Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Comm., 312 U. S. 457 (1941), the Guild, composed of manufacturers of textiles and 176 garment manufacturers, for the admitted purpose (p. 461) of destroying the competition of other manufacturers copying their designs, inaugurated and enforced a system whereby its members would sell textiles to garment manufacturers only on condition that the latter would not use or deal in textiles copied from designs of textile manufacturing Guild members and would sell manufac-

In our case there was neither finding nor evidence that Standard combined or conspired to monopolize, or had the purpose, or intent, or power to monopolize.

Thus in the only cases in which this Court has held sec. 3 of the Clayton Act to be applicable, monopoly was an ingredient. In the United Shoe Machinery, International Business Machines, and International Salt cases enlargement of an existing patent monopoly was attempted by "tying-clauses"; in the Standard Fashion case monopoly had been acquired in small communities where there was only one outlet controlled by Standard Fashion, as well as in larger communities where Standard Fashion controlled the outlets "most resorted to by customers"; and in the Fashion Originators' Guild case there was a clear purpose and intent by a powerful group to achieve monopoly by driving competitors out of business by an organized boycott.

In these five cases in which this Court held sec. 3 of the Clayton Act to be applicable, there was no intimation that tured garments to retailers only on condition that the latter would not use or deal in such copied designs. (p. 464.) As a result approximately 12,000 retailers throughout the country agreed to "cooperate" in this boycott program. (p. 461.) The Court pointed out (p. 462): "The power of the combination is great; competition and the demand of the consuming public make it necessary for most retail dealers to stock some of the products of these [Guild] manufacturers. . . . (p. 466.) In this case, the Commission found that the combination exercised sufficient control and power in the women's garments and textile businesses to exclude from the industry those manufacturers and distributors who do not conform to the rules and regulations of said respondents, and thus tend to create in themselves a monopoly in the said industries. . . . (p. 467.) . . . . the aim of petitioners' combination was the intentional destruction of one type of manufacture and sale which competed with Guild members. The purpose and object of this combination, its potential power, its tendency to monopoly, the coercion it could and did practice upon a rival method of competition, all brought it within the policy of the prohibition declared by the Sherman and Clayton Acts."

"requirements" contracts are unlawful solely because they are numerous and involve a substantial volume of products. Something more is required to make them illegal—prejudice to the public. In the five cases referred to this prejudice was found because the facts demonstrated creation or enlargement of monopoly. But in our case the District Court decided that the government's case was "established" [R. 126] by number of contracts and volume of products—that the contracts affected an "appreciable segment" of commerce and that was an end of the matter. Other facts were disregarded. If this be the law, then every "requirements" contract affecting a sizeable quantity is unlawful and the scope of sec. 3 is infinitely and disastrously extended.

Two of the three cases in which sec. 3 was held not to have been violated contained little, if any, discussion by this Court which is helpful to a determination of the application of the section in our case.[98] However, the third case in which sec. 3 was held not to have been violated is very much in point. That case is Federal Trade Comm. v. Sinclair Co., 261 U. S. 463, already referred to. There-[98] In Federal Trade Comm. v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568 (1923), the company consigned its magazines to dealers, obligating the latter not to act as agent for or wholesale the periodicals of any competitor, but sec. 3 of the Clayton Act was held to be inapplicable on the ground that the dealers were agents and not purchasers of the magazines.

In Pick Manufacturing Co. v. General Motors Corp., 299 U. S. 3 (1936), the company sold motor cars through dealers under a contract which obligated the dealer not to sell or use in the repair of the company's cars second-hand or used parts or parts not manufactured or authorized by the company. The District Court had found that the effect of this contract was not to substantially lessen competition or create a monopoly. The Circuit Court of Appeals had affirmed. This Court affirmed under the rule that it will accept findings in which two courts have concurred unless clear error is shown.

in Sinclair leased at a nominal rental underground tanks and gasoline pumps to numerous retail gasoline dealers on condition that the dealer would use such equipment solely for storing and handling Sinclair's gasoline. The Commission found (p. 471) that only a small proportion of the lessees required or used more than one pump. Thus the practical effect of the condition was to confine the lessees to Sinclair's gasoline. Nevertheless, this practice was upheld under sec. 3. The Standard Fashion case and the United Shoe Machinery case were distinguished. This Court said (p. 475):

> "No purpose or power to acquire unlawful monopoly has been disclosed, and the record does not show that the probable effect of the practice will be unduly to lessen competition. Upon the contrary, it appears to have promoted the public convenience by inducing many small dealers to enter the business and put gasoline on sale at the crossroads."

Use of monopoly power as a "leverage" to obtain something additional or enlarge the monopoly has recently been condemned under the Sherman Act in United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, 106, Schine Theatres v. United States, 334 U. S. 110, 116, and United States v. Paramount Pictures, 334 U. S. 131, 157, 158.

In the first two cases an exhibitor operating numerous motion picture theatres in various cities, in some of which there were no competing theatres, contracted with a distributor of films for privileges for all its theatres not accorded other distributors. It was held that this violated the Act, because such exhibitor had utilized its monopoly position in the cities where it had a monopoly to exact privileges not enjoyed by competitors for all cities in which it had theatres.

In the last case referred to, "block-booking," i. e., the licensing of one copyrighted motion picture on condition that the exhibitor also take one or more additional copyrighted pictures, was condemned on the ground that this was an enlargement of the copyright monopoly. It was said (p. 158) that where "a high quality film greatly desired is licensed only if an inferior one is taken, the latter borrows quality from the former and strengthens its monopoly by drawing on the other. . . . Even where all the films included in the package are of equal quality, the requirement that all be taken if one is desired increases the market for some. . . . the result is to add to the monopoly of the copyright in violation of the principle of the patent cases involving tying clauses."

In our case there was no evidence of the use of monopoly power as a "leverage."

At the trial two decisions were particularly relied upon by the government: United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, and International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392.

In both of these cases the facts presented to this Court showed that monopolies were contemplated and attained by the practices complained of.

In the Yellow Cab case, one of the restraints resulting from the conspiracy complained of was that through stock control CCM obligated cab operating companies in Chicago to buy their cabs exclusively from CCM. Under the facts pleaded and accepted as true by this Court on appeal from the order granting a motion to dismiss,[99] a monopoly was contemplated and attained, for the Chicago cab buyers had 2,595, or 86% of the 3,000 available Chicago cab licenses (pp. 223, 230). A Chicago ordinance limited to 3,000 the number of cab licenses which could lawfully be issued (p. 223). Thus, CCM obtained the exclusive business of buyers having by law a virtual monopoly.

In our case there is nothing resembling this. The buyers with whom Standard contracted had no monopoly of the retail trade in any locality or in the entire area or by virtue of "favorably situated" locations. (See p. 12, and footnote 13 herein.) On the contrary the "market" with which Standard and its competitors dealt was constantly expanding. For example, between 1936 and 1946 (while Standard's "requirements" contracts were being used) total gasoline sales to all accounts increased 64% [R. 1656, 939] and total lubricating sales to all accounts increased 104%. [R. 1660, 939.] (During that period Standard's dealer sales of such products increased only 58% [R. 1656, 939] and 62% [R. 1660, 939] respectively.)

Another restraint resulting from the conspiracy complained of in the Yellow Cab case was that Parmelee Transportation Company by agreement with other Chicago cab operating companies was to have the exclusive right to engage in the business of transporting railroad passen-

---

[99] Upon remand of this case, the proof was found not to support the allegations of the complaint upon which this Court predicated its decision in 332 U. S. 218, and judgment went for the defendants. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., ... Fed. Supp. ...

gers between Chicago railroad depots. This Court said (p. 229):

> ". . . exclusive contracts for the transportation service in question are not illegal. . . . But a conspiracy to eliminate competition in obtaining those exclusive contracts is what is alleged in this case and it is a conspiracy of that type that runs afoul of the Sherman Act."

Thus, a contract between a railroad and a cab company giving the latter an exclusive right to transport the railroad's passengers would not be illegal; an agreement between such cab company and its competitor cab companies that the latter would not seek contracts of this kind from the railroad would be illegal.

In our case there is nothing resembling this "parceling-out" of the available market. Standard's competitors have always been free to contract with dealers who were not already under contract with Standard, and to contract with the latter when their contracts with Standard expired. Standard's competitors have also been free to establish new station outlets, which may be created at comparatively small cost, for, as already pointed out, Standard's dealer outlets do not to any extent pre-empt the "favorably situated" locations. (See p. 12, and footnote 13 herein.) This is exactly what these competitors have done. The competition between Standard and other suppliers for contracts with dealers and for new sites has been vigorous and has been going on for a long time.

In the International Salt case (332 U. S. at 396) this Court said:

> "The volume of business affected by these contracts cannot be said to be insignificant or insubstantial and the tendency of the arrangement to accomplishment of monopoly seems obvious."

This was true because the contracts sought to extend the scope of an existing patent monopoly. The Court's statement in the International Salt case (332 U. S. at 396), quoted with approval in the Griffith case (334 U. S. at 107), that "it is unreasonable, per se, to foreclose competitors from any substantial market," must be confined to the setting of those cases—monopoly power used as a "leverage" to enlarge an existing "lawful" monopoly or exact privileges not enjoyed by competitors. Otherwise, this rule would condemn every supply contract which embraces a substantial quantity.

In our case there was no monopoly power. Standard does not sell any article in the distribution of which it has a monopoly, patent or otherwise. The kind of commodities which it sells may be purchased from many other suppliers. A retail dealer can successfully operate a service station selling no Standard products whatever. In the Western area something like 29,500 retail dealers in gasoline are doing this today. [R. 1062, 1763-1777, 1064.] In that area every retail dealer is free to select the company for which he will handle products and such selection is made from among a large number of companies competing for his patronage.

(4) The District Court Failed to Find Facts Requisite to Show Illegality, i. e., Failed to Find Facts Showing That the Contracts Were an Unreasonable Restraint or Might Have the Effect of Substantially Lessening Competition or Tending to Create Monopoly.

The District Court's conclusions of law [R. 186] that sec. 1 of the Sherman Act and sec. 3 of the Clayton Act were violated are not supported by the findings of fact.

There being no restraint which was "illegal per se" and no "specific intent to accomplish a forbidden restraint" (see Point II(2) herein), the District Court should not have decided the case solely on its findings as to the contracts, the number of dealers under contract, and the dollar volume of products handled under such contracts. Findings concerning many other competitive and economic factors were requisite. (United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 527.) (See Point II(3) herein.)

There were no findings concerning the following:[100]

(a) The number of dealers who handle the products of Standard's competitors, or whether such number has increased or decreased.

(b) The number of Standard's competitors, or whether such number has increased or decreased.

(c) The volume of products handled by Standard's competitors, or whether such volume has grown or declined in comparison with Standard's volume.

---

[100]Prior to the making of findings, defendants in connection with their motion for a reconsideration of the District Court's opinion, called that Court's attention to the importance of most of these factors. [R. 142-157.]

Under Rule 52 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, "requests for findings are not necessary for purposes of review."

(d) The fact that the increase in consumer demand and consumption has been greater than the increase in Standard's dealer sales.

(e) Standard's practice in supplying dealers without contracts, and the dealer's freedom of choice in selecting a supplier with whom to contract, and, if he selected Standard, the type of contract to be executed.

(f) The fact that dealers under contract with Standard do not have the "favorably situated" outlets, or a monopoly in any given area.

(g) The decrease in the number of Standard's dealer outlets.

(h) The practices of Standard's competitors in seeking contracts and in contracting with dealers.

(i) The general adoption of a single-supplier system of gasoline distribution in the Western area by a multitude of dealers handling the products of Standard's competitors.

(j) The reasons for a dealer's handling the products of only one supplier.

(k) The probable effect upon competition of an elimination of the "requirements" contracts.

The findings which were made dealt with Standard's operations in a vacuum—without reference to the competitive surroundings or background. The only possible exception to this is the finding [par. 25, R. 182] that Standard sells between 12 and 14 per cent of all the gasoline sold or distributed through independent retail dealer outlets in the "Western area"; that in the majority of states in that area Standard is the largest single marketer of gasoline through such outlets; and that Standard sold approximately 23 per cent of all gasoline sold in that area in 1946.[101]

The only finding dealing with the intent, purpose, or effect of the "requirements" clauses is par. 31. [R. 185.] The first part of this paragraph states that the "intent, purpose and effect of the exclusive supply provisions" of the contracts has been "to prevent the 'independent dealer' operating under said agreements from handling" competitive products. The remainder of the paragraph adds nothing to this. It declares in substance that the contracts were interpreted by the dealers to require exclusive handling of Standard's products; that the contracts denied the dealers access to competitive products; that the dealers have been prevented from purchasing merchandise in an open competitive market; and that the contracts were intended to and do confine the dealers to Standard's products.

In effect this finding simply declared that the dealers, because they lived up to the obligations of their contracts with Standard, were precluded from purchasing their "requirements" from Standard's competitors, and that this was the purpose and intent of the parties.

[101] See comment on this finding in the opening Statement, pages 25, 26 herein.

Something more in the way of findings of fact was required to support a conclusion of law that either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act was violated.

Taking the findings as they stand, no violation of the Sherman Act is shown because there are no facts found showing that the "requirements" contracts were a restraint "illegal per se" and there is no finding that Standard had a specific intent "to accomplish a forbidden restraint," i. e., a specific intent "to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product." (United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, 522, 524.) The "intent" paragraph of the findings [par. 31, R. 185] did not so find.

Taking the findings as they stand, no violation of the Clayton Act is shown because there is no finding that the "effect" of the contracts might be "to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." The "effect" paragraph of the findings [par. 31, R. 185] did not so find. This finding simply declared that the "effect" of the contracts was to prevent the contracting dealers from handling competitive products. This finding could be made with reference to a multitude of perfectly legal contracts. Suppose that A, a supplier, makes a contract with B, a manufacturer, to sell B 1000 barrels of fuel oil for B's factory. To the extent that B's factory requirements are satisfied by the 1000 barrels, the contract prevents B from buying competing fuel oil, and the finding which the District Court made in our case would be entirely appropriate.

It is no answer to this to say that other fact findings show (a) that there were "requirements" contracts with 5107 dealers, and (b) that a large dollar volume of products was handled annually thereunder. To say that these facts conclusively establish the ultimate fact—that the effect of the contracts was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly—is to say that "requirements" contracts, without more are forbidden provided they affect a sizeable quantity. This was not the purpose of the Clayton Act. In the thirty-four years since its enactment this Court has never suggested that size of operations without more spelled the difference between compliance therewith and violation thereof.

To determine whether the effect of the contracts was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly, further findings of fact were necessary—findings dealing with the entire competitive picture. It cannot be determined that competition was substantially lessened or monopoly threatened solely because Standard's competitors could not sell products to dealers with whom Standard had contracts during the life of such contracts. This determination must depend upon all factors which might affect the situation of these competitors. Findings with respect to these factors were not made.[102]

[102]Error is specifically assigned. [R. 1870-1872.]

(5) "Requirements" Contracts With California Dealers Are Not in Restraint of Interstate Commerce, and Are Not "in the Course of" Such Commerce, and Do Not Substantially "Affect" Such Commerce.

The District Court erred in concluding that such of the contracts as were made with California dealers restrained interstate commerce, or were made "in the course of" interstate commerce or had any substantial "effect" upon interstate commerce.[103]

Under sec. 1 of the Sherman Act the restraint must be upon interstate commerce.

Under sec. 3 of the Clayton Act the contracts must have been made "in the course of" interstate commerce,[104] and must have had the "effect" of substantially lessening competition or tending to create monopoly in a "line of [interstate] commerce."

Crude oil comes solely from California wells. [R. 223, 227.] It moves solely to California refineries. [R. 182.] Thence the refined products move in California to Cali-

[103] Error is specifically assigned. [R. 1868, 1869.]

[104] Lewis v. Shell Oil Co., 50 Fed. Supp. 547 (Ill. 1943), dealt with sec. 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. 13a), which makes it unlawful for any person engaged in commerce "in the course of such commerce" to discriminate in price between different purchasers. The Court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the "requirements" contract in question, under which gasoline was delivered from Shell's bulk plant in Chicago (supplied from Indiana) to a Chicago dealer, was not within the purview of the Act. The Court said (p. 549): "However, there is a distinction between acts or transactions which merely affect commerce, and those which are actually performed in commerce. It is those acts and transactions which are actually performed in commerce against which the Robinson-Patman Act is specifically directed, and nowhere does that Act refer to transactions which only affect commerce." fornia bulk plants[105] and thence to dealers in California, or directly from the refinery to dealers in California. [R. 182, 183.]

Substantially all the tires, tubes and batteries which eventually go to California dealers, are acquired by Standard from factories and plants located in California; thence move to Standard's California warehouses located at San Francisco, Fresno and Los Angeles; thence move to the dealers in California. [R. 230, 1051, 975, 976.]

The contracts with the California dealers[106] are made in California [R. 247], and, as previously indicated, the products supplied thereunder move to the California dealer within California.

Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211 (1899), is in point under the Sherman Act. There a decree enjoining certain defendants engaged in the manufacture and sale of cast iron pipe from combining to enhance prices by eliminating competitive bidding in the sale of such pipe, was affirmed. But in the course of the opinion it was said (p. 247):

> "In one aspect, however, that judgment is too broad in its terms—the injunction is too absolute in its directions—as it may be construed as applying equally to commerce wholly within a State as well as to that which is interstate or international only. This was probably an inadvertence merely. Although the jurisdiction of Congress over commerce among the States is full and complete, it is not questioned that it has none over that which is wholly within a State, and therefore none over combinations or agreements so far as they relate to a restraint of such trade or commerce. It does not acquire any jurisdiction over that part of a combination or agreement which relates to commerce wholly within a State, by reason of the fact that the combination also covers and regulates commerce which is interstate. The latter it can regulate, while the former is subject alone to the jurisdiction of the State. The combination herein described covers both commerce which is wholly within a State and also that which is interstate.

[106] Standard sold to 2354 California dealers under some form of writing and to 429 California dealers without any writing, or a total of 2783. [R. 1315, 1316, 212.]

"In regard to such of these defendants as might reside and carry on business in the same State where the pipe provided for in any particular contract was to be delivered, the sale, transportation and delivery of the pipe by them under that contract would be a transaction wholly within the State, and the statute would not be applicable to them in that case. They might make any combination they chose with reference to the proposed contract, although it should happen that some non-resident of the State eventually obtained it.

* * * * * * * *

"To the extent that the present decree includes in its scope the enjoining of defendants thus situated from combining in regard to contracts for selling pipe in their own State, it is modified, and limited to that portion of the combination or agreement which is interstate in its character."

To the same effect, see Small Co. v. Lamborn & Co., 267 U. S. 248 (1925).

United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, 258 U. S. 451 (1922), is in point under the Clayton Act. There it was said (p. 465):

> "It is insisted that the leases in controversy were not made in the course of interstate commerce, and, therefore, cannot be embraced within the terms of the Clayton Act. It is provided in the decree that it shall apply to all leases covering shoe machinery shipped from one State to the user or factory for use in another State in the course of or as a part of the transaction between the lessor and the lessee, resulting in the making of the lease. It is true that the mere making of the lease of the machines is not of itself interstate commerce. But where, connected with the making of such lease, a movement of goods in interstate commerce is required, we have no doubt of the authority and purpose of Congress to control the making of such leases by the enactment of the statute before us."

There was no evidence that a "movement of goods in interstate commerce" was contemplated or required or actually occurred in connection with any of the "requirements" contracts made with dealers located in California.

The judgment of the District Court should have excepted from its operation contracts made between Standard and dealers located in California. As to these, the District Court was without jurisdiction.

CONCLUSION.

The case presented is one where the District Court patently and avowedly applied what we have called the "appreciable segment" of commerce theory. It erred in so doing. Because of this error it excluded material evidence, and gave no weight to and made no findings concerning material evidence which was admitted. It should have decided the case upon a correct theory—what we have called the "detriment to the public interest" theory. This would have required it to weigh the factors which it thus disregarded. Appellants were entitled to have these factors weighed by the trier of fact.

It cannot be said that if the trier of fact had applied the correct theory and given weight to these factors, no decision favorable to Standard could reasonably have resulted.[107] Even if we leave out of account matters sought to be introduced but which were excluded, and take simply the uncontradicted facts disclosed by the record, these demonstrate that there was no violation of either the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act.

---

[107]While this Court has said that it will not disturb a judgment for error which does not work injury, it has also said that "it is well settled that a reversal will be directed unless it appears, beyond doubt, that the error complained of did not and could not have prejudiced the rights of the party" (Vicksburg & Meridian Railr'd. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 103); that whenever affirmance is sought because the error was not injurious, "it must appear so clear as to be beyond doubt that the error did not and could not have prejudiced the party's rights." (Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. 795, 807.)

It is respectfully submitted that the judgment of the District Court should be reversed with directions to enter a judgment in favor of appellants.

I.

The Government's "Foreclose-Competitors-From-Any-Substantial-Market" Argument Would Strike Down a Multitude of Contracts Underlying the Nation's Industrial and Commercial Structure.

Every contract for the future sale of goods excludes competitors from the market—in the sense that the government contends Standard's "requirements" contracts exclude competitors of Standard.

If such contract embraces a substantial quantity it excludes from a substantial market—in the sense that the government contends that Standard's competitors are excluded from a substantial market.

Yet certainly every contract for the future sale of a substantial quantity which contemplates a movement of goods in interstate commerce cannot be condemned by the Act.

A contract by which a steel company agrees to furnish over a three year period the steel "requirements" of a motor car manufacturer or a large specified quantity of steel for such manufacturer (to now employ the phraseology of government counsel) "destroys the opportunity" of other sellers of steel to sell such motor car manufacturer the steel thus contracted for, and deprives the motor car manufacturer of the "right to buy" such steel from competitors of the contracting seller. The substantial part of of the market represented by the motor car manufacturer's contract commitments is "fenced off" and for three years "closed" to the steel company's competitors.

But such contract is not illegal even though the quantity embraced thereby is very substantial and a movement of goods in interstate commerce is contemplated.

[2] This phrase appears in the International Salt case (332 U. S. at 396) and again in the Griffith case (334 U. S. at 107), but is there used to condemn monopoly power used as a leverage to enlarge an existing patent monopoly or exact special privileges not enjoyed by competitors.

Suppose that in our case Standard, instead of making "requirements" contracts with dealers, had made with each of 4,000 dealers a contract to sell such dealer 20,000 gallons of its gasoline, deliveries to be made over a period of one year. This would amount to a total annual quantity of 80,000,000 gallons of gasoline and a total annual dollar volume of $14,000,000.[3] Implicit in such contracts would be at least an "understanding" that such dealers would not buy 80,000,000 gallons of gasoline from Standard's competitors. Would this be a substantial "captive" market (Govt. Br. 25, 27) from which Standard's competitors would be "shut away"? All the arguments which the government now levels at Standard in our case could be employed in the case thus supposed. No logical line of demarcation separates the one from the other. Yet if the case thus supposed violates the law, the practices of industry and commerce nationwide must undergo extensive alteration.

Obviously the broad generalizations of the government's brief—such generalizations as: "it is also unlawful to exclude from the market any of those who supply it . . ." (Govt. Br. 25, 26); "freedom of trade includes unrestricted access to the market" (Govt. Br. 26): "agreements which fence off a substantial segment of the market . . . impinge upon the right of freedom of trade . . ." (Govt. Br. 26): and "stifle competition by denying competitors less favorably situated access to the market" (Govt. Br. 30, 31)—may not be applied to condemn the contracts here involved unless a multitude of contracts all over the country and heretofore regarded as valid are likewise to be condemned.

Under the rule contended for by the government all "requirements" contracts for the future supply of goods in interstate commerce would be illegal, provided they embraced a substantial quantity. The same would be true of all contracts for the future supply of a substantial and definite quantity of goods in interstate commerce where the proof showed that such definite quantity was in fact the buyer's requirements for any period. The same would be true of all contracts for the future supply of a substantial and definite quantity of goods in interstate commerce which was less than the buyer's requirements, for such contracts are as instrumental as "requirements" contracts in excluding competitors from the "market" represented by the quantity for which the buyer has contracted.

[3] Assuming a price of 18¢ per gallon, this being the assumption employed by the government in arriving at the dollar volume of Standard's gasoline sales. (R. 820)

So, in this case, it is submitted that there is no unlawful exclusion of competitors from the market simply by virtue of the fact that Standard makes "requirements" contracts with a large number of dealers for substantial quantities.

Moreover, in this case, there is in fact no exclusion of competitors from the market in the sense that Standard's competitors are prevented from freely competing with Standard in an endeavor to obtain contracts with dealers. In every instance, Standard's competitors freely compete with Standard to induce the dealer to execute a supply contract. Frequently such competitors are successful in obtaining a contract with the dealer to the exclusion of Standard (R. 1068). Standard does not and cannot execute any such contract with a dealer except in fair and open competition with its competitors. In such competition for the patronage of the dealer Standard has no unlawful competitive advantage, and Standard's competitors have "unrestricted access to the market."

The foregoing points to the futility of the government's attempt to identify Standard's "requirements" contracts with a boycott. (Govt. Br. 27) In a boycott the parties by concert of action enforce non-dealing and usually seek to prevail upon others to do likewise. In this case there is no evidence whatever of concert of action between Standard and any of its competitors. On the contrary, as pointed out above and in Appellants' Brief, p. 93 et seq. there is aggressive competition between Standard and its competitors. Nor is there any concert of action between Standard and the dealers to exclude Standard's competitors. If, as pointed out above, competition is in a sense lessened by the contracts themselves, it is no more than that lessening of competition which always occurs whenever one seller is successful in the competitive struggle in inducing the buyer to finally say that he will buy such seller's goods. Competition is itself a "conflict for advantage" (United States v. American Linseed Oil Co., 262 U. S. 371, 388). One of the competing parties must eventually be successful—otherwise there is no such thing as competition. The lessening of competition brought about by the "requirements" contracts is not an unlawful lessening of competition.

It is true that Standard will not sell gasoline or tires or tubes or batteries or accessories to a dealer who handles a competitive gasoline.[4] But this is not a boycott, nor is it unlawful. This Court in United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, said (p. 307):

> "In the absence of any purpose to create or maintain a monopoly, the act does not restrict the long recognized right of trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal. And, of course, he may announce in advance the circumstances under which he will refuse to sell."

The government adverts (Govt. Br. 29, 30) to the finding (R. 181) which states that Standard "persuaded, induced, and influenced" dealers to enter into "requirements" contracts by lending the dealer money without interest or at rates of interest below current rates; by making loans, portions of which were later forgiven; by making gifts of money; by buying equipment from the dealer and thereafter furnishing new equipment without charge; or by selling equipment to the dealer at less than cost. The government states (Govt. Br. 15) that our assignment of error to this finding is "in flat contradiction of the admission of" Standard's answer. But such answer (R. 94) admitted only that Standard had employed these methods "in the past" and "in order to meet the competition" of defendants' competitors who were employing the same methods and offering like or similar benefits to operators; averred that there had been no giving of money or forgiving of loans subsequent to May 1, 1946 and that this had occurred only "in rare instances" prior thereto; admitted that "in certain cases" these benefits may have been "one of the reasons why the operator entered into a contract, but that in many . . . cases said benefit was accorded the operator for the purpose of promoting his sales, or for some other reason quite apart from the making of any contract or lease." All else in the complaint pertaining to this was denied. Obviously such admissions as are embodied in the answer are not at all in conformity with paragraph 22 of the findings (R. 184) and the error assigned to the latter is by no means a "contradiction" of admissions in the answer.

The rarity of these practices is demonstrated by the testimony. Mr. McClanahan, Standard's vice president in charge of sales, testified that "several dealers" may have been assisted financially, but that "we just don't make gifts to anybody" (R. 250). When his attention was called to one specific case of financial assistance to a dealer, and he was asked if this was the kind of thing that happened frequently, he replied, "Not frequently. Very infrequently" (R. 253). He also testified that the total number of loans to dealers, "would amount to very few in number" (R. 254.

277). Nothing elsewhere in the record disputes Mr. McClanahan's testimony as to the rarity of these practices. Moreover, the District Court's finding does not state the number of instances in which these "inducements" were employed or that such instances were numerous (R. 181).[5]

These "inducements" occurred only in very rare instances. It is believed that the record will disclose only six or seven such instances. (See Exhs. 16-17-18-19-20 and 21. R. 1326, 1342, 1383, 1389, 1394C, 1405.)

The complaint did not seek any injunction restraining these so-called "inducements" (R. 1, 11). They were not enjoined by the judgment (R. 188).

II.

Exclusive Dealing Contracts, Even Though They Involve Substantial Quantities and Value, Are Not Illegal Unless They Seek to Enlarge an Existing Monopoly, or Are a Calculated Scheme to Gain Control of the Market and to Restrain or Suppress Competition, Rather Than to Advance Legitimate Business Needs, or Unless They Unreasonably Restrict the Opportunities of Competitors to Market Their Product.

The government says that Standard's "requirements" contracts are illegal because they "destroy the opportunity of other sellers of similar products to compete for the patronage" of the outlets (Govt. Br. 25).

But certainly it is now clearly established that exclusive dealing contracts are not illegal without "something" more.

---

[5] The finding (par. 22, R. 181) states that defendants have persuaded, induced and influenced dealers to enter into "the various written and oral agreements described in Paragraphs 11-15, 17 and 18 herein by various means and methods", etc. This does not say "all" agreements and the paragraphs referred to, viz., 11-15, 17 and 18 are not the paragraphs which refer to the numbers of the several contracts outstanding.

This was the Court's pronouncement in the Columbia Steel case (334 U. S. 495 at 523, 524).[6]

This was pointed out in the Yellow Cab case (332 U. S. 218).[7]

This was stated in the Paramount Pictures case (334 U. S. 131 at 173, 174) where the Court was referring to exclusive dealing brought about by vertical integration.

What is the "something" which must be added to exclusive dealing to make it illegal?

Certainly it is not magnitude or volume of operations. The decision in the Columbia Steel case (334 U. S. 495) refutes the idea that it is magnitude or volume which makes exclusive dealing illegal. There U. S. Steel lawfully acquired the exclusive business of Consolidated Steel, "the largest independent steel fabricator on the West Coast" (p. 498), and by so doing obtained the exclusive right for all time to come of supplying a "market" amounting to $5,000,000 annually (p. 537).

The decision in the Yellow Cab case (332 U. S. 218) refutes the idea that it is magnitude or volume which makes exclusive dealing illegal. There it was indicated that Parmelee might lawfully make exclusive dealing contracts

---

[6] Therein this Court said (334 U. S. 495 at 524):

> "Exclusive dealings for rolled steel between Consolidated and United States Steel, brought about by vertical integration or otherwise, are not illegal, at any rate until the effect of such control is to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product."

[7] Therein Parmelee had exclusive contracts with the railroads entering Chicago to transport passengers between railroad stations. This Court said (332 U. S. 218 at 229):

> "It is true, of course, that exclusive contracts for the transportation service in question are not illegal."

It is then pointed out that these contracts between Parmelee and the railroads became illegal only because of the allegation that the other cab companies in Chicago had agreed with Parmelee that Parmelee alone should provide this service.

with the railroads, provided it did not agree with its competitors that it (Parmelee) should have this business and its competitors should not have it (332 U. S. at 229). The volume of dealing under these contracts between Parmelee and the railroads must be very large.

The decision in the Sinclair case (261 U. S. 463) refutes the idea that it is magnitude or volume which makes exclusive dealing illegal. In that case Sinclair lawfully made exclusive dealing contracts with gasoline dealers, and the volume of dealing under these contracts must have been very large for Sinclair was a large oil company and its operations were widespread.[8]

The decision in the Pick case (299 U. S. 3) refutes the idea that it is magnitude or volume which makes exclusive dealing illegal. Therein exclusive dealing contracts between General Motors and its dealers were approved, although in view of the size of General Motors these contracts doubtless were numerous and involved a large dollar volume of products.

Searching for the "something" in addition to magnitude or volume which will make exclusive dealing contracts illegal, we find the following:

(A) Exclusive dealing contracts will be held illegal if they are a means by which an existing monopoly is enlarged. (See Appellants' Brief, p. 99 et seq.) Typical of this is the International Salt case (332 U. S. 329)—a "tying-clause" case which declares it to be illegal for the owner of an article monopolized by patent to attempt to extend such patent monopoly by requiring the lessee of the patented article to purchase from the owner of the patent non-patented articles for use in connection with the patented article.[9] But in our case Standard has no monopoly, patent or otherwise.

[8] Neither the findings of the Federal Trade Commission nor the decisions in the Circuit Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court indicate the number of contracts involved or the volume handled thereunder.

(B) Exclusive dealing contracts will be held illegal if they are "a calculated scheme to gain control over an appreciable segment of the market and to restrain or suppress competition; rather than an expansion to meet legitimate business needs." This is the pronouncement (with respect to exclusive dealing brought about by vertical integration) in the Paramount Pictures case (334 U. S. 131 at 174). But in our case there was no such scheme, and the "requirements" contracts were a normal expansion to meet legitimate business needs.

(C) Exclusive dealing contracts will be held illegal if their effect was "to unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product". This is the pronouncement in the Columbia Steel case (334 U. S. 495, 524). But in our case the "requirements" contracts did not unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product. (See Appellants' Brief, p. 87 et seq.)

III.

The District Court Did Not Find or Weigh the Factors Which Would Have Demonstrated That Standard Did Not Exert Monopoly Power, and Had Not Perpetrated a Calculated Scheme to Gain Control of a Market and to Restrain or Suppress Competition, and Had Not Unreasonably Restricted the Opportunities of Its Competitors to Market Their Product. Instead It Predicated Its Conclusions Solely on the Magnitude and Volume of Standard's Operations.

The government does not dispute the fact (elaborated under Point I of Appellants' Brief, p. 40 et seq.) that the District Court, in reaching its conclusions adverse to Standard, disregarded everything except (a) the "requirements" contracts, (b) the number of dealers under such contracts, and (c) the volume of business handled thereunder. The District Court did not weigh or make findings with respect to other relevant factors and it shut out evidence relevant thereto (Appellants' Brief, p. 40 et seq. and p. 110 et seq.). The government seeks to support this position.

Certainly, to determine whether the intent of the "requirements" contracts was "a calculated scheme to gain control . . . and to restrain or suppress competition, rather than an expansion to meet legitimate business needs", or to determine whether the effect of such contracts was to "unreasonably restrict the opportunities of competitors to market their product", the District Court as a trier of fact was required to (a) receive the evidence which it excluded as to what the "effect" of the elimination of the "requirements" clauses would be on competition and the over-all competitive picture, and (b) make findings and weigh "the facts peculiar to the business . . . : its condition before and after the restraint was imposed; the nature of the restraint and its effect, actual or probable," (Chicago Board of Trade v. United States, 246 U. S. 231, 238); "the economic conditions peculiar to the . . . industry; . . . and the probable consequences of the carrying out of that plan in relation to market prices and other matters affecting the public interest . . ." (Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344, 361); and was required to give heed to the clear pronouncement of this Court in the Columbia Steel case (334 U. S. 495 at 527) that

> "In determining what constitutes unreasonable restraint, we do not think the dollar volume is in itself of compelling significance; we look rather to the percentage of business controlled, the strength of the remaining competition, whether the action springs from business requirements or purpose to monopolize, the probable development of the industry, consumer demands, and other characteristics of the market."

This was exactly what the District Court did not do.

The District Court ignored the basic requirements of the "rule of reason"—that all the facts of the particular case shall be considered and weighed by the trier of fact for the purpose of determining whether the practices complained of will prejudice the public interest. (See Appellants' Brief, p. 53 et seq.)

IV.

Appellants Have Not Admitted by the Pleadings or Otherwise That the "Effect" of the "Requirements" Contracts May be to "Substantially Lessen Competition" as That Term is Used in Sec. 3 of the Clayton Act.

Confronted with the results of nine years of operation under the "requirements" contracts—results which demonstrate that the practices complained of produce no substantial lessening of competition (see Appellants' Brief, p. 93 et seq.); government counsel now seek to invoke what is said to be an admission by defendants' answer that the "effect" of the contracts may be to substantially lessen competition (Govt. Br. 46). This admission, they say, is found in the Fifth affirmative defense in defendants' answer.

The Fifth affirmative defense (R. 96) in defendants' answer pleads that the "application and enforcement" of the antitrust acts sought herein was and is inequitable and violative of Constitutional guarantees in that Standard's contracts are alleged to violate the law and are sought to be declared void while numerous other existing contracts made by competitors of like or similar content are not attacked or sought to be enjoined and "will not be legally attacked or sought to be enjoined by plaintiff, by reason whereof a decree herein as prayed by plaintiff" would enable Standard's competitors to contract with Standard's existing and prospective customers upon terms which would be denied Standard, with the result that Standard would be deprived of the custom and patronage of such customers, etc. It is the last part of this which the government contends is an admission that the "requirements" contracts have the effect of "excluding from the market" competitors who do not use such contracts, and that the effect of the contracts may be to substantially lessen competition.

No proof was offered to support this Fifth defense and no finding was made with respect thereto.

Obviously, if Standard could have proved that the Department of Justice would not attack and thus place the blessing of legality upon "requirements" contracts of Standard's competitors while at the same time enjoining the use of Standard's "requirements" contracts, there would be something queer about the situation. But unless the Department of Justice is prepared to concede the factual truth of the allegation of this Fifth defense (italicized above) that it (the government) will not legally attack or seek to enjoin use of "requirements" contracts by Standard's competitors, it should not be heard to urge that other allegations of this Fifth defense are factual admissions on the part of Standard. And if the Department of Justice is prepared to concede that "requirements" contracts in the hands of Standard's competitors will not be attacked or enjoined, this is a concession that "requirements" contracts generally are legal, for the Department of Justice is bound to enforce the law and take steps to enjoin contracts which violate the antitrust laws.

So if this Fifth defense is to be taken as a factual admission for the purpose of this lawsuit, let us take all of it as a factual admission. If so, in view of the presumption that the law will be obeyed by the Department of Justice, we have a clean cut factual admission by the government that "requirements" contracts do not violate the antitrust laws.

Of course, the truth is that none of this Fifth defense may be used as an admission either against Standard or against the government.

All of the allegations of the complaint that the effect of the "requirements" contracts was to exclude competitors from the market or substantially lessen competition were denied by the answer (see par. 34 of the complaint, R. 10, denied by par. 25 of the answer, R. 95).

Defendants were entitled to plead inconsistent affirmative defenses.[10]

Obviously, therefore, an admission in one affirmative defense cannot be taken as an admission in the case. If the rule were otherwise and all the allegations of inconsistent affirmative defenses were taken as admissions in the case, how would it be possible to draft consistent findings? The findings would either be at variance with certain of the admissions in certain affirmative defenses, or the findings would be hopelessly conflicting.

The authorities support the foregoing conclusions.

Glenn v. Sumner, 132 U. S. 152, 157
Banque de France v. Chase Nat. Bank, 60 Fed. (2d) 703, 708 (C. C. A. 2)
United States v. Stephanidis, 47 Fed. (2d) 554, 555 (C. C. A. 2)

In the case last cited it was said (p. 555)

> "It is true that appellee's separate defense setting up a breach of warranty admits that title to the vessel passed to the purchaser, and is inconsistent with its general denials; but no contention has been, or could be, made that inconsistent defenses may not be raised in separate pleas, or that an admission in one plea may be used by a plaintiff to prove his case against a different plea which denies it." [citing Glenn v. Sumner, supra.]

STANDARD OIL COMPANY OF CALIFORNIA AND STANDARD STATIONS, INC., APPELLANTS

v.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, CENTRAL DIVISION

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the District Court for the Southern District of California, Central Division (R. 99-137), and its supplemental opinion rendered on appellants' motion to reconsider (R. 158-167), are reported, respectively, in 78 F. Supp. 850 and 875.

JURISDICTION

The district court entered judgment for appellee on June 30, 1948 (R. 188-194; reported in 78 F. Supp. 889). The petition for appeal was filed on July 20, 1948, and was allowed the same day (R. 1876). The jurisdiction of this Court is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, 32 Stat. 823, as last amended by Section 17 of the Act of June 25, 1948, Pub. Law 773, 80th Cong., 2d Sess., 15 U. S. C. 29. Probable jurisdiction was noted on October 19, 1948 (R. 1947).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the trial court correctly concluded that the foreclosure of competing suppliers from 6000 retail dealer outlets (approximately one-sixth of the total number in the seven States of the Western area) selling annually $66,000,000 worth of petroleum products and automotive accessories, and the denial to those dealer outlets of access to a competitive market, by exclusive dealing contracts between those dealer outlets and the appellants (suppliers of 23% of the gasoline marketed in those States) constitutes an unreasonable restraint of trade condemned by Section 1 of the Sherman Act.

2. Whether the trial court correctly concluded that the effect of these exclusive dealing contracts substantially lessens competition and tends to create a monopoly in violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act.

3. Whether the trial court correctly concluded that it had jurisdiction to enjoin the intrastate use of exclusive dealing agreements on finding that their effect was to restrain interstate commerce.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, known as the Sherman Act, provides in part as follows:

> Section 1 [as amended by the Act of August 17, 1937, 50 Stat. 693]. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: . . . [15 U.S.C. 1].
>
> Section 4 [as amended by the Act of March 3, 1911, Sec. 291, 36 Stat. 1167]. The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of the act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. . . . [15 U. S. C. 4].

The Act of October 15, 1914, 38 Stat. 730, known as the Clayton Act, provides in part as follows:

> Section 3. It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement, or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement, or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce. [15 U. S. C. 14]

STATEMENT

The United States brought suit against Standard Oil Company of California and its wholly owned subsidiary, Standard Stations, Inc., asking that the exclusive supply provisions of some 8,000 agreements entered into by them with approximately 6,000 independent service stations be declared violative of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act, and that the further use of agreements containing these or similar provisions be enjoined. Following trial of the cause on the merits the district court adjudged the provisions illegal and void, and granted the relief prayed for by the Government.

The existence, number, and contents of the written agreements are not in controversy. Only their effect is in question. The issues involved are, therefore, almost exclusively legal in character. The Government accepts in their entirety the district court's findings of fact (R. 168-185; reported, 78 F. Supp. 879-888). Appellants challenge the correctness of the findings made in minor particulars only.[1] The recital of facts which follows is based upon the findings rendered by the district court, with their supporting evidence, and upon undisputed evidence.

Appellant Standard Oil Company of California is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in San Francisco. It produces and refines petroleum products in California, and transports, distributes and markets such products in California, Arizona, Washington, Idaho, Nevada, Utah and Oregon, which represent what the district court called the Western area (Fdg. 2, R. 168, 169). Appellant Standard refines gasoline at refineries at Richmond, El Segundo and Segura, all in California. It purchases gasoline from Utah Oil Refining Company, Salt Lake City, Utah, for distribution and sale in parts of Utah and Idaho, and from Standard Oil Company of Texas for distribution and sale in parts of Arizona. (Fdg. 24, R. 182.) It also purchases from various concerns, and distributes and sells a line of tires, batteries, and automotive accessories, a majority of which bears the Atlas brand name (Fdg. 28, R. 183; Fdg. 12, R. 173).[2]

[1] Appellants contend that the court should have made additional findings, and, of course, they challenge such ultimate findings as, e.g., that the agreements constitute an unreasonable restraint on interstate commerce. But, in respect to evidentiary findings or findings not broadly interwoven with legal conclusions, appellants' objections are insignificant. See Appellants' Assignment of Error 3 (R. 1869).

Appellant Standard Stations, Inc., also a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in San Francisco, is a wholly owned subsidiary of Standard, and manages and operates service stations in the Western area (Fdg. 3, R. 169).

Appellant Standard is the largest single marketer of gasoline through retail outlets in the majority of states in the Western area (Fdg. 25, R. 182). In addition to its sales, through retail outlets it makes industrial sales (App. Br.[3] 25). Appellant Standard's total sales of gasoline in 1946 amounted to 23% of the total taxable gallonage sold in the seven-state Western area (Fdg. 25, R. 182).

Early in 1947 there were in the Western area 36,500 retail gasoline outlets, including both the independent dealer-operated stations and the company-operated stations of appellants and of other gasoline suppliers (App. Br. 20, R. 1061-2, 1763-1777, 1064). Appellants owned and operated 1063 or 3% of these outlets (R. 101, App. Br. 10).[4] 5937, representing 16% of the total outlets were operated by dealers subject to exclusive dealing agreements with appellants (Fdg. 19, R. 179).

Appellants had 7887 exclusive-dealing agreements covering the 5937 outlets. Some dealers were parties to more than one type of agreement. (Fdgs. 16 and 17, R. 179).

These agreements were divided into seven types, five written and two oral. Under their terms all 5937 of the outlets are forbidden to handle competitors' gasoline (Fdgs. 11-17, R. 172-179). More than 7000 of the agreements, all but 742, forbid handling competitive petroleum products of any sort (Fdgs. 1117, R. 172-179). In addition 2777 of these 7000 forbid handling competitive tires, tubes or batteries (Fdg. 16, R. 179; Fdg. 12, R. 173-174; Fdg. 14, R. 176-177). An unknown number of the outlets bound by the last mentioned 2777 agreements are still further prohibited by oral agreements with the appellants from handling other competitive automotive accessories (Fdg. 18, R. 179).

The outlets covered by agreements purchased from appellants $66,000,000 worth of gasoline, tires, tubes, batteries and other accessories in 1947. The following table details both the quantity volume and the approximate dollar volume of business done by the appellants and these outlets for that year and the year preceding it (Fdg. 20, R. 180).

Appellants' sales of gasoline through dealers constituted 6.7% of the total taxable gallonage sold in 1946 in the Western area (R. 122, App. Br. 25). Appellants' company-operated service stations' sales in 1946 constituted 6.8% of the total taxable gallonage sold in the area (R. 122, App. Br. 25). Combining the percentage sold under agreements with the percentage sold in company-operated stations, appellants' retail sales amounted to 13.5% of the total sales in the area in that year. Taking their industrial sales into consideration, appellants' full percentage of the gasoline market in the area in 1946 was 23%. (Fdg. 25, R. 182, App. Br. 25).

Under the appellants' exclusive agreements and sales practices practically all sales of other products produced or sponsored by appellants were tied into gasoline sales. All but 742 of appellants' agreements forbidding purchases of competitors' gasoline also forbid purchases of competitors' other petroleum products (Fdgs. 11-17, R. 172-179). Appellants dealer sales in 1946 of lubricating oil were 5% of the total taxable sales in that area (App. Br. 27). Adding sales by appellants' company-operated stations the percentage becomes 8.8% of that total (App. Br. 31). 2777 of the 7000 such gasoline and oil agreements prohibit the sale of competitors' tires, tubes or batteries (Fdg. 16, R. 179; Fdg. 12, R. 173-174; Fdg. 14, R. 176-177). Furthermore, appellants sell no tires, or batteries, to a dealer unless the dealer signs what is called a Dealer Agreement-TBA which restricts him not only as to tires, tubes and batteries, but as to gasoline and petroleum products as well (R. 1075, App. Br. 17, R. 176-177). Appellants' dealer sales of tires within the Western area in 1946 were 2% of total replacement tire shipments in the area (R. 123, App. Br. 27). Adding here the sales of appellants' company-operated stations the percentage becomes 3.9% (R. 123). Appellants' dealer sales of batteries in the Western area in 1946 were 1.8% of total replacement battery sales in the area (R. 123, App. Br. 28). Adding the sales of appellants' company-operated stations the percentage total is 4.6% (R. 123). Appellants will sell automobile accessories other than tires, tubes and batteries only to dealers who sell appellants' gasoline (R. 1075, App.

Br. 17). As we have said, a number of outlets who are bound by agreements to purchase no competitor's petroleum products, tires, tubes, or batteries, are still further bound by oral agreements to handle no competitor's other automotive accessories unless appellants are unable to furnish them (Fdg. 18, R. 179). There are no satisfactory figures for comparison of accessory sales.

Appellants' six major competitors have adopted similar exclusive-dealing programs (App. Br. 22-23). These six majors distribute through 20,502 dealer outlets and 383 company-operated outlets (App. Br. 20). Adding appellants' 5937 dealer outlets and 1063 company-operated outlets, they together with these six other majors distribute through 27,885, or 76%, of the total 36,500 retail gasoline outlets in the Western area (Fdg. 19, R. 179, 101, 1061-2, 1763-1777, 1064, App. Br. 20). These six companies together with appellants, the largest of all, now share 55% of the total taxable gasoline gallonage sold in the Western area in their sales through dealer-operated and company-operated retail outlets alone.[5]

The pertinent terms of the five types of written agreements currently used by appellants are:[6]

[5] Appellants' six major competitors sold through retail outlets 1,709,874,556 gallons. Appellants sold through retail outlets 542,467,000 gallons. The total 2,252,341,556 represents 35.98% of the total taxable gallonage sold in the area. (App. Br. 20, 25, R. 123)

Adding only appellants industrial sales, the figure is more than 63% (R. 182, App. Br. 25). The record does not show the industrial sales of the six other majors.

The petroleum products to meet Dealer's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils, and other petroleum products sold by [Standard] to its dealers generally in Dealer's vicinity.

DISTRIBUTOR AGREEMENT (Fdg. 12, R. 173):[8]

Company [i. e., Standard] agrees to sell to Distributor, and Distributor agrees to buy from Company and stock and offer for sale all of Distributor's requirements of petroleum products used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor in the conduct of his business on the premises hereinafter described. The petroleum products to meet Distributor's requirements hereunder shall be those brands of gasoline, lubricating oils and other petroleum products currently sold at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc., in Distributor's vicinity, and Distributor agrees not to store, handle, distribute, or sell any other brand or brands of petroleum products at or from the stations.

[7] Appellants have 1,656 agreements with independent dealers in the form of the Dealer Agreement (Fdg. 16, R. 178; Govt. Ex. 1, R. 1301). This form of agreement came into use about 1938 (Fdg. 9, R. 171).

[8] Appellants have 556 agreements with independent dealers in the form of their Distributor Agreement (Fdg. 16, R. 178; Govt. Ex. 2, R. 1304). Agreements in this form came into use about 1934, and since 1944 have been gradually replaced and superseded by other forms of agreement (Fdg. 8-9, R. 171).

Company agrees to sell or consign to Distributor and Distributor agrees to purchase or receive from Company, and stock and offer for sale, all of Distributor's requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Distributor on the premises above described. The tires, tubes and batteries to be supplied Distributor hereunder shall be Company's regular line of Atlas Tires, Atlas Tubes and Atlas Batteries currently sold at service stations operated by Company in Distributor's vicinity. Company will deliver to Distributor such other Atlas merchandise currently sold by Company at service stations operated by Standard Stations, Inc., that Distributor wishes to handle hereunder, in quantities necessary in opinion of Company to meet the station's trade requirements. Whether tires, tubes, batteries and other non-petroleum merchandise which Distributor handles hereunder shall be consigned or sold to Distributor shall depend on Company's current policies, but Company will allow Distributor the commissions or the equivalent thereof in differentials below Company's selling price therefor, as set forth in the attached schedule marked Schedule 'A' and hereby made a part hereof. This schedule may be modified from time to time by Company. All tires, tubes, and batteries sold or consigned to Distributor hereunder shall be sold by Distributor at not less than Company's authorized prices therefor * * *

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS AND EQUIPMENT AGREEMENT:[9]

(The provisions of this form with respect to the dealer's purchases of petroleum products are identical with those in the Dealer Agreement, supra (Fdg. 13, R. 175).

DEALER AGREEMENT TBA (Fdg. 15, R. 178):[10]

(The Dealer Agreement TBA requires the dealer to buy from Standard all its requirements of petroleum products, defined as "those brands of such products generally sold by [Standard] to its dealers" (Fdg. 14, R. 176).)

Company [i. e., Standard] agrees to sell or consign to Dealer and Dealer agrees to purchase or receive from Company, and stock and offer for sale, all Dealer's requirements of tires, tubes, and batteries used or sold or bought to be used or sold by Dealer on said premises. The tires, tubes and batteries to be supplied Dealer hereunder shall be those lines supplied by Company from time to time to its dealers generally. Company will deliver to Dealer such other merchandise currently sold by Company that Dealer wishes to handle hereunder, in quantities necessary in opinion

[9] Appellants have 912 agreements in the form of its Petroleum Products and Equipment Agreement (Fdg. 16, R. 178). The form of agreement came into use in 1944 (Fdg. 9, R. 171).

[10] Appellants have 2,221 agreements with dealers in the form of their Dealer Agreement TBA (Fdg. 16, R. 178). This form came into use about 1944 and has gradually replaced and superseded the Distributor Agreement form (Fdg. 9, R. 171). Additionally, the language of the form with respect to automotive accessories differs only slightly from that contained in the Distributor Agreement.

of Company to meet Dealer's requirements at said premises. Whether tires, tubes, batteries and other non-petroleum merchandise which Dealer handles hereunder shall be consigned or sold to Dealer shall depend on Company's current policies but Company will allow Dealer the commissions, or the equivalent thereof in differentials below Company's selling price therefor, as set forth in the attached Schedule 'A'. Company may modify this schedule from time to time. All tires, tubes, and batteries sold or consigned to Dealer hereunder shall be sold by Dealer at not less than Company's authorized retail prices therefor * * *

SUBLEASE AGREEMENT (Fdg. 15, R. 178):[11]

Lessee shall handle and sell on the leased premises only such petroleum products as are sold lessee by lessor and agrees not to store, handle, sell or distribute on or from said premises any petroleum products of any description other than those petroleum products sold to lessee by lessor (Fdg. 15, R. 178).

In addition to the 7,145 written agreements appellants have oral agreements with 742 independent dealers pursuant to which the dealer agreed to handle and sell only appellants' gasoline (Fdg. 17, R. 179). Appellants also entered into various other oral agreements, the number of which is unknown, with some of the dealers with whom they had executed "Dealer Agreements TBA" and "Distributor Agreements." Such oral agreements provide that the dealer will acquire from appellants, so long as they are able to furnish them, such automotive accessories, other than tires, tubes, and batteries, as he might require for use or sale at the retail outlet operated by him. (Fdg. 18, R. 179).

Appellants "persuaded, induced and influenced" independent dealers to enter into the foregoing written and oral agreements by various means and methods. Among these means and methods were (a) lending money without interest or at less than current interest rates, (b) making gifts of money, (c) making loans portions of which were later forgiven, (d) buying equipment from the dealer and thereafter furnishing new equipment without charge or at less than cost. In many instances such action was taken by appellants for the purpose of displacing competitive products then being handled by the dealer or for the purpose of precluding the acquisition of the dealer's outlet by a competitor of appellants. (Fdg. 22, R. 181).[12]

[12] Appellants' assignment of error (Assigned 3(h), R. 1869) to this finding is in flat contradiction of the admissions of their answer. The complaint charged (Complaint, Par. 33, R. 9) in almost the precise language of the finding that appellants used the methods set forth above to persuade, induce, and influence independent dealers to enter into agreements. Appellants' answer (Answer, Par. 24, R. 94) admitted that in certain cases they employed those methods and that they may have been one of the reasons why dealers entered into agreements. Appellants denied only that they had made gifts of money or forgiven portions of loans "save in rare instances," none subsequent to about May 1, 1946.

The district court found "the intent, purpose and effect of the exclusive supply provisions of the written and oral agreements . . . have been to prevent the 'independent dealer' operating under said agreements from handling any 'petroleum products,' tires, tubes, batteries and miscellaneous accessories other than those supplied or sponsored by [appellants]" (Fdg. 31, R. 185).

The appellants policed the market to enforce the agreements. Appellants' representatives looked through dealers' stations to find whether they were handling competitive products, threatened to replace dealers who handled competitive products, and in fact did so (R. 495-511, 559, 713-719, 722, 745-747, 758, 766, 775, 805-807, 811-812, 815-816). Suppliers were actually deprived of sales and many which had made sales to specified stations before they entered into appellants' agreements could not sell them afterward (R. 301-302, 306-307, 309, 339-344, 346-353, 356-362, 388-390, 396-412, 469-474, 484-485, 518-544, 571-575, 583-589, 612-613, 620-624, 634-637, 657-661, 663-666, 669-670, 677-678, 685-691). The district court made several findings based on such evidence. It found specifically, that "numerous manufacturers and producers of 'petroleum products' and 'automotive accessories' located both inside and outside of the States of the 'Western area' other than those producers and manufacturers whose products are marketed by defendants, are prepared to and have attempted to sell their respective brands of 'petroleum prod-lets', tires, tubes, batteries, and miscellaneous accessories to 'independent dealers' within the Western area who have entered into the written and oral agreements . . . ." (Fdg. 29, R. 184.) It likewise found that "in many instances direct sales representatives of manufacturers and producers have unsuccessfully attempted to sell 'independent dealers' who were and still are parties to the written or oral agreements" (Fdg. 29, R. 184). Finally it found that "the direct flow of interstate commerce has been effected by the written and oral agreements . . . . by denying the manufacturers of competitive products the right to sell the 'independent dealers' at the retail outlets" (Fdg. 32, R. 185).

The agreements entered into by appellants have directly affected and unreasonably restrained the course of interstate commerce in petroleum products and automotive accessories (Fdg. 32, R. 185). The written and oral agreements contemplate the movement and distribution of goods in interstate commerce. There is a constant flow in interstate commerce of the products produced and distributed by appellants. (Fdg. 23, R. 181).

The petroleum products sold and distributed in the Western area by appellants comprise both bulk products and packaged goods. Appellants supply bulk products to dealers in the Western area by various transportation methods, including tank cars, tank trucks, barges, and tankers. In some instances appellants supply dealers by transportation directly from their refineries to the dealer's storage tanks. In most instances appellants transport their products to various bulk plants owned and operated by them throughout the Western area for distribution from such plants to the 23 distribution divisions into which they have divided the area. (Fdg. 26, R. 182).

Packaged oils and greases sold by appellants are packaged at its three refineries in California, or at packaging plants at Willbridge, Oregon and Point Wells, Washington. The packaged oils and greases are distributed by appellants directly from these points to the four distribution divisions into which they have divided the Western area. (Fdg. 27, R. 183).

Automotive accessories, purchased by appellants from various concerns located both within and without the Western area, are shipped by these manufacturers to eight accessory warehouses maintained by appellants. These eight warehouses are located, three in California, two in Washington, and one each in Arizona, Oregon and Utah. From these warehouses, appellants distribute the accessory products to the dealers at their retail outlets in the Western area. In all but two instances the accessory warehouses serve dealers in more than one State. (Fdg. 28, R. 183.)

Holding Below and Relief Granted

The court below concluded that appellants' written and oral agreements have had the necessary and intended effect "of denying the independent dealers access to competitors' products and of locking out such dealers from the sources of products originating in interstate commerce" (Concl. 7, R. 187), and "of denying manufacturers and suppliers of petroleum and automotive accessories [13] competitive to those manufactured or sponsored by [appellants] access to a substantial number of potential outlets for their products in the seven states of the Western area" (Concl. 8, R. 187). It concluded also that "the number of outlets and the volume of business in petroleum products and automotive accessories foreclosed to competition by the [appellants'] written and oral agreements . . . . is substantial whether considered comparatively or not" (Concl. 9, R. 187).

The court's holding was that appellants' exclusive dealing contracts constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act (R. 130).

On appellants' motion to reconsider on the ground that the case was controlled by this Court's decision in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495 (decided on the same day the district court's opinion was filed), the court filed a supplemental opinion analyzing that decision, and concluding that it was without application to this case (R. 159-167).

[13] Gasoline and tires, tubes and batteries are included in these terms (Fdgs. 5C and D, R. 169-170. See supra, p. 6).

The district court granted the relief prayed for by the Government. It adjudged unlawful and void all provisions in the agreements, written and oral, between appellants and the dealers, which bound the dealers to buy all their requirements of petroleum products and automotive accessories from appellants. It enjoined appellants from enforcing such provisions in existing agreements, and from entering into further agreements whereby they sold petroleum products or automotive accessories to any dealer upon the condition that the dealer would not sell at his retail outlet products other than those sold or sponsored by appellants (R. 188-193).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I

Appellants' exclusive dealing contracts completely destroy the opportunity of other sellers of similar products to compete for the patronage of the dealer outlets contractually tied to appellants. In addition, they deprive those outlets of the opportunity to buy in a competitive market. The only issue is whether the restraint of trade effected by these contracts is unreasonable since they affect a substantial segment of the market. Agreements which fence off from competition a substantial segment of the market constitute in effect a compulsory boycott of competitors. Moreover, the purpose for which they were employed in this case is the same as in the boycott cases. Appellants possess a power comparable to that present in International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392, and the effects of appellants' agreements have been far more substantial. United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, does not reject the view that these agreements as here used are unreasonable because of the substantial commerce affected. On the contrary, since appellants' competitors were shut off from a large segment of the market the agreements in this case fall squarely within the test laid down in that case. Appellants' request for an extensive economic inquiry to establish the claim that the agreements are reasonable because they permit wider distribution at lower prices is itself unreasonable, disregards the effect on competitors and dealers, and was rejected in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1. That some of appellants' competitors also use exclusive dealing contracts emphasizes the suppressive effect of such agreements on competitors who do not or cannot use them, and points up the unreasonableness of such contracts. In Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Co., 324 U. S. 746, 753, this court termed an assertion that competitors' like actions established legality a "startling conclusion". And it is no defense to unfair competitive practices to say that rivals might protect their trade by adoption of equivalent practices. Federal Trade Commission v. Winsted Co., 258 U. S. 483, 493.

II

Exclusive dealing agreements are within the purview of Section 3 of the Clayton Act since in practical effect they are agreements not to purchase the goods of a competitor. International Machines Co. v. United States, 298 U. S. 131. Likewise within the purview of Section 3 are such agreements even where confined to all purchases at a particular outlet since they are within the literal language of the section, its purpose and policy.

Since the Clayton Act reaches in its incipiency conduct which violates the Sherman Act, proof of violation of the latter Act by exclusive dealing contracts establishes a violation of the Clayton Act. Even if no violation of the Sherman Act were established, the facts here nevertheless establish a violation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act. In addition, in one of their affirmative defenses appellants stated they would be excluded from the market if they were forbidden to use exclusive dealing contracts while their competitors were permitted to do so. If the largest distributor in the industry would be so affected, the consequences of these agreements upon those who do not or cannot use them are clear. A further consequence is to induce other competitors also to utilize exclusive dealing contracts, thus further foreclosing the market. This admission and other facts which have been established sufficiently demonstrate that the effect of the agreements may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. Section 3 of the Clayton Act requires no more.

III

The judgment should not except from its operation contracts made between the appellants and dealers located in California. The court has jurisdiction to enjoin local acts which restrain the free flow of interstate commerce into the State of California. The practice covered by the exemption granted in Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, was not one which restrained interstate commerce. In any event, it is doubtful if the Court would today grant such an exemption. Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683.

ARGUMENT

Both the appellants and the Government agree that the court below held that the exclusive dealing contracts entered into by the appellants with approximately 6,000 independent dealers throughout the Western area constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act because those restraints affect a substantial segment of interstate commerce.

This was the theory of the Government's case in the court below. Because this theory was sometimes advanced in the form of a contention that these restrictions were per se violative of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, some misunderstanding arose in the mind of the trial judge as to the exact nature of the Government's theory. The trial court's impression apparently was that the Government urged that these contracts in and of themselves, irrespective of the extent of their effect on interstate commerce, were in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act and Section 3 of the Clayton Act. Because the trial judge had this impression there are portions of his opinion which echo the views expressed by him throughout the trial rejecting this theory which he attributed to the Government. But the Government intended to advance no such theory and we agree with the appellants that the basic question in this case is whether, as the District Court held, these practices restrain substantial segments of interstate commerce and are therefore unreasonable and in violation of the sections of the Acts in question.

We start then, as do the appellants, with the trial judge's ruling that the appellants' exclusive dealing contracts which affect the distribution of gasoline, petroleum products and automotive accessories are violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts because they unreasonably restrain a substantial part of the interstate commerce in this field.

We urge in Point I of this argument that the restrictive practices here involved so affect such a substantial segment of interstate commerce that they violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act. We proceed in Point II to show that these restrictive practices, affecting commerce as they do, were violative of Section 3 of the Clayton Act. In Point III we show that no part of the judgment was beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

I

Foreclosure of Competition From a Substantial Segment of the Market by Exclusive Dealing Contracts Constitutes an Unreasonable Restraint of Trade Prohibited by Section 1 of the Sherman Act

The approximately 8,000 agreements, written and oral, obligating approximately 6,000 independent retail outlets to purchase and stock for resale to the consuming public only the products of the appellants, completely destroy the opportunity of other sellers of similar products to compete for the patronage of those outlets. In addition, they deprive those outlets of the right to buy, and to derive the benefits that flow from buying, in a competitive market. Clearly, therefore, they completely suppress competition to the detriment of both the competing suppliers and the captive outlets. The only issue is the extremely narrow one of whether such a series of exclusive dealing contracts "unreasonably" restrains trade, as that term has been used since Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1.

"* * * the interest of the consumer is not all that determines the 'reasonableness' of the contract 'in restraint of trade.' It is also unlawful to exclude from the market any of those who supply it * * * and it is no excuse for doing so that their exclusion will result in benefits to consumers or to the producers who remain" (Fashion Originator's Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, 114 F. (2d) 80, 85 (C. A. 2), affirmed 312 U. S. 457). A fundamental purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit "contracts" which "probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage in trade and commerce—in a word to preserve the right of freedom to trade" (United States v. Colgate & Co.; 250 U. S. 300, 307). Freedom to trade includes unrestricted access to the market. What does it avail a trader to have for sale a better gasoline, a better battery, or a better mousetrap if access to the market is denied to him! What protection is there for a buyer if he is denied the advantages of purchasing in a market in which unfettered competition exists! Recognizing this, the Court said, in United States v. Yellow Cab, 332 U. S. 218, 226, that the Act "is designed to sweep away all appreciable obstructions [in the channels of interstate trade] so that the statutory policy of free trade might be effectively achieved."

Agreements which fence off a substantial segment of the market from competing suppliers and which deny the fenced-in outlets the opportunity to trade with fenced-out suppliers directly impinge upon the right of freedom to trade and are, therefore, in their very nature, in derogation of the concept of free competition in an open market.

Where, as here, there are thousands of such agreements they constitute a restraint similar in character to boycotts—which have been declared unreasonable without any inquiry as to injury or power to injure. Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600; Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, 312 U. S. 457. By precluding the captive outlets from patronizing competing suppliers, appellants' agreements accomplish a compulsory boycott. The boycotting nature of these agreements becomes more apparent both as their number increases and as other competitors resort to similar measures. In this manner, retail outlets are progressively closed to all remaining competitors, particularly those who will not or cannot adopt such tactics. The effect from the point of view of these competitors is no different from that which would follow if the closed outlets were to agree among themselves to deal only with a few large suppliers.

Appellants give short shrift to the boycott cases on the ground that the intent in those cases differs from the intent in the present case. But the difference is not so great as to warrant such cavalier treatment. The district court found as a fact that the "intent, purpose and effect" of the exclusive supply provisions of appellants' agreements were to prevent independent dealers from handling products other than those offered for sale by appellants (R. 185). The independent dealers were "persuaded, induced, and influenced" to enter into the agreements by financial gifts or concessions from appellants. Appellants in many instances took such action for the express purpose of displacing competitive products handled by the independent dealer or of precluding the acquisition of the dealer's outlet by a competitor of appellants. (R. 181.) Appellants' extension of these agreements over a substantial segment of the available retail outlets with such intent (R. 185) has the necessary consequence of injuring competitors. Since appellants must be presumed to have intended the necessary and foreseeable consequences of their acts (United States v. Griffith Amusement Co., 334 U. S. 100, 104), the specific intent characteristic of boycott cases is present here.

The present case is also closely analogous to International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392. There the Salt Company leased 900 patented salt dispensing machines on the condition that the lessee purchase from the lessor its supply of salt for use in the machines. The annual purchases of such salt amounted to approximately $500,000. There was no showing of the percentage of the market which this amount represented. The Court stated that "it is unreasonable per se to foreclose competitors from any substantial market" (p. 396), and held that the Salt Company was not entitled to introduce evidence to show "whether the restraint was unreasonable within the Sherman Act, or substantially lessened competition, or tended to create a monopoly in salt within the Clayton Act" (p. 396).

Appellants distinguish the Salt case on the ground that the Salt Company possessed monopoly power by virtue of its ownership of patents and this power was used as a leverage over the salt market. The present case is not substantially different. In the Salt case, since competing salt dispensing machines were available (Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488), leverage over the market was not absolute. While appellants do not have absolute monopoly power, nevertheless, they do control the largest segment of the market, 23%, which, when considered in the light of the fact that the remaining 77% is shared by at least 80 other suppliers, necessarily gives them an economic power which tends toward monopoly power.[14] The trial court found that appellants "have persuaded, induced, and influenced" independent dealers to enter into exclusive dealing contracts by various means, such as "(a) lending money without interest or at rates below current interest rates; (b) by making loans, portions of which were later forgiven; (c) by making gifts of money; (d) by buying equipment from the independent dealer and thereafter furnishing new equipment to said dealer without charge, or by (e) selling equipment to said dealer at less than cost" (R. 181). In addition, appellants admit that their "capital investment in the land and equipment of dealer stations is approximately $16,500,000" (Br. 10, fn. 11). They also admit that in many cases they install certain equipment for these dealers such as pumps, tanks, air compressors, air and water wells, hoists, buildings, canopies, rest rooms, lubricating oil equipment, drinking fountains, special lighting, painting and signs (Br. 9). These facts directly relating to the challenged agreements amply demonstrate the scope of appellants' power.

[14] Appellants supply 23% of the gasoline sold in the Western area (R. 182). The next 6 largest companies supply some 40% (at App. Br. 20, R. 122). The balance is supplied by the remaining competitors, 70 of whom have an annual volume of over 1,000,000 gallons (App. Br. 20, 21).

The difference in the source of the power, be it patent power, buying power, economic power, or otherwise, is immaterial. In United States v. Griffith, 334 U. S. 100, it was held that exhibitors of motion pictures, with theatres in 85 towns, in 53 of which there were no competing theatres, had violated the Sherman Act in negotiating contracts for film exhibition which restricted the competitive opportunities of other theatre owners. In reaching this conclusion the Court quoted the language of the Salt case, that it was unreasonable to foreclose competitors from any substantial market, and added that "the antitrust laws are as much violated by the prevention of competition as by its destruction" (p. 107). It also stated that large-scale buying could not "be used to stifle competition by denying competitors less favorably situated access to the market" (p. 108). We think the Griffith case, as well as the Salt case, makes it clear that it is the existence of power and not the manner in which it is gained that is the crucial factor.

Even apart from the larger number of exclusive dealing contracts, and the larger dollar volume of trade here than in the Salt case, and the percentage of the industry, here involved, appellants' agreements have had a substantially more severe impact upon competing suppliers and retailers than the exclusive dealing provisions in that case. The Salt Company had never refused to lease its machines in instances where the lessee objected to the tying clause. United States v. International Salt Co., 6 F. R. D. 302, 306. Here, appellants will not do business except upon their own terms. They will not sell their gasoline, tires, tubes, batteries or accessories to any independent retailer unless he will agree to deal exclusively in appellants' gasoline.[15] In the Salt case, the lessor did not enforce the exclusive dealing provision (332 U. S. 392). In the present case the exclusive dealing provisions were policed and enforced (supra, p. 16). The leases in the Salt case permitted the lessee to purchase sale from other suppliers if the prices of such other suppliers were lower than the prices of the Salt Company (332 U. S. 396-397). There is no comparable provision in appellants' agreements. There, the Salt Company endeavored to pre-empt a segment of the market only in respect of sales of salt, a product which it produced. Appellants' practices are more extensive. Appellants produce only petroleum products, but, using them as leverage, appellants foreclose the market in a wide line of non-petroleum products—tires, tubes, batteries, and other types of goods which they themselves do not even manufacture, but buy from various manufacturing concerns and which have in common only that they are produced for consumption in conjunction with automotive vehicles. Appellants thus move into and foreclose a market in products which they themselves do not produce. The foothold which their production of gasoline, greases, and oils affords them is exploited by their exclusive dealing arrangements to restrain trade in automotive accessories generally.

[15] Appellants' policy forbids sales of gasoline to an independent dealer who handles other brands of gasoline (R. 1127). Furthermore, appellants will not sell automotive accessories to a dealer who does not handle its gasoline (Idem.). Appellants will not sell tires, tubes and batteries to a dealer unless the dealer will sign a Dealer Agreement TBA (R. 1075).

The similarity between the boycott cases and the Salt case and the case at bar impels the conclusion that the restraint in this case constitutes at least as substantial and detrimental an obstruction to commerce as existed in those cases. There, as this Court pointed out in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, the restraints were held unreasonable without reference to the quantum of commerce involved. We do not have to go so far as to contend that a similar rule should apply in the present case. However, we submit that in view of the character of appellants' restraint, proof of an effect upon a substantial segment of commerce is sufficient to render the restraint unreasonable without any further showing.

The recent decision in United States v. Columbia Steel Co., 334 U. S. 495, is not inconsistent with our view of the law. There the Government sought to enjoin as violative of both Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act the acquisition by the United States Steel Company of the assets of Consolidated Steel Corporation, an independent fabricator of steel on the West Coast. The Government contended that the acquisition would exclude competitors from a substantial segment of the market represented by Consolidated's purchases of rolled steel products. In rejecting this argument, the majority of the Court determined that Consolidated had accounted for only 5 million dollars, or three percent of the annual demand for rolled steel products within the area of its operations (p. 527), and therefore concluded that the foreclosure of the market was unsubstantial. The approach of the majority of this Court made clear that its examination of the facts was directed to a determination as to the substantiality of the restricted competition, and that it was only upon this basis that it concluded there was no "unreasonable restraint of trade." There is nothing in the opinion to suggest that, had a substantial segment of the market been foreclosed, the majority of the Court would nevertheless have found it necessary to conduct further inquiry into the "reasonableness" of the restraint. The acquisition would not have been justifiable on the ground that it would be advantageous to United States Steel, or that the public would be benefited and lower prices result (Infra, p. 36). Had a substantial segment of the market been foreclosed, the conclusion would have followed, in the light of existing precedents, that such a foreclosure was unreasonable and beyond justification.

The basis upon which the majority distinguished the Yellow Cab case illustrates the correctness of this view. In Yellow Cab, the complaint charged a combination and conspiracy to restrain trade with the intent and purpose of monopolizing the cab business in certain cities and, on a motion to dismiss, this allegation was accepted as true. On this ground, the majority opinion in Columbia Steel remarked that in the Yellow Cab case the amount of commerce was immaterial, and, of course, it followed from this fact that "Nothing in the Yellow Cab case supports the theory that all exclusive dealing arrangements are illegal per se" (p. 523).[15a] We do not contend otherwise.

The Columbia Steel case said, in substance, that the legality of the acquisition of Consolidated was to be determined by whether the "effect of such control is to unreasonably restrict the opportunity of competitors to market their products" (p. 524). We think it an ineluctable conclusion that the obstructions to commerce in this case must necessarily unreasonably restrict the opportunity of appellants' competitors, and especially the smaller competitors who among them supply only 37 per cent of the gasoline in the Western area (R. 122, 182, at App. Br. 20).[16] These agreements particularly affect the smaller competitors because appellants' major competitors have also fenced off retail outlets as private preserves of their own. Markets are not limitless and any substantial foreclosure therefrom obviously has serious consequences on a vendor's ability to market. That this is so would appear as patent an economic fact as the proposition "that the competitive opportunities of certain merchants were injured when they had to pay * * * substantially more for their goods than their competitors had to pay," a proposition which this Court described as "obvious" in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 46. To require the extensive economic inquiry requested by appellants in order to establish such an elemental economic proposition as that for which we contend would seem senseless, and accomplish nothing but the erection of a useless and wasteful impediment to the effective enforcement of the antitrust laws. As this Court said in the Morton Salt case "It would greatly handicap effective enforcement of the Act to require testimony to show what we believe to be self evident * * *" (p. 50).

There is nothing in the Columbia Steel case which requires the consideration in this case of the additional and highly speculative economic inquiry appellants demand. The purpose of this additional inquiry, reduced to its lowest common denominator, is to determine whether the exclusive outlet is the most economical method of distributing gasoline to the public. It is plain that this line of argument is without avail, and does not establish the "reasonableness" of any trade restraint. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 48, in first enunciating the "rule of reason," held irrelevant arguments that the alleged restraints had in fact produced a wide distribution of products at prices below that which would have otherwise prevailed. The Sherman Act provided that competition should be the law of trade, and the Act is not to be judicially repealed by asserting that competition is economically wasteful, and that trade-restraining practices produce economic benefits. United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 221; United States v. Union Pacific R. Co. 226 U. S. 61, 88. We find nothing in the Columbia Steel case which suggests that this long established rule has been changed.

The appellants introduced testimony which they contend demonstrates the reasonableness of their exclusive dealing contracts but which actually lends weight to the Government's position. This evidence was introduced for the purpose of showing that their major competitors employed exclusive dealing contracts, the theory being that the widespread nature of these practices suggests their reasonableness. To support factually this line of argument, appellants introduced the testimony of officials of their six largest competitors.[17] Through the testimony of these witnesses, appellants elicited that their respective companies each sold petroleum products and automotive accessories in most or all of the seven Western States, and that each entered into leases and agreements with independent dealers containing explicit provisions or affirmatively contemplating that the dealers should sell only the products of the single oil company.[18]

The theory that trade practices, otherwise illegal, may be validated by pointing to the fact that [17] The competitors, and their officials who appeared, are: Tide Water Associated Oil Company (McCall, R. 825); Shell Oil Co., Inc. (Hugill, R. 863); General Petroleum Corporation (Christy, R. 871); The Texas Company (Wharton, R. 876); Union Oil Company of California (Seeley, R. 879; Rogers, R. 884); and Richfield Oil Corporation (Will, R. 885).

[18] Appellants concede in their brief that "the dealer contracts and sublease arrangements of Standard's principal competitors are in general similar to those of Standard." (Br. 23). These leases and agreements were introduced as Appellants Exs. E and F (Tide Water Associated Oil Company, R. 1518, 1524); H and I (Shell Oil Co., Inc., R. 1538, 1554); K and L competitors also engage in them was considered a "startling conclusion" by this Court in Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Co., 324 U. S. 746, 753. There, it was held that a seller may not justify his use of a basing-point system of pricing, otherwise illegal under the Clayton Act, by showing that other competitors are violating the law by maintaining like systems. Monopolizing practices cannot be justified on the ground that a business rival is a "vicious monopoly" which can only be fought by resort to similar practices. United States Tel. Co. v. Central Union Tel. Co., 202 Fed. 66, 74-75 (C. A. 6), certiorari denied, 229 U. S. 620; see, also, Farmers Livestock Commission Co. v. United States, 54 F. 2d 375, 379 (E. D. Ill.).

Nor is it true that all competitors of appellants pursue similar exclusive dealing practices. There are many independent sellers of petroleum products and automotive accessories which do not resort to such arrangements.[19] Similarly, it is no (General Petroleum Corporation, R. 1569, 1578); N and O (The Texas Company, R. 1590, 1603; Q and R (Union Oil Company of California, R. 1611, 1615); and U Richfield Oil Corporation, R. 1621).

[19] e.g., The MacMillan Petroleum Corporation endeavors to sell its oils and greases to all types of resale accounts (R. 314). Appellants' Ex. II (R. 1675) lists 79 companies which sold over 1,000,000 taxable gallons of gasoline in the Western area in 1946, and their Ex. GGG (R. 1864) listed 69 sellers of their own brand of lubricating oil. There is no proof that any of these sellers insists on exclusive outlets. Appellants Ex. FFF (R. 1863), showing the extent to which competitive automotive accessories are in fact surreptitiously sold at appellants' outlets, establishes that competitors are willing to sell on a nonexclusive basis.

answer to say that all competitors might resort to such practices. Federal Trade Commission v. Keppel & Bro., 291 U. S. 304, 312-313; Federal Trade Commission v. Winsted Co., 258 U. S. 483, 493.

If the "reasonableness" of a trade restraint could be established by the widespread nature of its use, anomalous results would ensue. Trade restraints, otherwise illegal, would be validated if they had been so widely copied as to constitute a genuine menace to trade. A small group of powerful traders, each engaging in restraints of trade, might validate their practices by each pointing to those of the others—figuratively, all lifting one another by the bootstraps.

The officials of appellants' six largest competitors, who were called as witnesses by appellants, in the main furnished: (1) figures disclosing the respective numbers of independent dealers with whom each had exclusive-dealing arrangements during each of the years 1937 to 1946, inclusive; and (2) figures disclosing the gallonage or dollar value of various petroleum products and automotive accessories sold by each at retail during the years 1937 to 1946, inclusive.[20] [20] The request, in the form of a questionnaire, sent to each of the six competitors is Appellants' Ex. B (R. 1515). The responses of the six were introduced as appellants' Exs. C (Tide Water Associated Oil Company, R. 1516), G (Shell Oil Co., Inc., R. 1534), J (General Petroleum Corporation, R. 1566), M (The Texas Company, R. 1589), P and S (Union Oil Company of California, R. 1609, 1618A, and T (Richfield Oil Corporation, R. 1619).

Presumably, these compilations of figures were designed to show that each of the six leading rivals of appellants had not suffered competitively over the ten-year period; that this was demonstrable by the fact that each had about as many exclusive outlets, relative to those of appellants, in 1946 as in 1937; and that each had increased gallonage or dollar volume of their products during the period.

We fail to see how any showing as to the maintenance of the competitive position of the six leading competitors of appellants, each of whom admittedly pursues the same restrictive practices as appellants do, establishes the reasonableness of such practices. The purpose of the antitrust laws is not to preserve the positions of powerful competitors all of whom engage in similar trade restrictions. Disastrous effects to trade are to be anticipated from an acceptance of any claim by appellants that their exclusive dealing arrangements are "reasonable" because powerful competitors follow the same practices. For, though there are undoubtedly a small number of economically powerful petroleum producers which, like appellants, seek exclusive outlets, it is also true that there are many producers of the variety of petroleum products and automotive accessories in which appellants are interested who lack the ability to obtain their own exclusive outlets. The competition of the many would soon be lost if appellants' practices should be considered legal solely because a few other powerful rivals also pursue them. The existence of similar restraints by powerful competitors does not establish reasonableness. In United States v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp., 282 U. S. 30, a contract in use by more than half the industry was held unreasonably in restraint of trade, and the fact that it was evolved after six years of discussion and experimentation was deemed to have no bearing on its "reasonableness."

II

Foreclosure of Competition From a Substantial Segment of the Market by Exclusive Dealing Contracts Constitutes a Substantial Lessening of Competition and a Tendency to Monopoly Prohibited by Section 3 of the Clayton Act

Section 3 of the Clayton Act makes it unlawful for any person to sell or contract to sell goods on condition that the purchaser shall not use or deal in the goods of a competitor of the seller where the effect of such sale or contract of sale or such condition "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." The court below found that appellants' agreements came within and were in violation of this Section. It found that appellants had entered into agreements for the sale of petroleum products and automotive accessories upon condition that the purchaser not deal in the goods of a competitor (R. 185), and concluded that their effect was to "substantially lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in the sale and distribution of petroleum products and automotive accessories" (R. 186). Appellants challenge both the conclusion that the agreements are within the purview of Section 3 and the conclusion that they have the prohibited effect.

Appellants contend that their contracts do not come within the purview of Section 3 of the Clayton Act because the independent dealer agrees only to buy from them "all his requirements" (Br. 82-85). That an agreement requiring a purchaser to purchase his entire requirements from a vendor is an agreement that the purchaser shall not deal in the goods of a competitor was firmly settled in International Machines Corp. v. United States, 298 U. S. 131. That corporation leased its machines on condition that the lessee use therein only cards purchased from it. In meeting an argument similar to that here made, this Court said (p. 135):

> Little need be said of the contention that the condition of appellant's leases does not infringe these prohibitions. It is true that the condition is not in so many words against the use of the cards of a competitor, but is affirmative in form, that the lessee shall use only appellant's cards in the leased machines. But as the lessee can make no use of the cards except with the leased machines, and the specified use of appellant's cards precludes the use of the cards of any competitor, the condition operates in the manner forbidden by the statute.

The same rule was enunciated in International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392, and United

Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, 258 U. S. 451.[21]

Appellants further contend that their exclusive dealing agreements do not come within the purview of Section 3 of the Clayton Act because the agreements are confined in terms to the particular outlet for which the dealer contracts to purchase. These agreements are within the literal language of the section as agreements "that the * * * purchaser * * * shall not * * * deal * * * in the goods * * * of a competitor or competitors of the * * * seller." Appellants point to nothing in the purpose or policy of the Act which would require that the language be given other than a literal interpretation, but rely upon Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair, 261 U. S. 463. There this Court set aside the Commission's order which required the Sinclair Company to cease from its practice of leasing to retail dealers underground tanks and pumps at nominal prices upon condition that the equipment should be used only in conjunction with gasoline supplied by Sinclair. The holding that the tying agreements did not come within the letter of the Clayton Act is distinguishable because there the agreements not to buy the goods of a competitor

---

[21] Lower court cases which have rejected the argument appellants here make are: Radio Corporation v. Lord, 28 F. (2) 257 (C. A. 3), certiorari denied, 278 U. S. 648; Judson L. Thomson Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 150 F. (2d) 952 (C. A. 1), certiorari denied, 326 U. S. 776; Signode Steel Strapping Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 132 F. (2d) 48 (C. A. 4).

were limited to goods for use in a single pump and did not either in terms or practical effect apply to the entire outlet. As the Court said in United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 722, the agreements in the Sinclair case simply "restricted use of a distributor's gasoline tanks." While the Commission found in the Sinclair case, as appellants point out (Br. 83), that the practical effect of the tying contracts was to close the outlets to competitors, the Court specifically rejected that conclusion (pp. 473-474). In this case it is admitted that the intended effect was to close the entire outlet. In any event, this phase of the Sinclair decision appears inconsistent with the more recent decisions of this Court in the International Salt and International Machines cases, supra, where the conditions in the leases of machines were that the lessee would use in connection with them only the supplies of the lessor. The lessees were free to lease competing machines for use side by side at the same location and to purchase identical supplies for use in them from other suppliers.[22]

Appellants finally contend that the exclusive dealing contracts are not in violation of Section 3 because it was not shown that their effect "may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." Since the [22] There were available competing machines in both the International Machines case (298 U. S. at p. 132), and in the International Salt case. See Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger Co., 314 U. S. 488.

Clayton Act was intended to curb in their incipiency agreements within the sphere of the Sherman Act (Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., 258 U. S. 346, 356), it follows that proof of a violation of the Sherman Act proves a violation of the Clayton Act (International Salt Co. v. United States, supra).

Even assuming, arguendo, that a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act has not been established, it is nevertheless clear that appellants' agreements are in violation of the Clayton Act. That Act does not in terms require that the vendor possess a monopoly power to use as a lever before the contracts may be condemned and no such requirement has been read into it. Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane-Houston Co., supra. Nor does the Act or decided cases support the proposition (App. Br. 93) that the prohibited effect can be established only by proof that competitors have been driven out of business, that their size or power has declined, or that the number of their customers or their volume of business has progressively declined. The condemned effect may be shown by other evidence. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392. The Government's proof in this case, as we have shown, conclusively demonstrates a very substantial lessening of competition. However, it is not necessary that the evidence show any more than that the effect of appellants' contracts "may" be to substantially lessen competition. Here appellants admit that such is their effect. One of their affirmative defenses involved the claim that appellants would be excluded from the market if they were forbidden to use exclusive dealing contracts while their competitors were permitted to do so (R. 96). That appellants, the largest distributor in the industry, would be so affected dramatically demonstrates the position of appellants' smaller competitors who do not now use them. The consequence of their use by one competitor, therefore, is to compel others to utilize them with the result of further foreclosing the market to the prejudice of those who do not or cannot use exclusive dealing contracts Signode Steel Strapping Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 132 F. (2d) 48 (C. A. 4). In the Signode Steel case, one of twelve manufacturers of strapping machines leased its machines upon the condition that the lessee not use in the machine any supplies not purchased from the company. The company's principal competitors followed the same practice. In discussing the effect of the company's practice on competition the court said (p. 54):

> * * * And as pointed out by the Commission, the effect of the trade practice of the company is materially increased by reason of the fact that it forms a part of the cumulative effect of the practices of the three leading companies in the tying machine industry, all three of whom were subject to orders by the Commission.

Appellants' admission of the obvious effect of its exclusive dealing contracts confirms the view of the trial court that "we are dealing not with probabilities but with actualities" (R. 165) and serves as a complete answer to appellants' defense that these contracts have been in use for a long time and have not had the prohibited effect. Its admission further demonstrates that there can be no free competition in the Western area until appellants and their competitors have released their captive markets.

Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair, 261 U. S. 463, is not to the contrary. There, the holding was that the tying agreements were not within the purview of the Clayton Act and were not an unfair method of competition within the meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act because "the record does not show that the probable effect of the practice will be unduly to lessen competition" (p. 475). This conclusion was based in part upon the fact that dealers were not only free to enter into similar arrangements for the same location with competing suppliers, but were also free to purchase and install their own tanks and pumps "by investing a comparatively small sum" (p. 474). The Court said "the devices are not expensive—$300 to $500—can be purchased readily of makers and, while convenient, they are not essential" [Italics supplied] (p. 475). The opinion would indicate that the Court was keenly aware of the fact that if it sustained the order and permitted an independent dealer to serve the public through a Sinclair pump a brand of gasoline other than Sinclair, it would in effect be cooperating in the perpetration of a fraud upon the public. There is, of course, no similar problem here—sustaining the judgment does not authorize the perpetration of a fraud. It is one thing to permit an agreement that the gasoline pump may not be used to dispense the gasoline of another company and quite another to claim that an entire outlet must be confined to a single brand in order to prevent consumer deception.

III

The Judgment Properly Enjoins Appellants' Exclusive Dealing Contracts With Their California Dealers

Appellants' contention that the court should have exempted from the operation of the judgment their exclusive dealing contracts with dealers located in California requires little comment. It has long been settled that local acts which have the effect of restraining interstate commerce may be enjoined. Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274; Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; Mandeville Farms v. Crystal Sugar Co., 334 U. S. 219. The closing of retail outlets in the State of California to out-of-State vendors clearly affects interstate commerce by restraining the flow of goods into the State which but for the agreements would ordinarily compete for the trade of such outlets. In this connection the district court specifically found "that numerous manufacturers and producers of 'petroleum products' and 'automotive accessories' located both inside and outside of the States of the 'Western area', other than those producers and manufacturers whose products are marketed by defendants, are prepared to and have attempted to sell their respective brands of 'petroleum products', tires, tubes, batteries and miscellaneous accessories to 'independent dealers' within the Western area who have entered into the written or oral agreements * * *" (Fdg. 29, R. 184). It likewise found that "in many instances direct sales representatives of manufacturers and producers have unsuccessfully attempted to sell 'independent dealers' who were and still are parties to the written or oral agreements." (Fdg. 29, R. 184). Finally it found that "the direct flow of interstate commerce has been effected by the written and oral agreements : . . by denying the manufacturers of competitive products the right to sell the 'independent dealers' at the 'retail outlets.'" (Fdg. 32, R. 185).

Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, upon which appellants rely, is not in point. There the Court exempted local price-fixing combinations from the operation of the judgment. The exempted combinations did not restrain interstate commerce because producers located without the State could nevertheless ship their goods into the State for sale in competition with the producers who were parties to the local price-fixing combinations. Moreover, it is doubtful if such an exemption would be granted today. Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, it is respectfully submitted that the judgment of the district court should be affirmed.

purchasers for a substantial quantity of commodities of like grade and quality. Is illegality to be conclusively inferred, irrespective of what the effect might actually be? Or suppose that the same rule here laid down is applied to corporation A which acquires "the whole or any part of the stock" of corporation B, a competitor. Is illegality to be conclusively inferred, irrespective of what the effect might actually be? If, as Representative Floyd pointed out,[8] the language of the "substantially-lessen-competition" clause in Sections 2 and 3 was taken over from Section 7 of the Act, then is it reasonable to assume that the same criteria of interpretation must be used in dealing with all three sections? If the Court's interpretation of Section 3 is applied to Sections 2(a) and 7, the area of innovation and confusion is immeasurably expanded.

V.

The Court's Interpretation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act Works a Hardship Not Only on Suppliers but on a Multitude of Small Dealer Purchasers.

It is respectfully urged that the Court re-examine the problem from the standpoint of the individual dealer. The Court's opinion recognizes the advantages of requirements contracts to a small buyer, like the service station dealer.[9] But at the conclusion of the opinion the Court says:

> "If in fact it is economically desirable for service stations to confine themselves to the sale of the

---

[8]See footnote 5.

[9]The Court's opinion says (p. 13):

> "Requirements contracts, on the other hand, may well be of economic advantage to buyers as well as to sellers, and thus indirectly of advantage to the consuming public. In the case of the buyer, they may assure supply, afford protection against rises in price, enable long-term planning on the basis of known costs, and obviate the expense and risk of storage in the quantity necessary for a commodity having a fluctuating demand."

petroleum products of a single supplier, they will continue to do so though not bound by contract, and if in fact it is important to retail dealers to assure the supply of their requirements by obtaining the commitment of a single supplier to fulfill them, competition for their patronage should enable them to insist upon such an arrangement without binding them to refrain from looking elsewhere." (pp. 20, 21)

This, it is respectfully urged, does not solve the problem of the small dealer to whom an assured future supply is a matter of vital importance. In his business, survival may often depend on an assured future supply, especially in times of scarcity.

Of course there was competition with Standard for the patronage of the dealers. This fact was demonstrated. (See Brief of Appellants, pp. 87 to 89.) A dealer was free to contract with Standard, or any one of a large number of other suppliers. A dealer was free to select the kind of Standard contract he desired.

But having once made up his mind to contract with Standard, rather than some other supplier, and desiring a requirements contract in order to be assured of a future supply, how would it be legally possible for the dealer to say to Standard, "I will contract to buy all my requirements of gasoline from you over a period of six months. Of course you agree to sell me that gallonage. However, if I find I want to purchase any of my requirements from one of your competitors, I shall be free to do so." Such an arrangement would be no contract at all. A contract to buy and sell, not only obligates the seller to sell, but obligates the buyer to purchase. Otherwise there is no enforceable contract. If, as is the case with a great many dealers, a requirements contract is desired by the dealer to guarantee him an assured future supply, the dealer must agree to buy his requirements from the contract supplier if he is to be in a position to legally enforce an obligation

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee.

PETITION FOR REHEARING.

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Appellants, Standard Oil Company of California and Standard Stations, Inc., respectfully petition for a rehearing upon the grounds hereinafter stated.

Appellants believe that there are errors in the Court's opinion; that these errors will inevitably have disastrous repercussions; and that the public interest involved, in addition to the hardship to appellants and numerous service station dealers, should prompt the granting of a rehearing.

The issue is stated in the opinion at the outset as follows:

> "The issue before us, therefore, is whether the requirement of showing that the effect of the agreements 'may be to substantially lessen competition' may be met simply by proof that a substantial portion of commerce is affected or whether it must also be demonstrated that competitive activity has actually diminished or probably will diminish." (p. 6)

The Court adopts the first alternative.

The Court's conclusion that Standard's contracts violate Section 3 of the Clayton Act seems to be based upon the fear that should the government be required to prove (as the statute plainly requires) that the effect of the contracts may be to substantially lessen competition, this would be a matter presenting "serious difficulties" (p. 15) and would require a "standard of proof . . . . . most ill-suited for ascertainment by courts" (p. 16). The Court states that to require the government to show that competition might be lessened would be to "stultify the force of Congress' declaration that requirements contracts are to be prohibited wherever their effect 'may be' to substantially lessen competition" (p. 20).

I.

In Interpreting Section 3 of the Clayton Act,[1] the Court Has Misapprehended the Congressional History of That Section.

To support its interpretation of Section 3 the Court adverts to the Congressional history of that section.

The Court's opinion states that the qualifying language in Section 3 "was added only after a flat prohibition of tying clauses and requirements contracts had passed both Houses of Congress" (p. 19).[2] It is respectfully urged that the Court is misinformed.[3]

Section 4 of the original Clayton bill as it passed the House was much like present Section 3 of the Clayton Act, except that it did not contain the qualifying clause "where the effect of such . . . contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce," and except that it contained a criminal

---

[1]Section 3. "It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce." (38 Stat. 731; 15 U. S. C. 14.)

[2]Italics throughout this petition have been supplied.

[3]We do not mean misinformed by counsel. Neither counsel for the government nor counsel for appellants either in their briefs or in oral argument mentioned the Congressional history of this section.

penalty. (See Senate Report No. 698, 63d Cong. 2d Session, p. 56.)

When this Clayton bill reached the Senate it went to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. This committee reported the bill to the Senate with certain changes, i. e., the insertion of the words "or contract for sale," the insertion of the words "whether patented or unpatented," and the elimination of the criminal penalty. (See Senate Report No. 698, 63d Cong. 2d Session, p. 56.)

On the floor of the Senate this section was entirely eliminated from the bill (see Vol. 51, Part 14, Cong. Rec., pp. 13849, 14223, 14272, 14273) and the Senate adopted a substitute section, drawn by Senator Walsh, applicable only to patented articles and prohibiting the use of tying clauses in connection with patented articles upon criminal penalties, the criminal penalty provision being added by an amendment offered by Senator Reed (see Vol. 51, Part 14, Cong. Rec., pp. 14273, 14274, 14275, 14276 and the remarks of Senator Reed in Vol. 51, Part 16, Cong. Rec., p. 15818). This amendment was offered to meet the decision of this Court in Henry v. A. B. Dick Company, 224 U. S. 1[4] (see Vol. 51, Part 16, Cong. Rec., p. 15818; also Henderson, "The Federal Trade Commission," pp. 30 and 31).

Thus, up to the time that the bill went to the Conference Committee of both Houses, the House had approved a section similar to present Section 3 of the Clayton Act, except that it omitted the qualifying clause and contained

[4]This decision had upheld the validity of a tying clause whereby a manufacturer of a patented mimeograph machine had required licensees to use with such machine only such stencil paper, ink, and other supplies as were purchased from such manufacturer.

a criminal penalty, but the Senate had approved a different section applicable only to patented articles and containing a criminal penalty.

The Conference report (see Senate Document No. 585, 63d Cong. 2d Session, p. 4) inserted for the first time the qualifying clause, eliminated the criminal penalty, and the section then went to both Houses of Congress and was passed in the form in which Section 3 now appears in the Act.

The Court's opinion further states that the "conferees responsible for adding that language [i. e., the qualifying clause] were at pains, in answering protestations that the qualifying clause seriously weakened the section, to disclaim any intention seriously to augment the burden of proof to be sustained in establishing violation of it" (p. 19).

It is respectfully urged that a re-examination of the discussion in Congress of this section after it came from the Conference Committee will not support this conclusion. The debate in the Senate was extensive. (See Vol. 51, Part 16, Cong. Rec., p. 15818, et seq.) The proceedings in the House were not so lengthy. (See Vol. 51, Part 16, Cong. Rec., p. 16317.) It appears that the primary purpose of this particular section of the bill was to denounce "tying contracts in general. This is the device by which a manufacturer controlling a patented or staple article compels all who purchase or lease it to agree to purchase other goods or supplies from the seller, thus aiding him in restraining the trade of rivals and enabling him to create a monopoly." (Remarks of Senator Reed, Vol. 51, Part 16, Cong. Rec., p. 15819.) The reasons for the addition of the qualifying clause in the Conference Committee were explained by Representative Floyd, who was one of the managers in the Conference Committee on the part of the House. From his explanation it appears that this qualifying clause was put in Sections 2 and 3 because it had been previously approved by both the House and the Senate in Section 7, and that this language originated from the discussion in the opinion of this Court in the Addyston case (175 U. S. 211).[5]

It is earnestly submitted that the interpretation of Section 3 now announced by this Court was not within the contemplation of those who enacted this measure, and that this will be shown by a re-examination of the proceedings of Congress after the bill left the Conference Committee. Obviously the limits imposed upon a petition for rehearing preclude any such attempt at re-examination in this petition.

[5]Representative Floyd said:

"We have been criticized for injecting or inserting certain words into sections 2 and 3 in conference. Where did those mysterious words 'substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly' originate? They were incorporated in section 8, the holding-company provision of the bill, as it passed this House. They passed muster in the Senate of the United States and were retained in the holding-company provision as it passed the Senate and were retained in conference. In modifying and changing sections 2 and 3, so as to make the acts prohibited therein unlawful, without making them penal, it became necessary to change the wording of each, in other respects. We took the language that had been already approved by both the House and the Senate in another section, the one relating to holding companies, and applied it to sections 2 and 3, the latter corresponding to our section 4, so that the three sections, namely, sections 2, 3, and 7 of the conference report, are in harmony now, all dealing with the question of contracts, the same principle being applied to each one of them.

"The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Volstead] criticizes this language and criticizes these provisions, claiming that we are in some way interfering with the operations of the Sherman anti-trust law; at least he fears we are. Not at all. That

II.

The Court's Interpretation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act Gives No Efficacy to the Words "Lessen Competition." It Interprets the Section as if Congress, Instead of Saying "Where the Effect of Such . . . Contract . . . May Be to Substantially Lessen Competition," Had Used the Words "Where Such Contract Affects a Substantial Part of Commerce."

It is respectfully urged that Section 3 does not say that the contracts are invalid if they "affect" a substantial portion of commerce. It says "where the effect of such . . . contract or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition . . ." The word "substantially" is used in the section to modify language did not originate with our committee. That language originated from a discussion in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. against United States. The court, in discussing this very question of contracts, uses this language. I quote:

"'But it has never been, and in our opinion ought not to be, held that the word included the right of an individual to enter into private contracts upon all subjects, no matter what their nature and wholly irrespective, among other things, of the fact that they would, if performed, result in the regulation of interstate commerce and in the violation of an act of Congress upon that subject. The provision in the Constitution does not, as we believe, exclude Congress from legislating with regard to contracts of the above nature while in the exercise of its constitutional right to regulate commerce among the States. On the contrary, we think the provision regarding the liberty of the citizen is, to some extent, limited by the commerce clause of the Constitution, and that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce comprises the right to enact a law prohibiting the citizen from entering into those private contracts which directly and substantially, and not merely indirectly, remotely, incidentally, and collaterally, regulate to a greater or less degree commerce among the States.'" (Vol. 51, Part 10, Cong. Rec., pp. 16317, 16318.)

the important words "lessen competition." The Court's opinion gives no scope or weight to these words.

Yet Congress must have intended these words to have some efficacy. The reasonable conclusion is that Congress by these words intended that there must be a factual inquiry to determine whether the contracts might have this prohibited "effect."

Congress in enacting this "effect" clause of Section 3, did not intend that a defendant should be denied all right to offer proof to show what the "effect" of the contract in question might be. If this had been the intent of Congress, it could easily have been expressed—not by the words which were used—but by saying: "where such contract affects a substantial portion of commerce."

The Court's interpretation of Section 3 alters the plain import of the "effect" clause of the section. It substitutes for the words "where the effect of such . . . contract . . . may be to substantially lessen competition," the words (not found in the section) "where such contract affects a substantial portion of commerce."

III.

The Court in Applying Its Interpretation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act Indulges in Inferences Adverse to Standard, but Denies Standard the Right to Rebut Such Inferences.

The opinion recognizes that there has been no improvement in Standard's competitive position during the time it has used requirements contracts; that Standard is beset by the most vigorous kind of competition; that the duration of Standard's contracts is not excessive; and that Standard does not dominate the market (p. 15).

Yet the Court then proceeds to draw certain inferences adverse to Standard's position. Thus the Court says that "it is possible that" Standard's "position would have deteriorated but for the adoption" of the contracts (p. 15). Again it says that "it would not be farfetched to infer that their effect has been to enable the established suppliers individually to maintain their own standing and at the same time . . . to prevent a late arrival from wresting away more than an insignificant portion of the market" (p. 16).

But surely, if inference is to be drawn upon for the purpose of showing that the contracts had the prohibited effect, Standard should have been permitted to rebut such inference. Yet here the District Court (A) excluded evidence which would have rebutted such inference,[6] and

---

[6]The District Court said that it would sustain objections to any attempt by Standard to show what would be the effect on competition of the elimination of the requirements contracts generally or what change would occur in the over-all competitive picture through the elimination of such contracts. (See Brief of Appellants, pp. 43 to 47.)

(B) wholly disregarded evidence which was introduced for the purpose of showing the "effect" of the contracts. The District Court dealt with Standard's operations in a vacuum, despite evidence received and evidence offered but excluded.

To raise inferences against Standard and then to deny Standard the right to rebut such inferences is to deny a litigant the very essentials of justice.

If, as pointed out by Representative Floyd, the Addyston case was responsible for the use of the words "where the effect . . . may be to substantially lessen competition . . . ," then it is perfectly clear that Congress did not intend to bar proof showing what the "effect" might be. Thus, in the Addyston case (175 U. S. 211) it was said (p. 245):

> "It is the effect of the combination in limiting and restricting the right of each of the members to transact business in the ordinary way, as well as its effect upon the volume or extent of the dealing in the commodity, that is regarded. All the facts and circumstances are, however, to be considered in order to determine the fundamental question—whether the necessary effect of the combination is to restrain interstate commerce."

The reason for denying Standard the right to rebut the inferences raised against its contracts seems to be that to do so would be to require a "standard of proof . . . most ill-suited for ascertainment by courts" (p. 16). Yet is this not a task which the Courts have coped with successfully over many years and in many cases under the Sherman Act? Surely a trial court is no more ill equipped to determine whether contracts may have the effect of substantially lessening competition than it is to determine whether business practices, often detailed and complex, are in restraint of trade under the Sherman Act's rule of reason.

IV.

The Court's Interpretation of Section 3 of the Clayton Act Disregards the Court's Previous Decisions Interpreting Identical Language ("Substantially Lessen Competition") Found in Sections 2(a) and 7 of the Clayton Act.

It is respectfully urged that the Court's interpretation of the "effect" clause in Section 3 of the Clayton Act is in conflict with the interpretation given by the Court to identical language found in Sections 2(a) and 7 of the Clayton Act.[7]

In Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, dealing with Section 2(a), it was apparently recognized that there must be some factual showing that the alleged discriminatory discounts might substantially lessen competition.

In International Shoe Co. v. Commission, 280 U. S. 291, dealing with Section 7, the Court expressly approved Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 282 Fed. 81, 87, which had held that a factual showing was necessary in order to show substantial lessening of competition.

What is the effect of the Court's opinion herein upon a case involving either Section 2(a) or 7 of the Clayton Act (where identical statutory language is used)? Suppose the same rule here laid down is applied to one who "directly or indirectly" makes a different price to different

---

[7]Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 730 as amended by 49 Stat. 1526; 15 U. S. C. sec. 13) makes price discriminations under certain conditions unlawful "where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly Section 7 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 731; 15 U. S. C. sec. 18) forbids certain stock acquisitions where the effect "may be to substantially lessen competition . . . or tend to create a monopoly of the contract supplier to sell him his requirements. The dealer cannot have a requirements contract which will leave it optional with the dealer to buy from some third party and still have an enforceable obligation against the contract supplier.

So the Court's remark that "if . . . it is important to retail dealers to assure the supply of their requirements by obtaining the commitment of a single supplier to fulfill them, competition . . . . should enable them to insist upon such an arrangement without binding them to refrain from looking elsewhere," presents nothing in the way of a legally practicable solution. How can the dealers legally insist upon "such an arrangement" (i. e., requirements contracts) and still retain the right of "looking elsewhere"? The Court strikes down a practice fraught with vital benefits to the small dealers, and offers them nothing which will preserve such benefits.
